LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, November 22, 1960, being the first day of the Second Session of the Twenty-sixth Parliament of the Province of Ontario for the despatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable J. Keiller Mackay, Lieutenant-Governor of the province.

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met,

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, having entered the House and, being seated upon the Throne, was then pleased to open the Session with the following gracious speech.

Hon. J. Keiller Mackay (Lieutenant-Governor): Mr. Speaker and members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

It is a pleasure to welcome you to this Second Session of the 26th Parliament of Ontario. Each year, with the growth in our population and the extension of services, your duties and responsibilities have become heavier. This year, for the first time in the recent history of the Province, the Legislature is commencing its Session in the autumn. There will then be a recess from mid-December until after the beginning of the New Year when the House will resume its sittings. It is hoped that this procedure will expedite the business of the House as well as ensure for it the careful consideration that it requires.

With the changes we are experiencing in our economic climate the Government's policy of expansion and development has assumed new importance. At this Session expansion and development must be our watchwords. As a great producing Province in manufactured, agricultural and other primary products our goal must be expanding markets. The responsibility for achieving that goal is not the exclusive responsibility of any one sector of our economy, but rather it demands the concerted action of all levels of government, labour and industry, and in fact of all Canadians. Faced with growing competition in a changing world we must re-assess our position and develop our opportunities.

At the same time it is wise to keep matters in perspective. For the past fifteen years we have enjoyed extraordinary prosperity, with a rate of industrial expansion unprecedented in this country and envied throughout the world. This year, while there has been an ebb in some lines of activity, there has been marked expansion in others. As a result there have been more people employed in the Province than ever before and the total income of these workers is greater than ever before. Capital investment has been maintained at a near record level while the value of output of our mining, forestry and consumer goods industries and the activities of our service industries have achieved the highest level in our history.

Although there has been an increase of 50,000 jobs this year—which corresponds to the average increase of recent years—the expansion of our industry, particularly secondary industry, has not kept pace with the growth of our work force. This situation is largely attributable to the increased competitiveness of the world economy. We are now in a buyers' market. Many countries in both Europe and Asia have modern, highly efficient equipment which matches our own and they have substantially lower labour costs, together with a structure of exchange rates, controls and export arrangements dedicated to strengthening their industries and expanding their sales abroad. Consequently, this is not a time for complacency. We are operating in a world which is becoming increasingly competitive. For a Province that lives on trade there can be only one solution: we must increase the sale of our goods at home and abroad. In order to do this we must be able to compete with the producers in other lands.

It must be recognized that while public works at the federal, provincial and municipal levels are of high importance, they do not in themselves provide the fundamental answers to the problems and challenges of today. The emphasis today must be on the expansion of our secondary industries—and therefore our objective must be to adopt those long term solutions that will maintain our economy on a sound, competitive footing with the producers in other lands. The ability of our manufacturers to sell their goods at home and abroad in the face of increasing competition is essential to the balanced development of the Province and the Nation. It is recognized that many of the most important matters relating to the expansion of trade and commerce lie within the competence of the Federal Government. Nevertheless, the Province is vitally concerned. The situation is one that requires a concerted effort on the part of all levels of government as well as of labour and management.

This means we must be adaptable, imaginative and enterprising. The maintenance of a provincial and national economy that fosters economic well-being and creates opportunities for interesting and rewarding employment that will absorb our growing work force is of fundamental importance. To this end the Government will submit for your consideration and approval a many-sided programme. This will consist in part of the following:

1. It is proposed to augment and strengthen The Department of Economics in order that it may more fully develop its methods and techniques of analysis and extend its studies of the Ontario economy with a view to supplying economic services for all departments of the Government and assisting them to cultivate and enlarge the opportunities for the Province's expansion, and development. Special studies will be made of various phases of our relations with the United States with particular reference to ways of reducing the imbalance in our commodity trade and tourist travel accounts as well as of the methods employed in other countries of promoting secondary industry.

2. It is proposed to reconstruct from our Department of Planning and Development a new Department of Commerce and Development. One of the purposes of the reorganization will be to provide more direct collaboration with Federal departments with a view to stimulating business, increasing production, and extending trade. While control over international trade arrangements, import duties and valuations, exchange rates and the whole field of banking and credit is under our Constitution vested in the Federal Government, nevertheless Ontario will co-operate fully in helping create the common front that is necessary to meet the challenges and take advantage of the opportunities of this changing world.

3. As part of the reorganization, a Products Research Division will be set up to complement the Government's present commercial and industrial development activities. This new Division's main function will be to stimulate production and employment in existing manufacturing industries of Ontario and to increase the processing of raw materials in Ontario. New products will be sought out and defined which can be manufactured by Ontario companies. A primary objective is to find replacements for present importations. Additional services will also be provided to the seven Development Associations operating in Ontario. All this work will be co-ordinated with that of the Ontario Research Foundation. Provision will be made for the expansion of this Foundation in order that it may play a fuller role in the development of manufacturing in Ontario.

4. Also under way is the formation of a Market Development Branch within The Department of Agriculture, with the task of exploring additional outlets for Ontario farm products and promoting marketing. A Committee representative of various branches of the agricultural industry and The Department of Agriculture has already visited the United Kingdom and has made encouraging progress in the marketing of Ontario farm products. The Government proposes to hold discussions with national and other farm marketing agencies with a view to co-ordination of effort. You will be asked to approve a review of the services provided by The Community Centres Act in order to bring them into line with the wide range of conditions presently existing in Ontario communities.

5. There will be placed before you a comprehensive programme of planned public projects and job-creating winter works. The extension of our capital stock through the endeavours of the Province and its municipalities and various boards and commissions not only provides indispensable services without which industry could not expand nor communities grow but also operates as a stabilizing agent in the economy. The effects of what we are now doing are apparent across the face of the Province in the form of the creation of new physical assets and the employment on essential projects of a large segment of our labour force. This capital programme will be expanded.

The Department of Public Works will undertake a large construction programme based on long range planning to meet the essential needs of our people. This will include schools for the deaf and for retarded children, hospitals, administrative offices and departmental facilities, reform institutions and training schools, and conservation projects—all of which are necessary to meet Ontario's growth requirements. Wherever possible, action is being taken to ensure that the contractor will maintain work schedules through the winter months to alleviate seasonal unemployment.

Plans for the construction of additional flood control and water conservation projects have been advanced. Major provincially-approved schemes on the Upper Thames, the Ausable, the Moira, and on the water courses in the Metropolitan Toronto region involve a capital cost of $47.2 million.

From its inception in 1956, the Ontario Water Resources Commission has concluded agreements with various municipalities for 130 water works and sewage disposal projects at an estimated cost of $52 million. Rapid progress has been made in the construction of these projects and in the Commission's industrial water treatment work. Major sewage plants have been opened in Kitchener, Waterloo, Brantford, North Bay, Streetsville, Trenton, Port Arthur, and other centres. The Commission is continuously engaged in negotiating agreements for other projects. You will be asked to vote funds to continue this programme of abating water pollution and increasing the effective use of Ontario's fresh water supplies. Immediate steps will be taken to facilitate the participation of municipalities in the Federal Government's plan to combat pollution which has become a by-product of our growing industrialization and urbanization and is in many ways a national problem.

The Government is vitally aware of the need to accommodate the growing number of motor vehicles, including those of tourists, which are using our highways. The improvement of old highways, the construction of new highways, bridges and skyways, and the opening of vast areas of Northern Ontario are all part of creating an environment conducive to expansion. You will therefore be asked to authorize a volume of work exceeding that of the extensive programmes of the previous two years. Rapid progress in highway construction is evidenced on all sides. The Lake Superior Route of the Trans-Canada Highway is now being supplemented by the St. Mary's River Skyway at Sault Ste. Marie, which is planned for completion in 1962. It is planned at the same time to complete the new link between the Lake Superior and Northern Routes of the Trans-Canada Highway by way of the completely new highway under construction from Wawa and Chapleau to Foley, Timmins and the Northern Route. Highway 401, a trans-Ontario four-lane highway, is being pushed forward to completion ahead of schedule. The new international bridge at Queenston which improves our connections with the American highway system and the Skyway at Homer over the Welland Canal are under way. Highway 400 is being pushed through to serve the large recreational areas of the north. The Roads to Resources programme is also being accelerated in order to open to development new areas in our great northland.

The winter works programme projected in conjunction with Federal and municipal governments is being expanded to meet this winter's conditions. Full details will be presented to you. By arrangements with the Federal Government the starting date this year has been advanced a month and a half, from December 1 to October 15, in order to give the municipalities more opportunity to prepare their projects. The proposed programme has been extended to include not only roads, municipal parks, playgrounds and picnic sites, but also works which will materially increase the employment of building tradesmen and workers engaged in the production and handling of supplies.

6. You will be asked to authorize the implementation of a new approach to the provision of public low-rental housing and the expenditure of funds for financing it. Plans in the field of urban redevelopment will be placed before you. Authority will be requested to carry out additional land assembly projects to provide low-cost service lots for prospective home owners. You will also be invited to give attention to the provision of additional accommodation for elderly persons.

7. The Department of Lands and Forests will extend its forest management programme to ensure future supplies of forest products. Additional steps will be taken to improve natural generation. The reforestation of Crown lands will this year include the planting of more than 42 million trees. Measures are being adopted to improve and extend the propagation of fish and wildlife. Reports will be submitted to you of the encouraging progress made by the Great Lakes Commission relative to lamprey control in Lake Superior.

8. The expansion of Ontario's Provincial parks system has been spectacular. In addition to 17 new Provincial parks made available to the public this year, nearly 20 are in the course of development and other potential park areas are under study. There are now 62 Provincial parks in operation, 45 conservation areas containing parks that are in use, as well as the 13 parks in the Niagara Parks Commission and the St. Lawrence Development Commission. This year over 15 million visits will be made to our Provincial parks system, including nearly 750,000 campers who use the park facilities for considerable periods of time. The number of roadside camps and picnic areas will be increased.

9. Plans will be submitted to maintain Ontario's high level of mineral production. The maps compiled from the information gathered in the airborne magnetometer survey carried out last year have been released in groups as quickly as they can be prepared. Negotiations are being carried out to have similar surveys conducted throughout the whole Province. All of this will stimulate the development of mineral resources.

10. In the field of energy resources, additional progress will be made. You will have an opportunity to review the work of the Ontario Energy Board with respect to natural gas rate hearings and other matters. Studies are being made on natural gas storage, and a further review of safety regulations is in progress. The first stage of a programme of licensing and training those who install gas appliances has been implemented. Work is in progress which will lead to the adoption of a Provincial heating code. A report will be given as to off-shore drilling for oil and gas in the Great Lakes—a matter which has been under study by the Committee on Oil and Gas Resources. The Nuclear Power Demonstration Plant (N.P.D. 2) will begin producing power in 1961. Work on the 200,000 kilowatt Douglas Point Nuclear Power Station (CANDU) has started. Reports will be made to you on developments in the fields of atomic energy, isotopes and other related matters.

11. Further advances will be made in the field of education. It is estimated that we shall have to provide accommodation in our elementary schools for nearly half a million additional children by 1966, at which time our school enrolment will be approximately three times what it was in 1945. This immense increase in enrolment will have its effect upon secondary and university accommodation. This underscores the formidable problem which the Province will face in education during the coming years. Curricula are constantly being reviewed and revised for use in our schools, with science courses receiving a full measure of attention. It is planned to introduce new science courses in Grades 7 to 10. Progress has been made in increasing the number of teachers required by the rapid increase in the number of classrooms in elementary and secondary schools. The summer courses for secondary school teachers conducted at London and Kingston for the first time this year have met with great success. Winter courses in centres other than Toronto are now being considered. Plans are proceeding for a second School for the Deaf at Milton.

You will be asked to approve appropriations to provide scholarships, bursaries and loans to students. The programme of Ontario Scholarships, awarded to students achieving 80 per cent or higher on eight papers in Grade 13, has proved very successful. You will be asked to vote funds to ensure that no student who has the talent and ambition to attend university is deprived of the opportunity through lack of financial means. The problem of financing the cost of our universities, made acute by the mounting tide of enrolment, will be submitted to you for your attention and study. To deal with the increasing responsibilities involved in co-ordinating the Province's assistance to universities, the University Affairs Committee will be reorganized and representatives appointed from outside the Government.

12. The mental health programme will be expanded. Before the close of this present Session, the new hospital school established at Cedar Springs will be completed and ready for occupancy. The former sanatorium at Gravenhurst, purchased for The Department of Health, is fully occupied by 300 patients transferred from the Ontario Hospital, Orillia, in order that a great programme of reconstruction may be undertaken there. The second of the buildings at Byron will soon be occupied by the London Children's Psychiatric Hospital to allow for further expansion of the programme there. Renovation and remodelling of buildings at the Royal Ottawa Sanatorium is now going on in preparation for the establishment there of an out-patient unit and short-stay active treatment in-patient service for the City of Ottawa. This is an entirely new undertaking, the first of its kind in Ontario. Construction of the first of three infirmary and community mental hospitals is now under way at Goderich. Two others will be begun in 1961 at Owen Sound and at Palmerston. Legislation will be proposed for the setting up of a Mental Health Research and Special Treatment Foundation, with a view to stimulating and encouraging greater community participation. In order to assist in meeting the nursing problem in our hospitals, the number of nursing assistants will be increased. A report on the operations of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, as well as on trends in costs, will be referred to the Legislative Committee on Health and Welfare for review and consideration. You will be requested to approve additional funds to meet its compelling needs.

13. Additional funds will be paid to the municipalities, school boards and other local agencies to assist them in providing new facilities and services. Staff additions are being made to The Department of Municipal Affairs, particularly in the legal and finance divisions, and shortly its new quarters will be fully occupied and the Department will be functioning from one building. Far-reaching policies in relation to the municipalities, the school boards and subsidies for local roads and thoroughfares will be presented to you.

14. You will be asked to consider a further modernization of our programme of reform institutions. Construction is under way, or will be very shortly, for a new training school for girls and, as well, a new training school for boys. A large-scale programme of rehabilitation and improvement will be conducted in a number of the present institutions, and a new institution will be erected at Elliot Lake. You will be asked to consider plans to establish a pre-release centre for juvenile boys, the first of its kind in Canada.

15. In recognition of the services rendered by Tourist Associations, matching grants will be made to approved regional tourist organizations to encourage the more effective development and promotion of Ontario's tourist industry.

The foregoing, representing a comprehensive approach aimed at the advancement of the Ontario economy, involves a huge programme which will require careful study and consideration. But in addition, there are other parts of our programme designed to reinforce the social fabric of our economy and contribute to its effective operation. Among these, of course, is welfare. You will be asked to authorize homemakers' and nurses' services for an increasing number of municipalities. The construction of suitable modern homes for the aged will be continued. A major study is under way dealing with the specialized needs of children who require care in an institutional setting. A review of the policies of Children's Aid Societies is also being undertaken so that the best of current trends and knowledge in child welfare may be brought to bear on the treatment of under-privileged children. Under enactments passed last year, it is anticipated that the number of Indian bands that are now administering relief assistance to their community members will be increased to twenty-two. You will be invited to review the provisions for those who qualify for direct relief and also to vote the funds required.

Funds will also be required for the new Rehabilitation Division set up in The Department of Health to deal with the many families coming to Canada as special refugee cases and to provide other services and facilities for physically and mentally ill and disabled persons in the Province.

Co-incidental with the development of Provincial highways and municipal thoroughfares, traffic safety activities will be increased. Driver instruction as an extra-curricular activity in secondary schools is receiving wide support. Twenty-one driver examination centres have now been established in the Province and this programme will be expanded.

Apprenticeship courses under the supervision of The Department of Labour are being expanded.

The Department of the Provincial Secretary will be reorganized as The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship.

During the coming year the Ontario Anti-Discrimination Commission will continue to undertake an active educational programme reaching into communities in all parts of the Province. This work, which has elicited a most heartening response from our people, involves the preparation of literature and educational materials and the co-operation of churches, schools and local organizations of all kinds. The objective will be to continue to acquaint our people with the aims of the Province's Human Rights legislation and to win adherence to the principle that every person is free and equal in dignity and rights regardless of race, creed or colour. The Legislature will have full opportunity to discuss these matters.

The Department of the Attorney-General has been undertaking an intensive study with a view to placing into operation a new system of dealing with repeaters before the Courts for drunkenness, recognizing that this weakness is more deserving of treatment and cure than penal service. Arrangements are being made with certain Magistrates' Courts and appropriate legislation will be introduced. This work is being carried out in collaboration with the Ontario Alcoholism Research Foundation, various Departments of Government including Health, Welfare and Reform Institutions, the Magistrates' Courts, and a representative committee of citizens.

The several Select Committees which have been carrying on their work since last Session are still engaged in their very important assignments. If final reports from these Committees are not available, interim reports, at least in some cases, will be.

The special technical committee studying portable pensions will be making a report during this Session of the Legislature. It is proposed to refer this report to a committee of the Legislature.

It is also anticipated that the technical committee studying the problem of public lands and mineral resources thereon will report and thus enable the Legislature to study its report and recommendations.

During recent months, discussions of far-reaching importance have been held with the Government of Canada and the other provinces in seeking new arrangements with which to replace the existing tax-sharing arrangements following their expiry on March 31, 1962. Two sessions of the plenary Federal-Provincial Fiscal Conference have been convened, one in July and the other in October, and legislative action will be needed arising from the outcome of these important meetings.

The provinces are constitutionally entitled to an equal share of the major fields of direct taxation. My Government has pressed, and will continue to press, for the just recognition of Ontario's rights and responsibilities. Our financial problems in the fields of these direct taxes in question stem from the concentration in the Federal Government of powers under wartime conditions and the unsound conception of centralization which emerged from the Conference of 1945. There are very agreeable indications that the fundamentals of our federal state will be recognized. The fullest opportunity will be given to discuss these very important matters.

Ontario has also been engaged in discussions with the Government of Canada and the other provinces in seeking a mutually acceptable procedure for amending the Canadian Constitution solely in Canada. The Committee of Attorneys-General, which was set up after the July session of the plenary Federal-Provincial Conference, has made excellent progress. The Government is confident that further discussions will lead to agreement on the amending procedure and thus make possible the domiciling in Canada of the power to amend our own Constitution.

Much new legislation will be introduced. Among the proposed Acts to be amended are the following: The Absentees Act, The Administration of Justice Expenses Act, The Coroners Act, The Credit Unions Act, The Evidence Act, The Fire Marshals Act, The Judicature Act, The Juvenile and Family Courts Act, The Law Society Act, The Lightning Rods Act, The Liquor Control Act, The Mortgage Brokers Registration Act, The Mortgages Act, The Police Act, The Public Libraries Act, The Public Schools Act, The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act,

The Schools Administration Act, The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act, The Separate Schools Act, The Summary Convictions Act, The Trustee Act and The Wages Act. A new Act—The Hypnosis Act 1960-61—will be introduced and The Bailiffs Act will be completely revised.

Upgrading and improvements in Civil Service categories and classifications have been carried out. The Civil Service has given fine service which is its tradition and for which the people of this Province are grateful.

The Public Accounts, the Treasurer's Budget Statement and the estimates of the various departments will be presented to the Legislature for consideration and approval. These presentations will enable you to assess the magnitude of Ontario's financial requirements as well as those of the municipalities—to which over 45 per cent of the Province's revenue resources are committed.

I pray that Divine Providence may guide your deliberations.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was then pleased to retire from the chamber.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that to prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy of His Honour's speech, which I will now read.

(Reading dispensed with.)

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE REGULATIONS REVISIONS ACT, 1959

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves, seconded by Hon. C. Daley, first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Regulations Revision Act, 1959."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that I have received during the recess of the House, notification of vacancies which have occurred in the membership of the House by reason of the death of George G. Johnston, member of the electoral district of Simcoe Centre and the death of A. Robert Herbert, member of the electoral district of Temiskaming.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the last order and before moving the adjournment of the House, may I refer briefly to the passing of the two members mentioned who will be very greatly missed at this time.

George Graham Johnston was first elected to the assembly in 1943. As his father and mother before him, he lived his lifetime in the historic county of Simcoe, the county which I, on occasions, like to refer to as the crossroads of history. Mr. Johnston had played his part in public affairs, municipal, school board, and businesses of all kinds since his early manhood. He was one of the trusted advisors of his community.

In 1943 he was elected to this Legislature as the member for Simcoe Centre. I should like to pay tribute to the man as we knew him here. A quiet, self-effacing individual who invariably stayed out of prominence but who possessed a very great influence indeed. George Johnston spoke well of his fellow man and fellow members and at the same time he was well thought of.

He was a close student of public affairs. His influence was invariably good and his influence, as I say, was very great. Often I have consulted him and I can speak from experience. His broad human interest and his interest in all citizens was very marked. Our recognition of our fine Indian citizens, and I may say one of the chieftains from his own area is here today, is due in no small measure to him.

His passing, sir, has indeed left a gap which can only be partially filled by the memories and recollections of this very fine personality.

Now sir, on the other hand, we also mourn the passing of a young man, Alexander Robert Herbert, only 46 years of age, a native and a resident of our northland. For 25 years he served his country in many places, through the Algonquin Regiment, a famous unit, both in active service or on active service conditions in France, Belgium and Holland.

He was first elected to this Legislature as the member for Temiskaming 9 years ago on this very day, sir, on November 22, 1951. Here he gave the same fine service that was typical of him and in addition served as the chairman of the Ontario Northland Railway. This young man with his fine record and his fine future, like the old counsel and the veteran citizen to whom I have referred, we can ill afford to lose and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all of the hon. members of the House will join in these words of sympathy which we extend, sir, to the families of both of these public servants.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would take this opportunity to join the hon. Prime Minister, firstly in a tribute to two deceased members of our Legislature and in a word of sympathy to the surviving members of the family.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has said that these men were characterized in their different persons, one an older man, a gentleman of, I believe, 78 years of age, who, in the words of the hon. Prime Minister was a very quiet man. And that is true, he was. His participation in public debate in this Legislature was rather limited, but, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you from personal experience particularly in the recent by-election that his participation in his own riding was very active. He served his community and his riding very well.

At a time like this there is no need to be partisan. We can be very generous and wholesome in our observations of a very distinguished gentleman and I certainly join in the tribute that the hon. Prime Minister has made to Mr. Johnston.

In respect to Mr. Herbert, the former member from Temiskaming, a younger man by far, a man in the neighbourhood of his late forties, who died suddenly and unexpectedly, here, too, I think we have an illustration not of extraordinary debating qualifications but rather the ability to serve his community and his riding well.

In each of these instances I believe these men were characterized by their devotion to the service of their respective ridings and communities.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is something that I think that I should comment on. In this Legislature, in this proud House, we have the opportunity of great service, of leadership, and I think occasionally we forget the opportunity we have—the opportunity we have to pursue human happiness for all people. An opportunity that I am sure in reality never equals the ambition or the concept that we have for that service.

These men did well in life. They deserve our respect, our tribute, and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that on behalf of all hon. members in the Opposition we are pleased to join in this tribute and in our felicitations to the surviving members of the two deceased members' families.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my words to those of the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition in paying tribute to the memory of our two late colleagues.

I think it can be said without any fear of contradiction that George Johnston was one of the most respected, indeed the most loved, members of this House. In the hallways, in the committee rooms, he was a person whom you could feel automatically was a friend. In fact, it was this rich, human relationship, which was the secret of his political success throughout so many years.

He died at a ripe, old age, but we shall miss him.

It was even more tragic, no doubt, that Mr. Herbert died, because of his much younger years. We shall miss them both and I would like to join the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition in extending our condolences to their families.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister what the order of business will be tomorrow, and may I ask him when we will have the opportunity to get to grips with this very intriguing document that has been presented this afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, of necessity, tomorrow is a day of organization, as my hon. friend knows. There are the usual motions which are required to set the mill of this House into operation. Those steps will be taken tomorrow.

Now, I would say, sir, that in coming to grips with the document which has been read to this House, that opportunity will commence on Thursday, when the movers and seconders will deal with that comprehensive document that my hon. friend has referred to. I would say to my hon. friend, also, that as he well knows, it is necessary to organize the House, because of the requirements of notice and things of that sort, so it is difficult actually to come into the full consideration of the House before about next Monday or Tuesday. Now, at that time we can come further to grips with these facts.

Mr. Speaker: It is moved by the Prime Minister that this House should now adjourn. Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4 of the clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the report of the select committee appointed on April 11, 1960, to study and inquire into matters relating to the conduct of business in the assembly.

Your committee was appointed on April 11 last with the following terms of reference:

To study and inquire into,

(a) the problems that are of concern to the government and to this assembly with a view to making recommendations for the orderly, expeditious and efficient transaction of the business of the Legislature and for the improvement and simplification of the procedures of and pertaining to the assembly, including the matter of allowances for the expenses of out-of-town members; and

(b) the matter of an alternative procedure in the House, by resolution or otherwise, for dealing with cases such as is illustrated by Bill No. 152, An Act respecting Louis Pierre Cecile, and to report its findings and recommendations to the assembly.

In accordance with the authority conferred, your committee met in the interval between sessions and made a thorough study of the specific problems referred to it as well as giving general consideration to suggestions for the improvement of the transaction of business in the Legislature.

The first matter on which the committee reached a conclusion was the one concerning special and individual exceptions to the provisions of section 9 of the Legislative Assembly Act. Section 9 prohibits members from entering into any contract with any government department, board, commission, agency, etc., except as authorized by section 10. From time to time, circumstances arise concerning members of the House, in which the House feels that an exception should be made to the prohibition in section 9, even though the case does not come within the exceptions in section 10. In the past, such special cases have been dealt with by Acts of the Legislature, for example, Bill No. 152 of 1960, respecting the hon. Louis Pierre Cecile, MPP, Bill No. 41 of 1957, respecting Gordon William Innes, MPP. Your committee was unanimous that a simple resolution of the House should be substituted for the Act formerly considered necessary. For this purpose, the committee recommends the amendment to section 9 in recommendation No. 1 of this report.

Your committee proposes that rule 2 be amended to provide that the House meet at 10.30 a.m. on Fridays and adjourn at 1.00 p.m. Also that rule 3 be amended to provide that evening sittings automatically adjourn at 10.30 p.m. and that no evening sittings be held on Wednesday or Friday except in case of emergency. The proposed amendments to rules 2 and 3 are contained in recommendation Nos. 2 and 3.

The allocation of specified times during the session for the consideration of private members' business was then discussed. Your committee agreed to recommend that such private members business have precedence on Mondays and Fridays immediately after third readings, in the first hour and a half after the commencement of the day's sittings. As the adoption of this proposal would require the re-drafting of rule 28, other matters governed by rule 28 were jointly considered, namely:

(1) The reduction of the procedure for bringing petitions for private bills to the House, from two days to one day.

(2) Provision for the presentation of departmental reports, reports of boards and commissions, etc., and other sessional papers as well as reports of committees, under the routine item of daily business immediately following petitions, together with the provision that such reports be presented by the responsible Minister, rather than the Provincial Secretary and that where such reports recommend legislative action, they may be taken into consideration immediately or consideration postponed to a later day. With reference to the presentation of such reports, the question having been raised as to how such reports might be put on the order paper for discussion, your committee wishes to draw to the attention of the House the fact that after any such report has been tabled it is open to any member to give notice of a resolution for the consideration thereof and such notice, being printed on the notice paper under the heading Notices of Motions, is eligible for consideration in the time allotted to private members business.

(3) The transfer of questions from the orders of the day to the daily routine and the amendment of rule 37 to provide for the tabling of the written answers to written questions under this item of the daily routine. This proposal would bring the rules into line with present-day practice, which is the same in the Parliaments of Ontario, Canada and the United Kingdom. Similar provisions to this proposed amendment have long been in effect in the standing orders of both Canada and the United Kingdom.

It was further agreed to recommend an addition to rule 37 incorporating under this daily routine, procedure with respect to oral questions before the orders of the day as enunciated by Mr. Speaker on February 15, 1960. The committee noted with interest that this procedure is identical with the procedure in the House of Commons of the United Kingdom, where such questions are referred to as private notice questions. Your committee wishes also to recommend to Mr. Speaker that this proposed rule be applied with some degree of latitude with respect to the required notice when, in his discretion, he deems it justified.

The committee also recommends an addition to rule 37 to provide for starred questions: that is, written questions for which oral answers are requested, similar to the provision for such questions in the rules of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom and the House of Commons of Canada.

The proposed amendment to rule 37 contained in the following recommendations also provides that the written answers to written questions be printed in the Hansard reports rather than in the Votes and Proceedings and Journals of the House as at the present time. This is the practice both at Ottawa and in England. The reason for the difference in the Ontario practice is that until a few years ago we had no Hansard. The result of this minor change will be that all answers to all questions, both written and oral, will appear in Hansard, rather than having oral answers in Hansard and written answers in the Journals as is presently the case.

The proposed re-draft of rule 28 is contained in recommendation No. 4 and the additions to rule 37 in recommendation No. 5.

A study was made of the procedure in the Houses of Commons of the United Kingdom and Canada on going into committee of supply. As a result the committee concluded that the present practice in the Ontario Legislature of a motion being moved for the Speaker to leave the chair each time the committee goes into supply is incorrect, and recommendation No. 6 was agreed to.

Similarly, the committee is of the opinion that a motion should not be necessary each time the House resolves itself into committee of the whole on bills, nor should the order paper show the House as going into committee on each bill separately, as it does at present. Recommendation No. 7 is therefore submitted.

Your committee considered the problem of the out-of-town members and the extra expense to which they are put especially in attending the sessions of the Legislature. After considering all factors brought to its attention, it was agreed to present the plan in recommendation No. 8.

Your committee is of the opinion that the same time limit on speeches in the House, as are in effect in the House of Commons of Canada, should be adopted by the Ontario Legislature. For this purpose, it recommends in recommendation 9 that the relevant rules of the Canadian House of Commons be added in whole to Ontario rules 14 and 96 as indicated in the recommendation. Mr. Davison declined to concur in this recommendation unless it were widened to extend the exceptions to include the leaders of other parties in the House as well as the Prime Minister and leader of the Opposition.

Your committee strongly urges that the rule prohibiting the readings of speeches in the Legislature be more vigorously enforced in the future and that the Whips take this matter up with the members of the various parties to seek their co-operation.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. That section 9 of The Legislative Assembly Act, Revised Statutes of Ontario 1950, Chapter 202, be amended by adding at the beginning thereof the words, "Except as authorized by resolution of the assembly," so that the section shall read as follows:

Except as authorized by resolution of the assembly, no person holding or enjoying, undertaking or executing, directly or indirectly, alone or with another, by himself or by the interposition of a trustee or third person, any contract or agreement with His Majesty, or with any public officer or department, with respect to the public service of Ontario, or under which any public money of Ontario is to be paid for any service, work, matter or thing, shall be eligible as a member of or sit or vote in the assembly.

2. That rule 2 of the assembly be repealed and the following substituted therefore:

2(a) The House shall meet on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays at 3.00 o'clock p.m. and on Fridays at 10.30 o'clock a.m.

(b) If at the time of meeting there be not a quorum, Mr. Speaker may take the chair and adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

3. That rule 3 be repealed and the following substituted therefore:

3(a) If at the hour of 6 o'clock p.m. the business of the day be not concluded, the Speaker shall leave the chair until 8 o'clock p.m.; provided that, except in cases of urgent necessity, no evening sittings shall be held on Wednesdays or Fridays.

(b) When the House sits in the evening, at 10.30 o'clock p.m. Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the House without question put until the next sitting day.

(c) At 1 p.m. on Fridays, Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the House without question put and, unless otherwise ordered, the House shall stand adjourned until the following Monday.

4. That clause (a) of rule 28 be repealed and the following substituted therefore:

(a) The ordinary daily routine of business of the House shall be as follows:

Presenting, reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports (reports of standing and select committees, departments, boards and commissions etc.).

Motions.

Introduction of Bills.

Questions (rule 37).

Reports of departments, boards and commissions, etc. shall be presented by the responsible Minister. If the report contains recommendations for legislative action, it may be taken into consideration immediately or reserved for later consideration.

The order of business for the consideration of the House, day by day, after the above daily routine, shall be as follows:

Monday

Third readings.

Private bills.

Notices of motions.

Public bills and orders.

Government notices of motions.	} To be entered upon after the first hour and thirty minutes.
Government orders.

Tuesday

Third readings.

Government notices of motions.

Government orders.

Notices of motions.

Government notices of motions.	} To be entered upon after the first hour and thirty minutes.
Government orders.

5. That clause (b) of rule 37 be amended by deleting the word Journals in the second line thereof and substituting the words official report of the debates and by adding at the end of the said clause (b) the words and such replies may be tabled on any day under the routine proceeding questions.

That the said rule 37 shall be further amended by adding thereto the following clauses:

(d) A member who desires an oral answer to his question shall distinguish it by an asterisk, but notice of any such question must appear at latest on the notice paper circulated two sitting days before that on which the answer is desired; provided that no member shall have more than three such questions standing in his name on the notice paper at one time.

(e) A question may be asked orally if it has been submitted to the Speaker before 12 o'clock noon and accepted by him as of an urgent character, and related either to a matter of public importance or the arrangement of business in the House. If Mr. Speaker rules that the question, although otherwise in order is not urgent, he will direct it to be presented for publication on the notice paper under clause (a) or clause (d) of this rule.

6. That when the order of the day for House in committee of supply is read Mr. Speaker do leave the chair without motion or question and the House immediately resolve itself into committee of supply.

7. That one order for House in committee on bills be shown on the order paper with all bills referred to the committee of the whole House listed under that order, so that when the order is read, Mr. Speaker may leave the chair without motion or question and the House will immediately resolve itself into a committee of the whole for the purpose of considering the bills listed, or any of them.

8. That the necessary amendments be made to The Legislative Assembly Act to provide the following:

(1) That the present mileage allowance for six trips per year, between the member's home and the city of Toronto, be increased to eight trips per year.

(2) That in lieu of the mileage allowance, any member residing outside metropolitan Toronto may elect to claim his actual out-of-pocket expenses for rooms, meals, etc., while travelling to and from, and staying in, Toronto while engaged on his duties as a member of the Legislature, up to a maximum of $500 per annum.

9. That rule 14 be amended by adding therefore the following clause:

(b) When Mr. Speaker is in the chair, no member, except the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition, or a Minister moving a government order and the member speaking in reply immediately after such Minister, or a member making a motion of no confidence in the government and a Minister replying thereto, shall speak for more than forty minutes at a time in any debate; and

That rule 96 be amended by adding thereto the following clause:

(bb) No member, except the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition, shall speak for more than thirty minutes at a time in any committee of the whole House.

A. K. Roberts, Chairman
A. J. Reaume
James A. C. Auld
Norm Davison
W. E. Sandercock
A. E. Thompson

Mr. Speaker, I assume that there is a good deal of thought digested into this short, concise report, and that there would be considerable debate on some items. I would therefore move that it be considered and that it be placed on the order paper in the normal way for that purpose.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Allan, during the pre-Christmas session of the legislative assembly, permission be made for the taking and printing of reports of debates and speeches, and, to that end, that Mr. Speaker be authorized to employ an editor of debates and speeches with necessary stenographers at such rates of compensation as may be agreed upon by him. Also, that Mr. Speaker be authorized to arrange for the printing of the reports in the amounts of 1,600 copies daily, copies of which be supplied to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, to Mr. Speaker, the president of the legislative assembly, the legislative library, to each member of the assembly, the reference libraries of the province, the press gallery, the newspapers of the provinces, approved of by Mr. Speaker, and the balance to be distributed by the clerk of the assembly, as directed by Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost moved and hon. Mr. Allan seconded, that the standing committees of the House for the present session be appointed for the following purposes: (1) On agriculture, (2) On conservation, (3) On education, (4) On energy, (5) On game and fish, (6) On government commissions, (7) On health and welfare, (8) On highways and highway safety, (9) On labour, (10) On lands and forests, (11) On legal bills, (12) On mining, (13) On municipal law, (14) On printing, (15) On private bills, (16) On privileges and elections, (17) On public accounts, (18) On standing orders, (19) On travel and publicity.

Which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as shall be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereof with powers to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is that precisely the same list we had last year?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The other motion was the same also.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Allan that a select committee of 14 hon. members be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient dispatch, lists of the hon. members to compose the standing committees ordered by the House. Such committee to be composed as follows:

Mr. Morrow, Chairman.

Messrs. Carruthers, Cowling, Edwards (Perth), Gordon, Guindon, Hall, Haskett, Lawrence, Rollins, Simonett, Thomas, Whicher and Whitney. A quorum of the said committee to consist of four members.

I may say, sir, before you put this motion, that the members were pretty well settled on the committees last year, and, I suggest to the hon. members that if they desire to be on any particular committees to notify the Whips and that will be arranged.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Allan, and I notice that this is pursuant to the report we have heard read here, though the motion didn't really have any bearing on the report or the recommendation of the report but rather the experience of last year, that this House meet at 10.30 a.m. on Friday next, and that rule No. 2 of the assembly be suspended so far as it may apply to this motion.

Now that just applies to this coming Friday. We can make arrangements for the following Fridays, but it will meet the situation this Friday if it is satisfactory.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Wintermeyer, that Mr. Johnston, hon. member for the electoral district of Carlton, be appointed as chairman of the committee of the whole House for the present session.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Before you put that motion through, I am sure the hon. leader of the Opposition and perhaps some of the other hon. members would want to say something. This is part of the organization of the House. The order of the assembly has varied somewhat over the years. In certain periods of our history it has been decided by the House to alter the chairmanship every year, except for a period of time when the chairmanship remained in one member for a number of years. As a matter of fact, I think that extended back into some of the administrations before this one. For some years back now we have alternated from year to year.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I move you do now leave the chair, and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carlton): Hon. members of this House. I do feel very highly honoured indeed to be placed in the position where I shall be Deputy Speaker and chairman of the whole House. This, to me, means a position in which I can be successful only provided I command the full co-operation and support of all hon. members of the House.

It has been already said by the hon. Prime Minister that he knows I will be fair in dealing with my duties, and the duties of the hon. members. So that I do not need to say any further on that. But I do want to say this, hon. gentlemen. I want to thank the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition, and indeed all of the hon. members, for your kindness in placing me in this position of trust. With those few remarks, gentlemen, I shall endeavour to carry out my duties to the best of my ability.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I move, sir, that the committee rise and report the speech of the chairman of the committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to.

THE ABSENTEES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Absentees Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: I have a number of bills that I can introduce with your permission at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members have established in this House the practice of giving a short description of the bill on introduction. If it is the wish of my hon. friends that I do that as I go along, I will do so; otherwise I will defer it to second reading.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): I would certainly like to have an explanation of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This bill provides for the administration of the land in Ontario of a person who has disappeared and whose whereabouts are unknown; a person who is not, himself, resident at the time of disappearance in Ontario, and has been declared an absentee by a court of competent jurisdiction.

THE CREDIT UNIONS ACT, 1953

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Credit Unions Act, 1953."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would say that this bill provides for certain amendments, including the changing of the name of registrar of credit unions to supervisor of credit unions, and that where employees of unions are applying for loans, the authority to approve those loans must be given by the board of directors and the supervisor of the committee.

Also, that where credit unions have suffered financial setbacks, they can still continue in business but impaired capital will only be withdrawable at its actual value. New capital deposits will be encouraged in that they will not share the burden of past losses.

Further, the amendment provides that credit unions cannot loan their funds on the security of first mortgages to persons other than their own members, nor invest in certain types of mortgages. This is for the purpose of keeping the funds liquid for the general and main purpose, namely, loans to their own members.

THE DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for increasing from $5,000 to $20,000, in the event of an intestacy, the amount that either spouse would be entitled to receive.

THE FIRE MARSHALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE HOTEL FIRE SAFETY ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Hotel Fire Safety Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE LIGHTNING RODS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Lightning Rods Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE LAW SOCIETY ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Law Society Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I might say in explanation of this bill that, while there is a fund supplied by contributions by lawyers to meet defalcations and misuse of trust funds on the part of any lawyer with respect to his clients. Some rather severe losses, unfortunately, have been experienced in that field. Experience has also shown that if it had been possible to put a stop order on withdrawals from the fund, when the trouble was first apparent to the law society officers were looking into the matter, that perhaps considerable conservation of funds could have been obtained for the benefit of those entitled to them.

So this amendment provides for an application to the supreme court judge for a stop order on the application of the treasurer of the law society or one of his officers where it is shown that it would be proper to conserve this fund. It also contains provision for a further application for release of some or all of the funds with respect to those places where it would be proper to release it.

THE LIQUOR CONTROL ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Liquor Control Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in explaining this bill, I might say that the present provisions of section 104 of The Liquor Control Act dealing with penalties in relation to drunkenness are somewhat more severe than these amending provisions, but the main purpose for these amending provisions I think are apparent in them. They are in three parts and I think I can best explain them by simply reading them.

Every person who contravenes subsection 2 of section 79, the section providing for drunkenness, is guilty of an offence, and (a) is liable to a fine of not more than $50 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 30 days in the common jail or to both, or (b) may be detained for a period of not more than 30 days in an institution for the reclamation of alcoholics that is designated for the purpose by the Lieutenant-Governor in council (that would be a compulsory detention by order); of (c), and this is an important one I think, may be detained for an indeterminate term of not more than 90 days in an institution, mentioned in clause b.

If he signs a pledge agreeing and consenting to remain therein for such period of time not exceeding 90 days, as in the opinion of the superintendent of the institution is required for his reclamation, and that he will faithfully abide by all the rules and regulations of the institution so long as he is an inmate thereof, then subsection 8 provides for the Lieutenant-Governor designating such places from time to time, as he may see fit, as institutions for the reclamation of alcoholics.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that if this amending Act is brought into effect, it is hoped that it will be one of the ways in which considerable advance can be made in treating this very difficult subject of drunkenness, and jail sentences in respect to drunkenness.

THE MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Mortgages Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the last session of the Legislature, in an effort to come to grips with certain practices that had the earmarks of fraud, particularly in the field of second mortgage loaning, this House enacted one Act with respect to registration of mortgage brokers, amending The Unconscionable Transactions Act, and did not deal with certain amendments to The Mortgage Act that were contemplated.

Experience in the meantime appears to show that we are on the right track, but also reveal that a minor amendment should be made to The Mortgage Act by providing that the mortgagee must furnish a copy of the mortgage for the mortgagor at the time the transaction is concluded.

THE TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Trustee Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple amendment in order to make certain that, during a 6-month period before which an administrator cannot be appointed, no loss of rights should follow. It also gives the right to an application to a supreme court judge and he may extend the time for bringing an action in order that there would be no loss of time before appointment of an administrator.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the clerk had received from the chief election officer and laid upon the table the following certificate of a by-election held since the last session of the House:

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

This is to certify that in view of a writ of election, dated September 22, 1960, issued by the Honourable Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario, and addressed to Larry Belanger, returning officer for the electoral district of Temiskaming, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Temiskaming in the legislative assembly of this province, in the room of A. Robert Herbert, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Temiskaming, hath departed this life, Phillip Hoffman has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated October 14, 1960, which is now lodged of record in my office.

RODERICK LEWIS,

Toronto, November 23, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the advice of the House and release you to a matter which has bearing, by strange coincidence, on the report which has been placed upon the order paper of this House. Might I, in making this explanation, crave the House's permission to refer to a portion of this report which I find has very direct bearing upon what I am going to say.

It is on the first page of the report of the select committee just tabled, and just placed upon the order paper. The first matter on which the committee reached a conclusion was the one concerning special and individual exceptions to the provision of section 9 of The Legislative Assembly Act. Section 9 prohibits members from entering into any contract with any government department, board, commission, agency, etc., except as authorized by section 10.

Actually speaking, the section is very broad and what I want to refer to is something that the report does not mention, and that is the accepting of payment for services. From time to time circumstances arise concerning members of the House, in which the House feels that an exception should be made to the prohibition of section 9, even though the case does not come within the exceptions of 6 and 10. In the past, such special cases have been dealt with by Acts of the Legislature; for instance, Bill No. 152 of 1960, respecting the hon. Louis Pierre Cecile, MPP. That involved the question, of which perhaps there was some doubt, of the necessity of passing such an Act, with the possibility of expropriation of such certain lands by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

An Act respecting Bill No. 41 of 1957, having reference to Gordon William Innes, MPP, and I think that that involved an expropriation, if I remember rightly, of lands by The Department of Highways. Or was it purchased by him? Well, in any event, it was some transaction of that sort.

My first recollection of this matter is a bill relating to Mr. Wismer, who was, at one time, a member of this House, I believe for the riding of Riverdale. He sat on a board of conciliation, or something of the sort, and received payment in the ordinary course. This was disclosed afterwards and a bill validating the payment was passed at that time. Your committee was unanimous to the simple resolution of the House. Now this was, I think, after the recommendation of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) at the last session, if I remember rightly, and should be substituted for the Act formerly considered necessary. For this purpose the committee recommends the amendment of section 9, etc.

Now, sir, in Mr. Hoffman's case I have been beset with doubts. I wanted to make this explanation to the House, and ask the advice of the House in relation to it.

Mr. Hoffman was a civil servant for something over 30 years. He resigned from the service on August 19, 1960. At that time he had vacation credits for 31 working days to October 3, 1960. He had accumulated sick leave credit amounting to 321.5 days. Gratuity entitlement, 161 calendar days, commencing October 4, 1960, up to and including March 13, 1961. He was classified as a forest ranger, fourth class; the pay rate—$416.66 per month, payable semi-monthly.

Now, sir, on that computation, up to the date of—or following the date, rather—of the election on September 29, Mr. Hoffman would be entitled to holiday pay of $68.10, and sick leave credits and gratuities of $2,217.71, making a total of $2,258.03.

These, sir, are of course applied to all civil servants under similar conditions. Mr. Hoffman was included in the payroll in September, before the dates of the election. On the dates, I think, of September 9 to 23 and on that basis it could include two days of gratuity, which would run after the date of the election on September 29, amounting to $27.78.

Of course, I have asked for a ruling, I find that there is some doubt on these questions. Of course, The Legislative Assembly Act was drawn long before the days of these provisions of gratuities and so on, but some question was raised.

I am asking for further deliberations on this, as to the right to accept superannuation to which the government contributes. Now there are some hon. members of the assembly here who are in receipt of that. I am quite satisfied that never at any time was The Legislative Assembly Act considered to be a bar in connection with that, nor do I think—we have never had a case of this—that The Legislative Assembly Act was ever contemplated considering a matter of this sort. The situation, sir, is this, and I think that the question which has to be resolved is in these two areas.

First, taking Mr. Hoffman's case: He resigns on August 19. If his payments at that time are vested, if they are as a matter of fact crystallized at that time, and he is entitled to them, then my understanding of section 9 of The Legislative Assembly Act is that it does not apply.

On the other hand, if in the converse, if these payments are not vested and legally not vested, and they carry on, then section 9 of The Legislative Assembly Act will apply, and therefore a resolution or a bill would be required to clarify that.

Now here I am not prepared to pass upon which of these is correct, other than to express this opinion: That in the sick leave credits, I think they are clearly vested and that therefore on the sum of $2,217.71—which by the way has not been paid, it has been held up by the provincial auditor and the officers of the department. I think it has been vested and I think that would be the determination, in which case of course it would be paid in the ordinary court.

I point this out. If the money is earned and the debt is owing, then it is within the Act to accept payment. But if the money is not earned, and it requires further services, then, of course, the Act would apply.

Now that, I think, is the refinement that I think we would have to determine or the law officers would have to determine.

Now I would say that in connection with vacation with pay there might be an element of uncertainty. I do not see any uncertainty from a moral standpoint, but there might be some uncertainty from a legal standpoint. I have asked the civil service commissioner and it has always been counted in the case of civil servants who die or resign, the amount is vested and in the case of death is payable to their estates as an amount that is actually owing to them. Now, sir, I wanted to explain that to the House so that there will be the fullest understanding of this matter.

I come now to the solution; and—

Of course it would require, a resolution of this House, and if there is any objection on the part of any hon. member of the House, then of course, I would ask the hon. member not to take his seat until the matter is resolved.

On the other hand, frankly, I don't know whether a resolution of this House is required. There is doubt on it and I would say that I am quite satisfied that the House would feel in a case such as this that there should be such a resolution passed.

If no objection is raised after this explanation, that I think covers the whole matter, then I would introduce the member, subject to this undertaking: That if the law officers ruled there is required, the member-elect in taking his seat having violated the provisions of the Act as one of two of those persons I have mentioned did unwittingly, then either there should be a bill passed. Or in the alternative, that the matter be taken care of by resolution if the House in its wisdom determines to pass the recommendation or put into effect the recommendation provided for in the report of the select committee.

That is the provision and if it is the ruling of the law officers, I would undertake them to do that at the earliest possible moment and also to table in this House. The certificate of the civil service commissioner and the provincial auditor as to the exact amount that is due and owing. Now, sir, I think that fully explains the matter and I would abide by the decision of the House. I think it is one of those things affecting this House and if there is objection then, of course, I would not introduce the member. If that is the case, and I do not want to hold out any inducements to the hon. members here, they might miss a very fine speech, because I have asked the hon. member to move the Throne address tomorrow. So I might have to do that myself.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those occasions, I think, when the leader of the Opposition bears a responsibility not only to himself but to this Legislature.

This matter has been before me for some time. I appreciate the hon. Prime Minister's explanation. I feel that as leader of the Opposition it is my obligation to bring to the attention of the Legislature, matters that may be unpopular, matters of conscience, if you will.

I will assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in approaching this subject, I am not of the mind that I want to dispute the rules of the game after the rules have been set down and elections been held. A man has been elected, I am prepared to abide by it. But I do say that there is another matter involved here, and it is a serious matter. The matter that the hon. Prime Minister has made reference to.

Here we have a man who was until nomination date, a civil servant of this province. The nomination date was September 15.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the question then becomes one of interpreting The Legislative Act. Not only section 9 is involved but likewise, 9, 12 and 15. I can appreciate the hon. Prime Minister's position. I would say that our own position is not to put unnecessary hurdles in the path of a man who has won an election. But at least we wish to respect this law, which simply says, that if a man does not comply, the election is null and void; that is a fact we must consider.

Secondly, he is subject to a $2,000 fine for every day he sits in this Legislature if it is found that he has been sitting in any way in a disqualified fashion. So I would think that, for the protection of this individual man and member, he certainly should wait until the matter is clarified.

I will assure the hon. Prime Minister that we, on this side of the House, will work with him in any intelligent, reasonable way to amend the legislation. I am delighted the matter has arisen in the way it has, for the simple reason that it brings this matter to public attention without the need on my part to appear in a critical fashion to complain about the election.

Now I can complain about principle. Now I can talk principle, and this I would like to do.

I feel that the man should not take his position in this Legislature until this matter is clarified. I feel very strongly, as you yourself have said that there is doubt about the matter. I think, that until such doubt is resolved, he should refrain from taking his position.

I think secondly, that we would be doing a disservice to the man to ask him to subject himself to the penalty of section 15 which would impose on him a fine of $2,000 for every day he takes his place in this Legislature, irrespective of what we do. That imposition and that penalty can be enforced by anybody in the province.

I only draw this to your attention to demonstrate the ramifications of this problem.

I would point out, too, that we should not be too hurried in our determination here. I think that we must remember that the legislative bodies of years gone by, had in mind a very fixed policy, which ensured that a civil servant would divorce himself completely from the civil service, before competing in any elective activities. I think this is the essence and I know now we are into the technicalities of arrears for pension funds, sick leaves and alike.

True, these are matters that have arisen in recent years; matters that may not have been under consideration when the Act was formulated. I can agree with the hon. Prime Minister that we are not going to hold up a man because he has earned money heretofore and the money is paid after, not at all, but in the consideration of these sections, I personally am not disposed to move unnecessarily hurriedly and I can say that for the man's protection and for the protection of this whole Legislature. I think the matter, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, is a matter of doubt, a matter of concern and one that should be resolved.

I reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House are not going to attempt to use any technicality to upset an election, but we are determined to try to enforce the intelligible, reasonable implications and significances of this bit of legislation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, having had this problem on my mind for some time and being greatly concerned about it as have others in this group, I would think that we would be asking only what is right to ask the hon. Prime Minister and government to further investigate this matter and clarify it before the hon. gentleman takes his place in the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I am quite content to do that. The matter, as I see it, is very similar to the matter of Mr. Wismer who was an hon. member of this House some years ago subject to this, that at that time payment took place actually during the term of office and in these circumstances it might have been so ruled that he had vacated his seat.

This is a case, of course, of money which was paid during his term of service and the question arises as to the vesting or otherwise of these benefits, which applies to all our civil service. In view of that, of course, I would want to have the matter resolved, and I would want to have it done in a way in keeping with the rates and dignities of the service. Now I might say this, sir, that in view of that, I am going to ask here the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Somme) to move the address tomorrow so that will get matters back on the rails.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that the clerk has received from the chief election officer and laid upon the table the certificate of a by-election held since the last session of the House, returning Mr. Arthur Evans, member-elect for the electoral district of Simcoe Centre.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

This is to certify that, in view of a writ of election dated September 22, 1960, issued by the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Ontario, and addressed to Robert L. Brown, Esquire, returning officer for the electoral district of Simcoe Centre, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Simcoe Centre, in the legislative assembly of this province, in the room of George G. Johnston, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Simcoe Centre, hath departed this life, Arthur Evans, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated October 4, 1960, which is now lodged of record in my office.

RODERICK LEWIS,
Chief Election Officer

Toronto, November 23, 1960.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sir, may I have permission to escort the member to this House?

Arthur Evans, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Simcoe Centre, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you the member-elect for the electoral district of Simcoe Centre who has taken the oath and subscribed the roll, and now claims his right to take his seat.

Mr. Speaker: Let the member take his seat.

Two motions have been submitted to the Speaker's office; one from the leader of the Opposition and one from the member for York South, calling for adjournment of the House to discuss an urgent matter of public importance, namely, the matter of unemployment. I find that I must refuse the notices of motion dealing with this matter of unemployment upon several grounds.

I do agree that it is an urgent matter and certainly of public importance but also that it is not of a strictly definite nature. The word definite could be interpreted as clear and unmistakable in meaning with which I agree. The word definite, however, also means exact and precise and having distinct or certain minutes.

In addition, I find that the notice of motion has been submitted and will be on the order paper tomorrow dealing with the same subject.

I am also of the opinion that a much wider discussion could be given to this subject by another method other than by a motion to adjourn the House. Under the terms of this particular type of motion, discussion is limited to 10 minutes. I am further of the opinion that members, generally, will agree that this subject warrants a much wider discussion than could be applied under the 10-minute limit.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, as you have said, we did present a motion to adjourn this House, to discuss the very urgent problem of unemployment. You now have advised us that you consider this problem to be an urgent one and you consider it to be of public importance. But you have said that, in your opinion, this matter can be more effectively dealt with on two other occasions. Firstly, a debate with respect to a resolution that has been introduced by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Sutton), and secondly, I presume, at least, that the inference you left was that it could be considered in the Throne speech.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out to you, firstly, that I have certain sympathy with your position. I would be inclined to agree that, technically speaking, it is true that this matter is urgent, agreed that it is of public importance, can just as well be debated tomorrow, or the next day, or the day after that.

But I would likewise remind you, Mr. Speaker, that I do think that the alternatives you have given us are inadequate, and ineffective. I do not think this House should consider the alternatives that you present as a real alternative at all. I feel that unless this House is disposed to say that a definite time, in the foreseeable and immediate future, will be set aside to consider this very important subject, then what you have done, with your phraseology and explanation, is simply to adjourn this problem indefinitely. The simple fact of the matter is that you have acknowledged that this is urgent, you have therefore, prima facie, qualified this subject matter for discussion.

The Throne speech, which I have read several times, does not tackle the problem as a social problem. It talks about long term planning. It talks about economic plans that must be laid for the future. But it makes no reference to what will happen to keep body and soul together for the hundred thousand people who are unemployed in Ontario tonight.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not know whether a Speaker's ruling is debatable. I think that is what my hon. friend is doing. May I point out to you that his Honour finds this subject is urgent and important, as are a great many things from the Throne Speech.

I think the point comes up this way. It is the method of dealing with it. This is what his Honour's ruling is on. The method of dealing with it. There are two orders on the order paper now that can deal with it. I would say to my hon. friend he may be able to say all that he wants to say in 10 minutes. I could not on this great subject. It is a matter deserving very much more consideration than that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I agree with the hon. Prime Minister. It may well be that this is not debatable, but may I say, Mr. Speaker, right now, that I am going to be forced to vote against your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the rule with regard to debate, but I feel that since the motions were submitted, a few words could be interjected at this time.

Mr. MacDonald: You have dealt with these two motions as something of a package deal and I am faced with a little difficulty in that I do not know what the wording of the motion submitted by the hon. leader of the Opposition was. I am convinced that the motion I submitted to you, sir, is not negated by the reason you advanced, namely, that it does not advance a specific item. My criticism is that the various proposals that have been advanced by the government, and in the resolution which you say precludes debate at the moment, are long run, long term. The motion I submitted to you, may I draw to your attention, sir, is this: That the adjournment of the House to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, an immediate programme to cope with the unemployment crisis. And I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the motion you have indicated gives an opportunity for debate; the motion in the name of the hon. member for York-Scarborough—that there is nothing immediate about it at all. It may conceivably, in the long run, meet the needs of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: I refuse both motions for the same reason and since we have allowed some debate on this matter, I think it is now time to rule and vote, if necessary, on the Speaker's ruling.

As many as are in favour of the Speaker's ruling will please say "aye."

As many as are opposed say "nay."

The Speaker's ruling was adopted on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please rise.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the ruling upheld.

Mr. MacDonald: I would like to move, seconded by Mr. Thomas, that the rules of the House be waived and that this House proceed on Friday of this week with consideration of the resolution standing on the order paper in the name of Mr. Sutton.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I object to that, Mr. Speaker, so that is all that is necessary.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may we have your ruling rather than the law of Killaloe being invoked?

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. member that we have already had a demonstration of that this afternoon, that no rule of the House can be suspended without unanimous consideration of the House and it is quite obvious that the unanimous support of the House has not been given in this case as in the previous case this afternoon.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I, through you, ask the hon. Prime Minister that in view of last year's experience where this kind of thing frustrated the debate for weeks, with regard to Elliot Lake, will he permit a debate on Friday on this matter, so that we can deal with an immediate programme for unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say to my hon. friend that my purpose and intention, and I think that it is clear from the speech of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor from the Throne, to deal with this most fully and comprehensively. I would say to both my hon. friends, to all the hon. members of this House, I have no objection; indeed I welcome debate on this very important subject. But I must admit that I would not want what I would say to be limited to 10 minutes. I think my hon. friend would agree with that.

I will give my undertaking to this House to deal with this but I do not think, myself, that Friday is a satisfactory day to debate this. But I will certainly, sir, make the earliest provision for the fullest opportunities for the hon. members of this House to debate this question.

It has been drawn to my attention that the resolution of Mr. Sutton may, as a matter of fact, be called on Monday. I will see what the circumstances are. But in any event, I will say this that on Tuesday, in any event, I assume, we will start into the Throne debate, aside from its more formal aspect; which take place tomorrow and that gives opportunity to proceed.

I am anxious just as my hon. friend is; and he will find that too. We shall go ahead and deal with all aspects of this problem—look at it, take it out, and put it on top of the table and let us see what we have to deal with in this country of ours. I am satisfied to do that, sir.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the hon. Prime Minister, may we take the assurance that it will be called not later than next week?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Not later than next week? Yes, the Sutton resolution will be called not later than next week.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I think that concludes the business of the House. I might say to my hon. friend that the Throne debate, as amended, will proceed tomorrow. That will be the order of business, sir.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petition was brought up, laid on the table, read and received:

Of the corporation of the city of Peterborough praying that an Act may pass permitting the corporation to order the removal or demolition of premises closed by order of the medical officer of health, under section 97 of The Public Health Act when circumstances warrant such action.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ACT, 1951

Mr. N. Davison moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Fair Employment Practices Act, 1951."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to an economic survey of the eastern Ontario region that has been placed on their desks. I might point out that the survey released today by the Ontario Department of Economics concludes that economic diversification and development will continue in eastern Ontario, and that a high level of prosperity will be enjoyed in the years ahead.

The comprehensive 125-page survey, embracing the 11 counties of the Ottawa valley and Upper St. Lawrence areas, indicates that the region's population has grown from 592,000 to 748,000 in the past 9 years, and may well climb to 850,000 by 1966. The area's labour force has expanded significantly during the postwar period, and personal income has climbed by close to 90 per cent since 1951.

On the basis of employment, the service industry, represented in considerable degree by the federal civil service, is dominant. The diversity of skills and stability of employment in the civil service are among the region's greatest assets. Value of output shows the manufacturing industry to be of major importance. Factory shipments have increased sixfold in value from the levels of immediate prewar years, while the entry of new industry and the expansion of established manufacturing enterprises, especially in the chemical and synthetic textile fields, are taking place at a record pace.

The operations of the region's pulp and paper mills are being expanded and broadened, markets for the area's agricultural output are growing and the tourist industry is flourishing. Construction activity, judged by the value of building permits issued, has increased by more than 180 per cent over the past decade. Two huge construction programmes recently completed in eastern Ontario, the St. Lawrence seaway and the associated power project, created a considerable volume of activity through the demand for labour, construction materials, and general supplies that could be provided locally. This gave added impetus to the long-term growth factors influencing the region's economy.

Current trends indicate a continuation of eastern Ontario's economic development. The survey notes that this will be fostered by the growing domestic requirements of the Toronto and Montreal areas, and by the increasing needs of the huge adjacent markets of the northeastern states, the availability of ample hydro-electric energy and natural gas, a skilled and versatile labour force, and the completion of new highways and structures—particularly the Ottawa and St. Lawrence river parkways as well as highway No. 401—by the Ontario government and other authorities.

The study of the eastern Ontario region is the fourth carried out by the Ontario Department of Economics on the 10 economic regions of the province. Earlier publications have been released on the Georgian Bay, northeastern and northwestern regions; the fifth, now in preparation, will examine the Lake Ontario region.

The purpose of these studies is to set out the major facets of economic activity, illustrate and analyze growth, and measure the contribution of each region as a whole to the economic life of the province. They are linked with the government's policy of encouraging stable and progressive economic development across Ontario. It is hoped that the report will prove helpful to the business and commercial community, as well as the public generally, in preparing for the opportunities of the future.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney), I beg to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) a question based on a reading of a one-page article in the Toronto Star, having to do with the Hollinger mine. The direct question—

Mr. Speaker: Pardon? I did not know how long the member was going to read before he got to his actual question, but it is perfectly in order.

Mr. Oliver: Well, may I say, Mr. Speaker, you are being very meticulous today (laughter). The direct question to the hon. Prime Minister: What action does the government intend to take, in view of the allegation by officers of the united steel workers, that the timber falls at Hollinger mine in Timmins are endangering the lives of miners?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I can quite understand that my hon. friend has been unable to give me notice of that question because I just arrived back at the buildings a few moments ago.

But I would say that while I am not familiar, as he may understand, with the details of that which would be under the jurisdiction and direction of The Department of Mines, I can assure my hon. friend that there would be a most meticulous investigation of that matter, as is always the case with The Department of Mines.

I think that he will feel quite satisfied that everything will be done to thoroughly investigate that matter. If there are any matters that he or others can give to me, I would be very glad to pass them on in confidence, to the investigating committee so that inquiries can be made.

I might say, sir, that I have followed the case with interest. I want to pay tribute to the great courage of that young miner who was injured and who was trapped in the mine. I notice that he has been brought to Toronto here because of certain facilities that, I believe, are available here only. I know, sir, that we all wish this young New Canadian the very best. And if there is anything we can do to help him, we will be delighted, indeed, to do it.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out to the House that this morning I received two questions: one from the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) and one from the member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden). I thought that these questions would have to be rephrased in order to come within the rules. In the present form, they contain too much preamble and recitement of fact. The question seeks information, but does not give information.

I attempted to reach the members to discuss the rephrasing of these questions, but unfortunately was unable to do so. Therefore, I would ask that they leave these questions until tomorrow, at which time we can discuss the business of the preambles and recitements of facts contained therein.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the hon. Prime Minister at lunch today and got back about the same time as he did. When I got to my office I learned that you had called, but I submit, sir, that if you are going to ask questions intelligently, there has to be at least some question there. I suggest, further, that we will have to clarify these rules a bit more, as to whether or not questions we are going to be asked are going to be subjected to this kind of meticulous editing.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, if it is a question of mine that is involved, I would merely like to indicate that, as type-written, my question takes up about 10 or 12 lines. I agree there is some preamble. That is necessary, I think, to make the question complete. If you insist, sir, I can torture the English language and put the exploratory material into the form of a number of preambles. But I submit to you, sir, that it is a perfectly reasonable request for information.

Mr. Speaker: I want to be quite fair, and I think that all members observe the same rules. The member for York South asked a question and he was right to a point with the question.

Now, with the permission of members, I would ask the member for Woodbine to read his question as submitted to me, and then could I be given the opportunity of adding to that what I think the question should be, with the permission of the House?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, would it not be better, since we are just at the start of the session, that we meet tomorrow morning at 10.30? I point out, sir, that the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and a number of the hon. gentlemen opposite are away—at a very important function, as a matter of fact—the dinner for the hon. Paul Martin. It has desolated the Opposition here.

I would say, sir, if the House will give me this indulgence, that I would have gone myself. As a matter of fact I asked my colleague and friend, the hon. Louis Cecile, (Minister of Public Welfare) to attend there and to make a little presentation to hon. Mr. Martin on my behalf as a mark of my high appreciation of his good qualities. I would have gone myself, but for the fact that with the disability from which I presently suffer, I would have received no sympathy at all. I get very little as it is.

I hope that these hon. gentlemen will be able to be back here tomorrow morning at 10.30, and then these matters can be discussed and disposed of. I think that the fair way is to try to find ways and means whereby questions can be asked.

I think hon. members ought to find a reasonable way of asking questions without casting any implications or insinuations or anything of that sort. I think if I can sit with you, sir, that the House will trust the fairness of those here to see that the questions are made so that they can elicit the fullest of information.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I am very unhappy that this very fine report was put on our desks as an honest survey of eastern Ontario. I would like to ask the hon. Minister at this time if there is any potential future in regard to work for some of the people in eastern Ontario in this report, that will take care of the immediate situation. We had, not so long ago in the Weekly Star an article on the "City of Idle Men," and I am wondering if there is anything in this report that will take care of that situation.

Interruptions by hon. members. House called to order.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: First order, consideration of the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay) at the opening of the session.

Applause.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I would ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. Evans), that a humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. Speaker, as I rise at this time the first thing that I would like to say, I have found that life is always full of surprises. It was planned, Mr. Speaker, that moving the adoption of the address of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario would be in the capable hands of the member-elect for the riding of Temiskaming. As the member-elect has not yet been permitted to take his seat formally in this House, perhaps I may refer to him by his name, Mr. Philip Hoffman.

Applause.

Mr. Gomme: It is less than 24 hours ago that I was asked to take this pleasant duty, and I may say that I shall be very happy if I can do half the job my friend would have done. Of him, with the permission of this House, I shall have something to say later on.

May I express to you, Mr. Speaker, my sincere thanks for the kindness and the consideration that you have given me as a new member of this assembly. You have always presided over the sessions of this Legislature ably, and I am sure that your ability has always been acclaimed.

May I, at this time, express my deep sorrow as to the passing of two members of this assembly who were well known and respected by all of us. First, I refer to the death of Mr. George Johnston, who represented the riding of Simcoe Centre and who died on May 29 last.

Mr. Johnston died full of years and secure in the esteem of the people who knew him best. The late member entered this assembly in 1943, and was returned at 6 successive general elections—a record of service which speaks for itself.

May I assure the members of the family of the late Mr. Johnston of the sincere sympathy of all those who are in this assembly.

May I also say that I deeply regret the death of the late member for Temiskaming, Mr. A. Robert Herbert. I had come to know the late member very well indeed, and to cherish his friendship. No one could fail to admire his enthusiasm for the great north country. His passing, at 46 years of age, with such dramatic suddenness, was, I am sure, a shock to all of us and indeed a great blow to the hon. members of this House.

Again, I should like to express my sympathy to the late Mr. Herbert's widow and his family of young children.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, we regret the absence of the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Myers) who is confined to his home as the result of an illness.

I am happy to say that he is making a splendid recovery and soon will rejoin us here.

I am also glad to see the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Lyons) back to this House. No hon. member of this House is more sincere in his efforts for northern Ontario, and I hope that he will be with us for a long time to come, to further serve that part of Ontario for which he has done so well.

It is a great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, at this time to congratulate the number of my hon. colleagues who have been honoured by elevation to the cabinet. The hon. member for York West (Mr. Rowntree) brings to bear on the duties of his new post, as Minister of Transport, a sound experience as a private member.

He has also won acclaim as chairman of several very important committees. His fine policies of mind and heart, and his capacity for hard work guarantee that he will be a success in this new post, and he will add strength to this administration.

The hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) did a service in eliminating 50 per cent of the communist representation in this honourable body. The hon. member is a student who has the knack of acquiring mastery of his subjects and who expresses himself freely and forcefully in debates.

The hon. member for Middlesex North (Mr. Stewart) has already given a good account of himself with his qualities as an expert in the affairs of several departments, notably education, agriculture, and municipal affairs.

I congratulate both of the hon. members on their admission to cabinet rank where they will add strength to the administration. Doubtless, in the fullness of time, further promotion lies ahead.

It is also a pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to extend my good wishes to the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. A. Johnston) on his promotion to the vice-chairmanship of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission.

Again my good wishes go to the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) on his appointment as a member of that same commission.

The experience of these hon. members in this House and their familiarity with the affairs of northern Ontario will aid them in their duties, and undoubtedly will be of assistance in the guidance of our great publicly-owned enterprise.

I am sure the hon. members of the government will miss the sage counsel of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop) who, however, goes on to still another career of service as chairman of the committee of university. Here the hon. member will again be working in a field where his experience will be of the utmost value.

Again, I extend my best wishes to the hon. member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. Evans) in respect to his victory of September 29 last. He is a young man who has already demonstrated his capacity for public service in the municipal field; more especially as mayor of the town of Bradford and warden of that great county of Simcoe.

My very warm congratulations go to the member-elect for Temiskaming. By-elections present peculiar features on occasion, and my information indicates that my hon. friends of the Opposition had great hopes in respect to this northern riding. Our socialist friends were represented by an experienced candidate at one time a member of this assembly, long since departed from Temiskaming, but who returned to the riding to preach the socialistic gospel in the hope of again entering this Legislature.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Hon. J. Root (Minister Without Portfolio): We are only semi-socialist now.

Mr. Gomme: Just take your time, boys! The followers of the hon. leader of Her Majesty's Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) almost to a man, I understand, threw themselves into this particular campaign with all their traditional weapons: man, money, material and propaganda—in fact everything they had. The hon. leader of the Opposition—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Tell us what you threw in!

Mr. Gomme: —is reported as having declared at Haileybury on August 4 that upon this by-election hangs the future of the great Liberal party.

(Laughter).

Mr. Gomme: I do not know whether or not the hon. member meant exactly what he said, but I am sure we will wait his explanation with interest.

The net result of all the sound and fury which this by-election evoked was the election of Mr. Philip Hoffman of Temagami, who has turned from 37 years of public service to the people of Ontario, to another field of service in this Legislature. I know this man as a man of the people, who is joining a people's government—

Mr. MacDonald: Quit gloating!

Mr. Gomme: —and who has worked with his hands as well as his head.

Perhaps because I have had some experience along that line, I have a special respect for men who work with their hands.

This latest addition to the government side is a man who learned his trade from the ground up, cutting trails, manhandling materials of all sorts in a position in the rugged northland, handling a canoe through the rough waters and streams and handling his craft over rocky portages and brushy trails. His record is one of giving help to the settlers in distress, of rescuing lost hunters and fishermen, of more than once saving people from drowning at risk of his own life.

I shall presently deal with some of the things that he has seen during his 37 years of employment as a servant of the people of Ontario. I shall try to relate some of the things which have been told to me, and which ordinarily he would be relating to you himself on this occasion.

Mr. Speaker, in these trying and dangerous days, our country is, of necessity, gravely concerned with international affairs, a subject in the memory of some of us present but little interest to the people of Canada. Now we can only hope that the labours of our world leaders will finally be able to achieve a climate of peace and mutual goodwill replacing the uneasy truce which continues throughout the whole world.

We are fortunate in having the goodwill of our great and powerful neighbour, the United States. We are doubly fortunate in our membership in the British Commonwealth of Nations and we are again fortunate, I think, in having a flexible parliamentary system which implies loyalty to the Crown without in any degree submitting ourselves to dictatorship.

Since Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II visited this province along with her distinguished husband, Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, the Royal family has been blessed with the arrival of a second son and, I am sure, we all rejoice with them in this happy event.

It is also fitting, I think, that we should extend our greetings and good wishes to Her Royal Highness Princess Margaret in respect of her marriage to Mr. Antony Armstrong-Jones. Her visit in recent years to this province will not be soon forgotten, and I am sure the hon. members of this assembly join with me in wishing all happiness to Her Royal Highness and her husband as they face life together.

The development in this great province of Ontario can be measured in many ways: the astonishing growth of our population, the establishment of new industry, the increase in our labour force, the expansion of our institutions for human betterment such as hospitals and homes for the aged, and also the growth and improvement of facilities such as highways and public buildings. In this year alone, as pointed out in the address by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, there has been an increase of 50,000 jobs, although the increase in employment has not kept up with the increase of the work force. This, of course, is largely accounted for by our high population increase.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): How about the unemployment?

Mr. Gomme: Just hold on a minute.

About 1.5 million people in the last 10 years, also by the fact that 50 per cent. of the immigrants to this land settle in this province. It is nothing short of a miracle that this government has been able to keep abreast of the facilities needed to support our onrushing development, and to supply the needs of our rapidly increasing population. This government, in carrying out its huge programme, has overcome two factors which, without good management at the provincial level, would have hamstrung our provincial economy.

First, Ontario is almost impoverished by the demands of the federal treasury. Ontario is required to pay one-half of the enormous cost of national defence. Ontario actually pays through the federal treasury great sums to be handed over to the so-called "have-not" provinces, including debt-free British Columbia and oil-rich Alberta.

Ontario taxpayers pay to Ottawa about 50 cents out of every dollar flowing into the federal treasury. Is it any wonder that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) of this province demands a new fiscal deal with Ottawa?

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Gomme: Second, the government of Ontario is aiding the municipalities on an ever-increasing scale. For example, including aid to universities, more than $200 million in education, $75 million a year in municipal road subsidies; together about $345 million a year in grants of all kinds.

In short, Ontario is paying to the municipalities almost 45 cents out of every dollar of provincial revenue. And these grants are bound to increase. It is inevitable under the present system.

In the early days, forest protection was achieved by the use of manpower and not much of that, canvas buckets, canoes, axes and patrols on horseback, when there were trails over which a horse could travel. It took hours, even days to reach a fire.

Gradually fire towers lookouts began to come into use. Wooden towers with material for their construction, manhandled into high points, and with only the rudimentary means of communication.

Today it is different. Some 300 tall, steel lookout towers with snug, glassed-in cabins at the top, dot the northern Ontario landscape. In good weather the lookout man can see and scan the landscape for 25 miles in all directions. By using an alidade he can transmit to the ground crew exact directions as to where the blaze is located and other instruments permit him to give distance with a high degree of accuracy.

In earlier days it was vastly different. Rangers, some of them were experienced bushmen, but with no specialized scientific training. As the fire season approached, the ranks of the rangers were supplemented by students and other inexperienced help gathered up wherever they could be found.

The system, or lack of system, was not without its casualties. Men getting lost in the bush, a few drownings each year, perhaps because of inexperience in handling canoes; indeed all types of mishaps.

In those early days, there were simply not enough trained men, nor the equipment needed to prevent or extinguish forest fires. There always has been, and there always will be, a real fire hazard in any wooded country, especially where the forest growth consists of trees such as spruce or pine.

The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) recently referred to the fire season just closed. During this present year, the area burned by forest fires was less than one-third of the annual average: about 31,000 acres were burned over in 1960, and the 10-year annual average was 97,000 acres.

The air services of the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests is the world's largest, and I have no hesitation in saying the world's finest. In the fires of the past summer in Sioux Lookout area, more than 1,000 men were engaged in fighting fires: civilians, rangers, conservation officers and park officials. Helicopters loaned by the Ontario Hydro also gave very valued assistance.

The air fleet, inaugurated by a Conservative government of the hon. Howard Ferguson, in addition to fire control work, carries out aerial surveys, and its mercy flights include carrying patients from remote points to hospitals as well as rescuing lost hunters and fishermen.

In the fall, when the fire season ends, the planes are equipped with either wheels or skis in place of floats. This job is accomplished either at local headquarters or at the vast hangers at the Sioux headquarters. Now for a moment may I again look back to 1923 — no planes — no mechanical equipment — practically no fire pumps — no radio — only a few elementary telephone lines. The weapons, as I have said, were largely axes, shovels, picks, canvas buckets.

Today we have the finest air service of its kind in the world. We have modern fire pumps, hundreds of miles of hose, trucks, bulldozers and every conceivable weapon to fight fire. We have also a highly trained and devoted staff.

For the most of my life I have been connected with some phase of the lumber industry. I spent 10 years engaged largely in woods operations, including timber measurement. The Doyle rule was long used in Ontario and was a fairly accurate means of measuring timber. But as the giant trees of the original forest disappeared, operators began to cut trees of much smaller size. Here the Doyle rule was notoriously inaccurate, resulting in huge overrun. Hence, this government adopted the Ontario rule which gives an accurate estimate of the number of feet board measure in the content of a log. It, therefore, gives a much better financial return to the province.

Scaling requires adequate technical training, skill and experience, and we have in our scalers, today, a group performing an important function as well as being thoroughly competent in their work.

Reforestation is getting the attention it deserves. From St. Williams, Midhurst and other forest stations about 40 million trees are shipped yearly. This is a big increase, and the results are seen through planting on farm and municipal forests all over Ontario.

In the north, with its vast distances and huge forest area, the situation is different. We must depend not altogether but largely on natural regeneration. So much depends on soil conditions and the varying nature of forest growth. A coniferous forest will replace itself quite readily, given favourable conditions. If a pine or spruce area is denuded of its merchantable trees, it will reproduce if the area is not infested with weeds, trees and brush.

Some experiments have been made—and I believe successful—along the lines of spraying out the growth of shrubs and weeds through the use of chemicals. But keeping forests free from fire is still the most important factor.

Today, also, there is increasing use of trees formerly considered almost worthless—notably poplar. This latter wood is now widely used in the manufacture of rough paper, kraft, wallboard and insulating board. This is a happy development for our operating companies; also for our settlers and it gives them an additional small but important cash crop.

Work in the field is greatly assisted by the presence of many trained foresters, university graduates in their profession. Except for the clerical staff, I think the whole staff in the North Bay office consists of graduate foresters.

Another change relates to the integration of the departmental staff. Men in the outside services are no longer organized as a collection of Balkan republics. Some men specialize in forest fire fighting and forest protection. Others are particularly concerned with timber and pulpwood operations, scaling, directing, cutting and seeing that operators work within the four corners of their licences.

Others again, specialists in wildlife and fish and game protection, are at the operation of hatcheries. But they are all welded into a cohesive and manysided whole, concerned with the utilization and the preservation of our forest wealth, whether a tree or wildlife, or whatever form our forest wealth, using the broader terms, may assume.

The men and women, for there are many women employees in our offices, have security of tenure of office; they have support of the head office officials; they take pride in their work and it is a lifetime career.

Another matter I would like to mention is the enforcement of the manufacturing conditions of The Crown Timber Act. Enacted some 60 years ago, the conditions were extremely simple. They required that timber cut from Crown lands of Ontario must be manufactured within the borders of Ontario.

In 1937-1938, a government of another political stripe simply threw the regulations out the window. They did not even bother to repeal them. They simply ignored them, handing out huge pulpwood concessions without any competition, permitting also unlimited export of our raw pulpwood, in one case in northwestern Ontario, building a huge dam and digging a canal to help float the Ontario pulpwood to the Wisconsin mills. These agreements also required that pulp mills were to be built in Ontario. And how many were built under the government of that day? Exactly none.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Think forward!

Mr. Gomme: I should add that a start was actually made on one mill, at Red Rock, winding up in about the biggest bankruptcy in Ontario's history.

All that has been changed, though of course the commitments of a former government could not wholly be repudiated. But the policy of this government in Ontario is to manufacture Ontario forest products for Ontario pay envelopes, for Ontario workmen performing their labours in Ontario mills and developing Ontario's secondary industries.

As mentioned in the address of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor, the need of this great province is the encouragement of secondary industry, the manufacture of the maximum of Ontario's products for Ontario use. In a word, we must correct the outflow of Canadian money now feeding foreign markets when we can just as well manufacture here. And we must build or rebuild our foreign markets if we are to maintain the standard of living which we have been accustomed to taking for granted.

This is a time for government, for management, for labour and for everyone to take heed of the future. We cannot afford the loss of our world markets. We cannot afford industrial shut-downs, whether caused by loss of business or by irresponsible strikes or lock-outs.

Sweden, for example, is one of the most prosperous democracies in the world today. There has been just one large strike in recent years. Why? Because labour and management sit down together and consider 3 points.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): You give some thought to that!

Mr. Gomme: You listen, boys! What are the demands of labour—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Democratic government—that is what we need here!

Mr. Gomme: Second, what are the views of management? Third, what will be the effect on the economic life of this nation?

The economic future of this province and of the nation depends greatly on the development of secondary industry. Such industry tends to be in the hands of the large corporations, and I have very little patience with the demands of the socialist elements in this country, that we should exact undue tribute in this quarter. Already, about 52 cents out of every profit dollar of our large corporations goes to the federal treasury, to say nothing of provincial and municipal taxes.

The capital of corporate business is derived from invested savings of the people, plus the profits plowed back into the respective operations. We should, therefore, bend our efforts to encourage the development of institutions, of manufacture, of trade and of commerce.

Secondary industry is our largest employer—the greatest provider of all pay envelopes in this province. In my own riding of Lanark, and right at this time, we have many examples of what can be done in that field. The closing of the Frost and Wood plant at Smiths Falls threw a large number of long-time employees out of work. Now what did the people do? They did not go weeping to Ottawa; they did not come crying to Queen's Park. Municipally and as a community, they put their shoulders to the wheel.

Mr. Singer: And raised the taxes!

Mr. Gomme: And as a result of municipal and community efforts, the Hershey Chocolate Corporation are establishing a plant in Smiths Falls. They will employ probably 300 men and women. More than this, they will use up to one million pounds of milk per day. Just think of what this will mean to the great dairy industry which is centred so largely in eastern Ontario.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Gomme: The woollen industry was traditionally one of the mainstays of industry in the whole Ottawa valley. Today this industry is but a shadow of its former self. Again, our people went to work. They have secured an electronics plant, a steel fabricating plant, while still another plant has turned to the manufacture of synthetic yarns. The industry is available. The thing to do is to sell our bill of goods, get after suitable industries and get them located where there are adequate facilities, such as transportation, markets, local facilities, and so forth. Down where I come from the people are not leaners. They have bred in them the pioneer spirit which has made this province what it is today.

Applause and desk pounding.

Mr. Gomme: I have been indebted, in a great measure, to the member-elect for Temiskaming in respect of his great knowledge of the north and the research which he has done. In some degree I feel that I am speaking for him, and I shall look forward to hearing him address this assembly as the session proceeds.

The speech of His Honour contains what to me seemed to be a sentence of great importance. I quote:

You will be asked to vote funds to insure that no student who has the talent and ambition to attend university is deprived of the opportunity through the lack of financial means.

His Honour spoke of the great success of the scholarship programme of this government, the scholarships being awarded to grade 13 students acquiring 80 per cent. or higher in 8 subjects.

There has been much loose talk from the Opposition quarters about free university education. There is very little that is free in these days.

Mr. Singer: Are you opposed to it? That is a good one.

Mr. Gomme: Second, universities are for the training of those who can reasonably benefit from the facilities which are offered.

There are many students who can benefit from university training. There are others who are not capable of absorbing such training. Without going into detail, may I say that, in my opinion, the system adopted by this government of scholarships and bursaries, coupled with student loans on very easy terms, is not only separating the sheep from the goats, but represents very much more in this field than ever has been attempted before.

General pounding of desks.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): How do you like that?

Mr. Gomme: By 1966, according to the estimate contained in the address presented by His Honour, we shall have to provide accommodation for 500,000 more pupils than there are attending schools this year. Our school population will be 3 times what it was in 1945.

As the hon. Prime Minister has so often said, our education expenditures have not only increased many-fold; they will have to continue to be increased year by year. Provincially, under a former government, they were $13 million a year. This year they will far exceed $200 million, and as the hon. Prime Minister has intimated, there is only one way for them to go, and that is up.

We had, I think, 4 universities when this government took office. Today we have 11. Is this not evidence that this government is aware of the demands of education? For certainly our universities could not survive save for the assistance they receive from the provincial treasury.

I must congratulate the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) on his sponsorship of the most impressive public works programme in Ontario history.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Oh, come now!

Mr. Gomme: Of particular interest to eastern Ontario is the programme for the expansion of the Eastern Ontario Institute of Technology at Ottawa. The institute, smaller in size, of course, than Ryerson Institute in Toronto, is carrying on magnificent work for people who wish to have something more than high school training but do not elect to attend a university.

Just before I leave the subject of education, I should like to mention education grants as affecting that great riding of Lanark.

Under a former government, at least one or two of the hon. members opposite may recall, these grants were about $80,000. Today, they are around the $750,000 mark.

Just where would our municipalities be were help of this kind not forthcoming? We have more schools and better schools. We have well qualified teachers who are drawing adequate salaries. In this field alone, we have a record which would be a credit to any administration.

Mr. Singer: You have not any credits, only debts!

Mr. Gomme: Painful though it may be, I must direct the attention of the House to the doings of a government of another political persuasion. One of the first acts of the government of that day was to stop work on the construction of a hospital and school in the town of Smiths Falls. Preliminary work had been done but it was stopped, men were thrown out of work, unused materials were carted away and sold.

At this time there was just one Ontario institution for mental defectives, namely, the one at Orillia—hopelessly overcrowded and with a waiting list of 2,500 people.

Yes, the government of that day in its 9 years' reign did something to expand hospital accommodation for the defectives. They built a frame shack for 60 patients on the Orillia grounds. You can see it standing there today—a fitting monument to its ineptitude.

When the Progressive-Conservative government again took over, one of their very first acts was to acquire a new hospital site in Smiths Falls, yes—

Mr. Singer: Give the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) some money and let him do the job.

Mr. Gomme: Yes, I forgot to tell you that that former government sold the old site. There stands today on that site one of the finest institutions of its kind in the whole world.

A huge hospital, caring for over 2,000 patients, mostly children and more than 900 faithful and efficient people are devoted to the care and the training of the patients in this hospital and school. Here I am going to suggest for the consideration of the hon. Minister of Health and the hon. Minister of Public Works, that I understand consideration is being given to constructing a 500-bed addition essentially for the care of children of very tender years.

Such a project would help round out the facilities of a great institution and would be a forward step in the problem of giving adequate accommodation for the unfortunate segment of our population. Perhaps a programme there would solve the winter work programme, if not this winter, certainly next—

Laughter.

Mr. Gomme: —assuming that unemployment still troubles our economy. I learned from the member-elect for Temiskaming something of the pleasure of the people of northern Ontario in that this administration has not only provided an 800-bed hospital for mental cases at Port Arthur, but has also duplicated this institution at North Bay.

I need scarcely add that provision of mental hospital accommodation for northern Ontario was long overdue, and the great institutional programme launched in this part of the province is something which will always stand to the credit of this administration. The hon. Ministers, who I have just mentioned, also deserve the warmest commendation for the establishment of a 1,250-bed mental hospital and school at Cedar Springs.

Clapping.

Mr. Gomme: Then in the east, we have acquired large extensions to the mental hospitals at Brockville and Kingston, institutions long-established and carrying on a magnificent work.

Turning for a moment to the subject of highways, it is of special interest to us from the east, that the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) is tomorrow opening the initial section of the Queensway, a 10-mile expressway, cutting through the heart of Ottawa and the first project of its kind in Canada.

Mr. Singer: What about highway No. 401?

Mr. Gomme: Just a minute. The section being opened tomorrow is the easterly part of the project which, when finished, will cost $35 million. At the same time, the hon. Minister is opening 4.5 miles of a dual-lane trans-Canada highway running easterly from the eastern end of the Ottawa Queensway.

These projects, of course, are actually major portions of the trans-Canada highway. Four government bodies are concerned, namely, the government of Canada, the Ontario Department of Highways, the city of Ottawa and the national capital commission.

In Lanark, we are particularly happy over the completion of the trans-Canada highway which is bound to result in a tremendous amount of increased trade between east and west, to say nothing of the benefit to the tourist industry.

During the life of this government, The Department of Highways has spent at least $10 million on extension on King's highways, whereas in years previous to the advent of this government—

Mr. Whicher: Ten million dollars, that is not very much.

Mr. Singer: Where do you get the money, George?

Mr. Gomme: —King's highway expenditures in Lanark were $68,000. Also, during the life of this government, well over $4 million has been expended in municipal road grants, and for the construction of development roads in Lanark. I should like to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister of Highways, the condition of highway No. 29 between Carleton Place and Almonte. This highway was last paved in 1932, and is badly in need of a complete renovation job.

Interjection by Opposition: Terrible, terrible.

Mr. Gomme: At Smiths Falls a great need is an overpass where highway No. 29 crosses the railway. The level crossing here is a valley and two right-angled turns are involved. I have been urging upon the department for some time the necessity of rectifying this situation, and I sincerely hope that the work may be undertaken soon.

Another piece of construction which would be of great benefit and especially to the tourist industry, is the building of a new highway from highway No. 15 through Rideau Ferry to the town of Perth.

Mr. Singer: We will do that for you too.

Mr. Gomme: These suggestions I leave for the consideration of the hon. Minister. The development of facilities in eastern Ontario under present administration has been nothing short of fantastic.

An hon. member: Fantastic, all right.

Mr. Gomme: You like that boys? Just wait a minute, wait till you hear it. I refer to the great hydro power plants on the Ottawa river, and I need only mention a few: Des Joachims, Cheneaux and the Otto Holden. I mention also the Stuartville development on the Madawaska. Then we have coming into operation shortly the atomic energy plant at Chalk river.

Overshadowing all these developments, however, is the mighty St. Lawrence hydro development, today pouring 1.1 million horsepower into the lines of the Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Singer: What's your line now?

Mr. Gomme: The credit for this mammoth undertaking must go in the main to the hon. Prime Minister of this province—

Applause.

Mr. Gomme: —and also to the organizing ability of the late Hydro chairman, Robert Saunders.

It is of interest, I think, that right now, Hydro is installing a steam electric plant at Lakeview in Toronto area, which in output will overshadow the St. Lawrence development and which indeed, will be one of the largest power plants in the world.

Another item of special interest to the east is the development of the St. Lawrence Parkway under the direction of a commission of which the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Auld) is a distinguished member.

There is no doubt, that as time goes on, the driveway from the Bay of Quinte to the Quebec border will become one of the beauty spots of Ontario.

I think I should say a word for our civil servants who are responsible for many courtesies extended to us as members of this assembly.

No civil service will ever attain all its ambitions, but this I would point out; the members of our civil service today have more security, tenure of office, better salaries, better pensions, better working conditions in general, than they have ever had before.

An hon. member: You have got more of them, I will say that!

Mr. Gomme: If a grievance or an alleged injustice appears, there is every opportunity for appeal. This government, I suggest, has always been a fair, just and humane employer, which is indeed as it should be.

Forty-six years ago, Mr. Speaker, a great Conservative Prime Minister of Ontario stood before an audience which jammed Massey Hall in this city of Toronto. He had but recently emerged from the dark valley, which a few months later he was to enter for the last time. But 6 days after his Massey Hall appearance, Sir James Whitney was to be returned to office with a huge majority.

Sir James Whitney said in part:

The people of Ontario have given me their confidence in full measure, heaped up, pressed down, shaken together and running over.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Amen.

Mr. Gomme: I continue the quotation:

And as long as my renewed health and strength are vouchsafed to me, I shall be at their disposal, and endeavour to give them the same faithful service that I have given in the past.

Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege to serve under the present hon. Prime Minister of this province who heads this government and leads the party to which I belong, to have occupied his high post for a longer time than his distinguished predecessor whom I have just mentioned. For 23 years as a private member in Opposition, as Provincial Treasurer, as Minister of Mines, as Prime Minister, he has served Ontario with distinction and devotion.

Banging on desks.

Mr. Gomme: And, like Sir James Whitney, he can say:

The people of this province have given me their confidence in full measure, heaped up, pressed down, shaken together and running over.

Mr. Gordon: Amen.

Mr. Gomme: In 7 general elections, the people of Victoria riding have expressed their confidence in the man who heads this government, and leads this party. In 3 general elections and 20 by-elections, the people of this great province have given this same leader their confidence in full measure, heaped up, pressed down, shaken together and running over. It is an honour to me to serve under his leadership and direction. It is an honour the people of Lanark that I am permitted to make this address today.

Mr. Singer: The second choice!

Mr. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a newly elected member of this assembly, I am deeply appreciative of the opportunity of seconding the motion of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme) for the adoption of the address graciously presented by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario (Mr. Mackay).

It is an honour to me and to the people of the riding I am privileged to represent.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, may I express to you my thanks for the many courtesies already extended to me as a very junior member of this Legislature. Out of your long experience in many capacities in this House, you have guided and assisted me in many ways. These courtesies are something I shall always remember.

I am sure that every hon. member of this House joins me in expressing regret at the passing of my predecessor, the late George Johnston, who for 17 years represented the riding of Simcoe Centre in this honourable body.

Quiet, courteous, modest and retiring by nature, the stature of George Johnston in his whole community is evidenced by the fact that for 17 years the people who knew him best honoured him by choosing him as their representative. In 6 successful general elections, he was the Progressive-Conservative candidate in Simcoe Centre. On each occasion, he was elected by a steadily increasing majority.

George Johnston was, as I have said, a quiet man, modest and unassuming. He was a successful farmer and manufacturer, respected in his business endeavours, faithful and attending to his legislative duties, and always mindful of the welfare of his constituents regardless of their party affiliation. In the full sense of the term, George Johnston was a good citizen who will be missed by all who knew him best. I am sure that the sympathy of all of us is extended in the fullest measure to the members of the family who survive him.

It was not my privilege to enjoy the acquaintanceship of Mr. A. Robert Herbert, who represented the great northern riding of Temiskaming in this assembly, from 1951 until his sudden, and much regretted, death in recent months.

During the past days, I have heard many of my colleagues express their profound regrets at Mr. Herbert's passing. His election to this House in 3 successful general elections indicates the warm esteem in which he was held in his constituency. It is obvious that he was a faithful servant.

I know, also, that he was an effective member of the Ontario Northland Railway commission. His sudden and totally unexpected death at only 46 years of age, was I am sure, a shock to the hon. members of this House and a very great grief to his widow and to the young children who survive him. I am sure that our sympathy is extended in the fullest degree to the widow of the deceased member and to his other surviving relatives.

We have learned, in recent days, that it is the intention of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, accompanied by her distinguished husband, Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, to visit certain of her Dominions within the Commonwealth during the coming year. My understanding is that Her Majesty will visit both India and Pakistan.

Her Majesty's visit of last year on this side of the Atlantic made a profound impression on her subjects in this Dominion, and all the people of our powerful neighbour and ally, the United States.

The monarchy is the link which more than any other, binds together the Commonwealth countries with their diverse races and religions, which constitute this great congress of nations.

We rejoice with Her Majesty and her distinguished husband in the birth, in recent months, of a second son. It is, I am sure, the hope of all of us that Her Majesty will again honour us with her gracious presence in the not too distant future.

We all remember, with pleasure and gratitude, the visit in recent years of Her Majesty's sister, Her Royal Highness, the Princess Margaret. Her visit to our province is commemorated by the Princess Margaret Hospital standing a few blocks from this building. It is one of the best equipped institutions for cancer research and treatment in the whole of America.

Our solicitations and good wishes are extended to Her Royal Highness on occasion of her marriage to Mr. Antony Armstrong-Jones. May all happiness attend their union.

Needless to say, I was happy to be chosen by the people of Simcoe Centre to complete the term of my late friend George Johnston. I was particularly happy in that the people of Simcoe Centre, once again, evidenced their loyalty to Simcoe Centre's most distinguished son, the hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost). In the campaign which I entered on September 29 last, I believe that almost every hon. member of Her Majesty's Opposition in this House visited Simcoe Centre to put their weight behind their candidate. Their, at times hysterical, efforts, their irresponsible and varying promises, and the weight of men, money and advertising, which they threw into this campaign, looked rather paltry when compared with the solid record of accomplishment which we were able to place before our people.

I am familiar with that record, particularly as it applies to Simcoe Centre. The people of Simcoe Centre are familiar with it and it is obvious that they registered their votes accordingly.

I am not going to deal with the campaign of the CCF or the New Party or whatever the name may be. There is very little interest in socialism in the community where I live. It is a discredited political philosophy wherever it has been tried, and I am sure that the people of this great province will profit from the history of socialism and its failures, to the point where we shall never have to suffer under a socialist government.

I propose now to speak very briefly of our experience in Simcoe Centre under this government, and may I add that the record of the present administration in my own riding is one which has been duplicated all over Ontario.

We have, in the Simcoe area generally, one of the great tourist centres of Ontario. There is no more popular resort area than that surrounding Lake Simcoe, Couchiching. These beautiful, sheltered, inland lakes, located only a few miles from Toronto, with its 1.5 million people, are increasingly popular.

Then we have the Georgian Bay area with Wasaga Beach, to mention only one of several. Good highways are essential in making the most of these great natural resources. Thanks to the programme of this administration, good highways have been built, and are being built in a programme never before remotely approached.

The northerly extension of highway No. 400 to Coldwater is a tremendous relief to tourist traffic in an extremely popular vacation area.

Throughout the summer season, the weekend traffic is extremely heavy on both highway No. 11 and highway No. 400, but just consider what the situation would be had this administration failed to push highway No. 400 through to completion. It was encouraging to all of us who live in tourist areas to learn, from an address recently delivered at the meeting of the Canadian Good Roads Association by Deputy Minister of Highways, W. J. Fulton, that highway No. 400 will eventually be extended into the Muskoka tourist and resort area.

The widening of highway No. 11 has given a very real measure of relief and has added greatly to the safety factor.

I must congratulate the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) on his recently announced plans to make highway No. 11 a dual-lane highway from Bradford to Fennell's Corners, a distance of 8 miles. This work, I understand, is scheduled for completion in 1961. There have been many serious and fatal accidents on highway No. 11 between Bradford and Barrie because of the numerous hills and valleys. I have no doubt that the work now proposed will eliminate many of the danger spots.

The installation of traffic lights at the intersection of highways Nos. 27 and 93 is another safety measure which is much appreciated.

The paving of highway No. 88, from highway No. 27 east to Bradford, is another improvement long needed and amply proving its worth.

Before I leave the subject of highways, there is one matter which I should like to submit for the earnest consideration of the hon. Minister of Highways.

At Bradford in the centre of the town highway No. 11 takes a right-angled turn. This highway remains and will always remain a very heavily travelled one, especially in the summer season and notwithstanding the heavy traffic which uses highway No. 400. I would like to suggest the installation of a traffic light at the corner I have mentioned, that is at the intersection of highways Nos. 11 and 88. As matters stand, it is often both difficult and dangerous for pedestrians to cross at this corner.

I believe that the installation of a light is justified and it would indeed be welcomed by our people.

Even with highway No. 400 in full operation, and with the great improvements on highway No. 11, we are going to need more north and south highways. Our people in the resort areas were very glad to hear the recent announcement as to the construction of a new route, to be numbered 404, and to lead from the easterly part of the Toronto metropolitan area to the areas lying east of Lake Simcoe. I understand that construction of this new, dual-lane highway will be geared to the completion of the Don Mills Parkway in eastern Toronto.

In 1958-1959 according to figures I have been able to obtain, the expenditure on King's highways in Simcoe Centre was, in round numbers, $2.6 million. In the previous year it was $1.7 million, and the year before it was $1.9 million.

While comparisons at this late date perhaps do not mean too much, I might mention that back in 1943, under a government of another complexion, the King's highways expenditures in Simcoe Centre were just $129,000.

Again, municipal road subsidies in the riding were $590,000 in 1959, $550,000 in 1958, and $567,000 in the previous year. These subsidies are paid to all municipalities—cities, towns and incorporated villages, as well as counties and townships. Recognition of the road and street problems of cities, towns and villages, was something left to this government but ignored by their predecessors.

The construction of development roads is also worthy of commendation. Such expenditures in the riding I have the honour to represent have amounted to nearly $800,000 in the last dozen years. They involve some 20 different projects.

I might mention also two other much needed pieces of construction. First is a new bridge over the Nottawasaga river along with construction of a new road to connect highways Nos. 26 and 92. Second, a new bridge at Atherley is about to be built as an improvement on highway No. 12, which here is a part of the trans-Canada route.

Our borders are dotted by some 14 tourist and information centres which are doing most useful work in helping visitors who are entering Ontario. However, Ontario is a big province, and the tourist often needs considerable guidance, once he heads into our great tourist areas.

I congratulate the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) and the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) in establishing what I believe is the first inland tourist and information centre located south of Barrie. From what I can learn from the sketches of the project, I am sure that this centre will be completely modern and thoroughly well equipped. It will be a credit to the departments concerned, and it will be invaluable in guiding tourists not only in the Simcoe area but also those who are heading for Muskoka, Parry Sound and other vacation areas.

Here, I should like to say a word about our provincial parks. Just a few years ago we had 6 provincial parks. Now we have more than 100. Up in my part of the country we have Wasaga Beach; one of the most famous and heavily patronized resort areas in Canada.

This has recently been constituted a provincial park and is to be fitted with all necessary conveniences—parking and trailer areas—tables and benches—electricity—and all the other amenities found in such resorts. The local municipalities have done their best for many years to supervise Wasaga Beach, but they will welcome relief from the burdens they have hitherto borne.

One of the outstanding contributions lies in the support now afforded respecting homes for the aged. These homes were formerly municipal enterprises except for those operated by philanthropic organizations. The province helped out by a grant of 10 cents per inmate per day.

All that has been changed. Today, a major part of construction and maintenance costs has been assumed by the province with some help from Ottawa. The result is that we have new homes and better homes all over Ontario.

Plans are already completed for a 50-bed extension at the Penetanguishene home for the aged, serving Simcoe county. In these new and modernized homes we have husband and wife accommodation. We have ample dietary arrangements, special care for the ill or infirm. More than this, we are encouraging the people of the community to take a lively interest in those who are spending their declining years in surroundings which are superior to anything we have previously known in this field. We are trying to make these elderly folks feel they are still a part of the community.

For many years The Department of Health has operated the Ontario Hospital at Penetang. Recently, the accommodation for the so-called criminally insane has been doubled so that there are now quarters for 300 of these unfortunates. The hospital proper cares for about 450 patients. While the main building is old, it is well maintained and it is staffed by capable physicians and kindly, well-trained nurses and attendants.

I suggest to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) that in his vast plans of Ontario Hospital expansion he might give serious thought to enlarging at Penetanguishene. The site is both historic and beautiful and there is ample room for expansion. This thought I leave with the hon. Minister.

Before saying a word about education, I should like to mention Christian Island, where some 400 or 500 of our Indian friends have their abode. The island, as most of you know, has always been an Indian reservation.

Educational facilities have been recently stepped up by the Indian Affairs Department through construction of a new school.

I am fortunate in enjoying the friendship of Chief Louis Jackson who gives outstanding leadership to his people on this reservation.

Our Indian citizens are well mindful of the fact that they acquired the right to vote from this government, and that they now enjoy full citizenship insofar as it is within the power of this Legislature to confer it. These rights they appreciate to the full, and they enjoy a new dignity so long delayed but finally acquired.

Important though it is, the aid given to education by this administration is not confined to finances. This year the province is devoting over $200 million to education grants. It is giving aid on an ever-expanding scale. It is helping support, I think, all universities instead of 4 or 5 as formerly.

In the fiscal year ended March 31 last, education grants in Simcoe Centre were $1.4 million. This is more than 25 times as much as there were under a former government—something for our hon. friends of the Opposition to think about. I am not, of course, forgetting about population growth, inflation, new schools, better teachers, salaries and all the rest of it.

The teacher shortage has been met and overcome. Something for which I should congratulate the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts). This situation has been remedied through various means.

I might mention the construction of new teachers' colleges in eastern Toronto and New Toronto, Hamilton and London. Another is being established at the Lakehead and still another is planned for the Windsor area.

The crash training programmes are now largely being eliminated and the teacher supply has increased to the point where higher and still higher standards can be imposed. I understand that for the future, in all schools of 300 pupils or more, the principal will now be required to have at least a Bachelor of Arts degree.

One feature with which we happily do not have to contend in this province of Ontario is that of segregation or integration. Adjacent to my home is the great Holland marsh—by far, I should say, the most highly productive area in all Canada. A few years ago this whole area of thousands of acres was what was deemed worthless swamp. Thanks to the vision of a few people, thanks to modern engineering, and thanks more than all to the hard, honest work of a great many people, the Holland marsh has become the scene of livelihood for many of our finest citizens.

Here, some 3,500 people of dozens of nationalities live together in peace and harmony. They work together. They worship in their various churches. Their children attend the same schools. They have a solid community spirit. Given a chance, yes, half a chance, it shows what the New Canadian can accomplish in this land of opportunity. I am indeed proud to number so many of these people among my friends and supporters.

We are not, however, without our forest resources in Simcoe Centre. We have 30,000 acres under reforestation. One of our greatest assets is the Midhurst forest station. Then we have the Henry forest planned in 1923.

At Midhurst we have the popular Springwater park being steadily developed. All these projects are great assets—today—and for the future.

One of the most acute problems facing our governments today is that of finance. The federal government has enormous revenue sources; income tax, corporations tax, customs and excise and numerous other fields.

Our municipalities have the fruitful field of real estate taxation. There are, however, limits to which this field can be cultivated. Just ask any farmer or home-owner.

Provincially we have the federal subvention. We have gasoline tax, succession duties, a corporations tax, liquor profits and various lesser sources of revenue. But provincial fields have their definite limitations. In addition, the province today contributes to the municipalities by way of grants-in-aid, on a scale never before contemplated.

Today this province is paying out to the municipalities $345 million a year, or 45 per cent of the whole provincial budget. To each $1 raised municipally, the province is adding 50 cents.

Provincial grants to the municipalities are 19 times as much as they were when the government of this province was entrusted to the representatives of the Progressive-Conservative party.

One may ask whether with the ever-increasing demands for money, provincially and municipally, there is one very simple answer, aside from inflation, higher wages, higher material costs, higher everything.

In the last 10 years Ontario's population has increased over 1.5 million. That is just about equivalent to the population of the whole of metropolitan Toronto.

Now look at the public services demanded by a population increase of this size. Think of the facilities in terms of homes, streets, sidewalks, schools, stores, churches, hospitals, water supply and waste disposal. Is it any wonder that our governments, provincially and municipally, are hard pressed?

Ottawa, in effect, has said in recent days it can do no better for the provinces. Ottawa, for one thing, has to lay out $2 billion a year or thereabouts for national defence. But are we getting value for these billions? I do not know.

But this I do know. There are many elements in national defence aside from armed men, cannon, warships, missiles and so on.

We must have an educated people, a younger generation skilled in the sciences. We must have a strong and healthy people, hence an ample supply of doctors, dentists, nurses, along with abundant hospital accommodation.

We must have an adequate transportation system. We must have a healthy system of secondary industry, not stifled by excessive taxation. We must have an educated generation.

It follows, therefore, that a multitude of elements—very many of them provincial and municipal responsibilities—enter into the problem of national defence which in turn is the problem of retaining our traditional and democratic freedoms. This is something for Ottawa to remember.

And before leaving this subject, is it not somewhat absurd that British Columbia whose government declares that it has no public debt—that oil-rich Alberta which has almost no public debt—that Saskatchewan which is able to launch a medical care scheme—is it not absurd that these provinces should be treated as have-not provinces—and at whose expense? This is not hard to figure when we realize that this province supplies Ottawa with one-half of its enormous revenue.

I commend—I am sure every hon. member of this House will commend, with no hesitation, the fight being put up by the hon. Prime Minister of this province for a reasonable and equitable division of the tax dollar.

Likewise, I feel that the efforts of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), in co-operation with the Attorneys-General of our sister provinces to provide for constitutional changes without reference to Westminster, will also meet with general approval. Canada has grown up; surely Canada is fully qualified to amend the Canadian constitution without reference to any other parliamentary authority.

Here, I should like to make a suggestion for the consideration of the hon. Attorney-General. I know the hon. Minister is giving consideration to the establishment of new quarters for the Ontario police college.

The city of Barrie, I suggest, is a logical site for the location of this institution. All facilities are available—water, light, sewage disposal and streets, with a network of provincial highways serving the area. A suitable building site can be acquired, perhaps on the shores of the bay. There is ample hotel and restaurant accommodation. Again, the location is a central one, reached readily from every part of Ontario.

Barrie, I scarcely need add, presents all the traditional features associated with a college town. Hence, in selecting a site for the police college, I feel that Barrie has everything to offer and I earnestly request the serious consideration of the hon. Minister in coming to his decision in this important matter.

No head of a government can be expected to hit a home run every time he goes to bat, but I suggest that the hon. Prime Minister of this province not only has a good batting average but he is also a fine team player. His faith in the future of Ontario, his ability to work through to an objective, and his flair for delegating authority are all factors which can well be a lesson to all of us.

We have heard a lot from the Opposition about what they would do if given the opportunity. One thing, of course, which they never discuss is the cost. But rather let us look for a moment at a few of the highlights of accomplishment of this administration.

Education grants have increased from $8 million to more than $200 million a year under this government.

As I have said before, we now have over 100 provincial parks where formerly we had but 6.

The capacity of Hydro has experienced a threefold increase, representing a tremendous undertaking. We have new power developments in the north. The Ottawa river powers have been developed. The St. Lawrence development has been completed. Right now there is being built, adjacent to Toronto, the Lakeview steam-electric plant, probably the world's largest. It will deliver more than our share of the St. Lawrence project. Up at Kincardine, Hydro is building our first commercial atomic-electric plant.

We have new mental hospitals—at Port Arthur, North Bay and Smiths Falls, while another is nearing completion near Chatham. There have been constructed huge extensions to our mental institutions at Brockville, Kingston and Hamilton.

We have attained the lowest tubercular death rate in all Canada—2.9 for each 100,000 population.

We have become during the life of this government one of the world's leading producers of iron ore.

Our trans-Ontario highway from Windsor to the Quebec border, some 500 miles, is nearing completion—years ahead of schedule. This great thoroughway, I suggest, is as important to Ontario as was construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Canada.

Our section of the trans-Canada highway is just about completed.

Our municipalities are getting better roads, streets and bridges, in large part because this government is aiding our municipal governments in this field, to the extent of $75 million a year.

Our Department of Public Works is carrying on the biggest programme in its history, keeping abreast of the demand for facilities needed because of our increasing population.

To me it is an honour and a privilege to follow the leadership which we are given in this province. In 3 general elections and in 20 by-elections the people of Ontario have said to the hon. Prime Minister of this province and the leader of the Progressive-Conservative party, "Well done, and carry on."

I do not think they are likely soon to change their minds.

Again, I appreciate the honour of addressing the hon. members of the House on this occasion.

I now second the motion of the hon. member for Lanark for the adoption of the address graciously presented by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. leader of the Opposition

(Mr. Wintermeyer) I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, it was my intention to give to the House an outline of the important matters we would be dealing with next week. But I think my good friend the acting leader, the hon. member for Brant, would agree that, in view of the present decimated condition of the official Opposition due to the "Martin dinner," that I should postpone that till 10.30 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.00 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 25, 1960

10 O'CLOCK A.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome students from the following schools: In the east gallery, Peterborough teachers' college; in the west gallery St. Michael's choir school, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. J. R. Simonett, from the select committee appointed to prepare the list of members to compose the standing committees of the House, presents the committee's report as follows: The committee recommends that the standing committees ordered by the House be composed as follows:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Carruthers, Chapple, Connell, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Hanna, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Letherby, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Myers, McNeil, Nixon, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Whicher, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Worton, Wren—49.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 7 members.

COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION

Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Brunelle, Bryden, Bukator, Davis, Gisborn, Gomme, Gordon, Hall, Haskett, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morin, McNeil, Newman, Oliver, Parry, Reaume, Rollins, Root, Rowntree, Sandercock, Simonett, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, White, Wintermeyer—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 5 members.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

Messrs. Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Boyer, Brunelle, Bryden, Carruthers, Collings, Cowling, Davis, Davison, Downer, Dunlop, Edwards (Perth), Evans, Gould, Guindon, Hamilton, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Morin, Morrow, Myers, McNeil, Newman, Parry, Phillips, Price, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Singer, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Thompson, Trotter, Troy, Whicher, White, Wintermeyer, Wren—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 7 members.

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY

Messrs. Brunelle, Bryden, Bukator, Carruthers, Chapple, Collings, Davis, Gomme, Guindon, Hamilton, Haskett, Janes, Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Myers, McNeil, Oliver, Phillips, Reaume, Rollins, Root, Simonett, Singer, Sopha, Stewart, Thomas, Whicher, White, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Worton—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 5 members.

COMMITTEE ON GAME AND FISH

Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Beckett, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Chapple, Cowling, Davis, Davison, Edwards (Wentworth), Fullerton, Gisborn, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lewis, Lyons, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morningstar, Morrow, Myers, McNeil, Newman, Nixon, Noden, Parry, Price, Rollins, Simonett, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Troy, Whicher, White, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Wren—49.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 7 members.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT COMMISSIONS

Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Beckett, Brunelle, Bryden, Carruthers, Davis, Edwards (Perth), Grossman, Guindon, Hall, Janes, Johnston (Carleton), Lawrence, Lewis, MacDonald, MacNaughton, Morrow, McNeil, Nixon, Oliver, Parry, Phillips, Price, Reaume, Sandercock, Singer, Sopha, Sutton, Thomas, Trotter, Whicher, White, Whitney, Wintermeyer, Wren—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 5 members.

COMMITTEE ON HEALTH AND WELFARE

Messrs. Auld, Belisle, Boyer, Brunelle, Brown, Bukator, Carruthers, Chapple, Cowling, Davis, Davison, Downer, Dunlop, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Evans, Gomme, Guindon, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Morin, Morningstar, McNeil, Newman, Noden, Oliver, Parry, Phillips, Price, Rollins, Root, Sandercock, Simonett, Spence, Stewart, Sutton, Thomas, Thompson, Trotter, Troy, White, Wintermeyer, Worton—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 7 members.

COMMITTEE ON HIGHWAYS AND HIGHWAY SAFETY

Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Carruthers, Collins, Cowling, Davis, Edwards (Perth), Edwards (Wentworth), Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Gordon, Grossman, Guindon, Hall, Hamilton, Hanna, Innes, Janes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Letherby, Lewis, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Manley, Morrow, Noden, Price, Reaume, Rollins, Root, Simonett, Singer, Stewart, Sutton, Thomas, Thompson, White, Wintermeyer, Worton, Wren—50.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 7 members.

COMMITTEE ON LABOUR

Messrs. Auld, Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Cass, Collings, Daley, Davis, Davison, Downer, Edwards (Wentworth), Gisborn, Gomme, Grossman, Hamilton, Hanna, Haskett, Lavergne, Lawrence, Macaulay, MacDonald, Maloney, Morningstar, Myers, Newman, Reaume, Rowntree, Sopha, Trotter, Ward-rope, White, Wintermeyer, Worton, Wren, Yaremko—35.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 5 members.

COMMITTEE ON LANDS AND FORESTS

Messrs. Allen (Middlesex South), Beckett, Belanger, Belisle, Boyer, Brown, Brunelle, Bryden, Bukator, Carruthers, Chapple, Downer, Evans, Fullerton, Gisborn, Gomme, Gordon, Guindon, Hamilton, Haskett, Innes, Johnston (Parry Sound), Johnston (Carleton), Lavergne, Lawrence, Letherby, Lyons, MacDonald, Mackenzie, MacNaughton, Morningstar, Morrow, Myers, McNeil, Noden, Phillips, Price, Rollins, Sandercock, Simonett, Sopha, Spence, Sutton, Thompson, Troy, Wardrope, White, Wintermeyer, Wren—49.

The quorum of the said committee to consist of 7 members.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could say a word about that report. I was a member of the committee and it is certainly not my intention to criticize hon. members who were made members of the various committees.

However, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the possibility that, in future, there not be as many on each committee.

For example, I think that we all, myself included, sometimes like to have our names mentioned as perhaps a member of the agricultural committee, or a member of private bills, or government committees, because we like to see our name as a member of such committee. We may like to give the impression to our constituents back home that we are doing a whole lot of work.

With this in mind, I am afraid that perhaps we are sacrificing some of the efficiency we might have, by having smaller committees. All of us know in this honourable House, that while we have 50 or 60 members on various committees; in reality only a few turn up.

It is not by any means the fault of all hon. members if they do not turn up, because some of us are in so many committees and there may be several running at the same time, making it absolutely impossible to be in two or three places at once.

As an example, on the private bills committee this year and last, we had a total number of 60 on the committee out of a House of 98. Yet the quorum required to duly constitute the same committee is only 7 members. In the agriculture and in the education committees, we have 50 members, yet a quorum of 7 only is required.

Last year, I noticed that in some of the committees on which I was a member, and which might not have been too interesting, there would perhaps be only a handful of members present, in spite of the fact that there were probably 50 hon. members on the committee.

Nevertheless, where there was something very interesting going on, all the hon. members would attend. As a result, there were so many present that some of us could not get a word in edgeways. Therefore I—

An hon. member: That is bad.

Mr. Whicher: I am not suggesting that this is bad, at all, but I suggest that in the future we might take into consideration the possibility of reducing the size of these committees, so that perhaps all hon. members would be a member of say 3 committees.

By doing so we would be much more efficient.

We would be able to attend the committees to which we belong, and we would be able to really study the subject on hand. As I said, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly not my intention to criticize the report that has been brought in. As a matter of fact, as I said, I was a member of that committee and I agree with it. But I bring this up as a suggestion of something that might be done in the future.

Applause.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, might I say that the select committee on which sat the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) and the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) did not have quite that view. I do not think my hon. friend has discussed the matter, perhaps, with his colleagues who sat on the committee—

Mr. Whicher: I have not discussed it with anyone.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: —but in any event, I would suggest that if this matter is to be debated, perhaps the proper time would be when the report is being considered in the House.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) whether it is the intention to continue along the same lines as last year, having all committees work on Wednesday?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I think so, yes, once we get going. We were planning to have the arrangement based on meetings on Wednesdays if that is agreeable, but I would like the House to adjourn on Wednesday due to certain things I am going to mention.

I would like to say that we can discuss the question of committee membership when the committee report is being discussed. The matter has been considered over very many years and, as a matter of fact, in the end, the large committee has carried the day for the reason that it gives hon. members the opportunity of sitting on those committees in which they are interested.

In a very great many cases, of course, these committees consider routine matters. But let me give this example. This year it is proposed to give hon. members a complete insight into the working of hospital insurance. Previously, some 3 or 4 years ago, we had the same committee consider the matter in a way by which hon. members of the House could ask questions in connection with the formation of the plan.

I suppose there are probably 50 or 60 members on that committee, and when such questions arise, the hon. members would want to be there.

By limiting the committee to, say, 15, there may be some matter of efficiency involved, but nevertheless, we do not get the broad viewpoint of the hon. members of the House.

As far as I can recollect, this matter has been a consideration for 20 years. However, as I say, the point my hon. friend mentioned has great validity; and although it has been brought up before, it can be discussed at some later time.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE HOURS OF WORK AND VACATIONS WITH PAY ACT

Mr. R. Gisborn moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Hours of Work and Vacations With Pay Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE LABOUR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. D. C. MacDonald moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Labour Relations Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE FAIR ACCOMMODATION PRACTICES ACT, 1954

Mr. Gisborn moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Fair Accommodation Practices Act, 1954."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to give the hon. members of the House, subject, of course to their approval, the programme for this coming week.

First of all, on December 1 and 2—that is Thursday and Friday—there is a conference of provincial premiers at Quebec, called by hon. Mr. LeSage, the invitation to which I accepted some time ago. With the permission and acquiescence of the hon. members of the House, I propose to be there.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): We would not want the hon. Prime Minister to miss it under any circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The conference is on the first and second, so that I have to crave hon. members' indulgence to enable us to do certain other things on the first, second and third days of the week. This does not infer that my presence here on the first and the second is indispensable to the operation of this assembly. However, I do like to be near, to consider certain matters that hon. members bring up.

I would propose to the House, therefore, that on Monday we should consider resolution No. 1, standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Sutton) which was discussed and brought up by some of the hon. members of the Opposition on Monday. After the House meets at 3 o'clock, I think it would be advisable if hon. members determined to have a night sitting on that occasion, so the House would have the opportunity of fully discussing the matter of employment and unemployment, which I think can clearly be discussed within the terms of that resolution. I am not anxious to restrict any debate on the matter, which I consider to be of the highest importance, and is something in which I myself, along with other hon. members of the House, have a very intense interest indeed. I think it is desirable that the House should not restrict the matter. Therefore, I propose that we have a night session on that occasion.

This would enable us to go ahead with the Throne debate in the ordinary course the following day, which is customary and traditional in this House.

In connection with the order which is on the paper, the consideration of the report of the select committee in matters pertaining to the transaction of business of the Legislature, I propose, sir, that the House can deal with this on consent, without an amendment of the rules. I think there are many things in this report that we might try out here in the House, without formally amending the rules at this time.

I think the amendment might take place later in the session when we have had the opportunity of seeing how these things work out. I am going to look at the report over the week-end and see if there are certain matters there that we might put into effect. I will put into effect the 10.30 sittings on Monday night. We will do that by agreement to see how the matter works out. As a matter of fact, I have some feelings myself on the matter. I have always been very doubtful as to the restriction of the time that hon. members could speak in this House.

Applause.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Frankly, I have doubted that myself. I say that in all respect to the committee. I quite realize the reasons, but I myself dislike putting an hon. member up against a deadline. After all, some speak faster than others, some are more adept in the House—

Mr. Nixon: Some read every word.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I may say that I have no objections myself to the reading of speeches. I have—

Mr. Nixon: Make them a lot shorter then.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, not only that, but after all, hon. members elected to this House are not professional conversationalists or speech makers. Very many of them are not, and if they go to a lot of trouble to get a speech ready to present to the House and it has their views, I do not know why we should make it hard for them. However, I think that we can use discretion in the use of the time of the House. I think that is common sense.

I would say to my hon. friend from Brant that I would never like to have him limited to 40 minutes or any other time. I not only want to see him, I want to hear him! I do not see why he should be limited.

However, if we are going to get into certain procedures it may be necessary to do that, but I would prefer to have things a bit more free-wheeling.

As a matter of fact, in a day we can discuss a very great many things, if there is discretion in the use of time and again I mention what a great old friend of some hon. members here, who has passed along, Fraser Hunter, a member of this House, liked to assert, that hon. members should never speak for more than 20 minutes. He said that in the ordinary course that is a sufficient compass.

Now, he was a great expert on that, and my hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) knows that Fraser Hunter obtained a great deal of space in the papers because of his very refreshing remarks which he put in a very small compass.

However, again with just that observation, we can proceed. I will look over this report and see what the House can do—what the House might implement by agreement—and see how it works out. If it does not work out, then hon. members can take other expedients. That is the position for next week.

I would propose that the House discuss the matter of unemployment on Monday and that if it is necessary and desirable we can have a night session. We can make the necessary arrangements in any event.

The Throne Speech debate will commence on Tuesday, and then hon. members can continue with either the Throne Speech debate or the unemployment matter again on Wednesday.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister mentioned that December 1 and 2 were very important days. I think that December 5 is also an important day in the administration of the affairs of the local municipalities, that is election day in most of the local municipalities.

I am quite sure that most hon. members would wish to exercise their democratic right and record their vote in favour of the person of their choice.

I wondered if the hon. Prime Minister had given some consideration to the thought that we might adjourn the sitting on that day as quite a number of hon. members, I presume, would be absent on that occasion.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend did suggest that to me, but I hesitate to leave out a day in the sittings of this House. My hon. friend can vote in the morning, as I can, and most hon. members can. I think that for those who are away for that reason, and I think it is a very justifiable one, we could, perhaps, try to make arrangements in the business of the House to accommodate them, and hon. members know this. Still, all of the voting days are not on December 5—

An hon. member: That is right, that is right.

Mr. G. W. Parry (Kent West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that December 5 is an important day. I shall have been married 51 years on that day.

Applause.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to address a question to the hon. Minister of Labour, notice of which I have already given to you. I will read the question as I have submitted it to you.

What steps if any does the government plan to take to insure that, in cases where provision is made in collective agreements or otherwise for Christmas day and New Year's day to be observed as statutory holidays with pay, the employees concerned will not be deprived of such benefits by reason of the fact that these holidays occur on Sundays this year?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can answer the question put by the hon. member. It is my understanding that it would be necessary for the federal government to declare whether or not the holiday, falling on a certain day, should be held on another day. I do not think that comes under the jurisdiction of my department, and I do know that, in many agreements as negotiated between management and labour, there are various types of agreements.

Some agreements only call for maybe 4 statutory holidays a year, others 6, others 8, the full limit. I think that it should be so stated in these agreements whether or not a holiday falling on a Sunday should be held on a Monday and paid for.

However, I presume it is a question of paying for the holiday that is of concern to the hon. member. I do not think I can help on this question.

Mr. Bryden: Can I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? I would like to ask if the government would give consideration to issuing a proclamation declaring Monday, December 26 and Monday, January 2, to be statutory holidays?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I point out to my hon. friend that I do not think there is any power vested in the government to issue a proclamation of that sort. I think it is really desirable to avoid the issuance of provincial proclamations. That is a matter that more properly rests with the municipalities.

Now, there is a variety of things that come up, the minute we get into the matter of issuing proclamations. For instance, there is the day devoted to cancer and all sorts of causes that are, in themselves, highly desirable. But if proclamations were issued here, then the House would be issuing proclamations all the time. I think the best course is to leave that to the municipalities themselves as we have done and that I think has worked out very satisfactorily.

In connection with Christmas day and New Year's day, as far as the civil service is concerned, we always make arrangements that on the day before Christmas, for instance, there is the opportunity given to civil servants to get home. I think that is very desirable because of the traffic conditions and a host of other things.

When Christmas day comes in the centre of the week, say Tuesday or Wednesday or Thursday, the week is pretty well broken up, whereas when Christmas day falls on Saturday or Sunday, and particularly on Sunday, it is not.

I think that we have to take those things into balance. This year Christmas falls on Sunday, and Monday is being observed as Boxing day. It will be a holiday. I think it is also true, is it not, that we are doing that on New Year's day?

This means that this year, the civil service actually gets Mondays on both weeks. In other years, of course, it runs higher than that. Sometimes if you get Christmas on Tuesday, for instance, then it seems to be pretty hard lines to bring all our people back here on Monday. These are things that you cannot effect. You cannot deal with the situation unless you have these holidays on fixed days.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, there are 3 related questions that I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, notice of which has been given to him.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have received no notice of such questions.

Mr. MacDonald: The first question is—Interruptions by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I am wondering. We need some electronic system to get channels within the Liberal party so that they can find what their hon. members have decided in select committees.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I am not trying to stand on a technicality. I was in treasury board all morning. I received no notice, but I am still willing to try to answer the questions.

Mr. MacDonald: Is it true that the report of the Eastview inquiry was rewritten within the department before release? Secondly, if it was not rewritten, why was its release delayed for more than 3 months following the inquiry's conclusion? Thirdly, what action, if any, does the department intend to take in clarifying the eligibility for the forthcoming municipal elections of candidates who were alleged, in the inquiry for the report, to have committed indictable offences?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Well, Mr. Speaker, in the first place I do not agree that the report was rewritten, as the hon. member phrases it. I consider this a good factual, comprehensive report.

Furthermore, I should like to bring to the attention of the hon. member—and I know he has already received a copy of the report—that all through the report, on nearly every page, there are references to the transcript of evidence.

Now, the report was not drawn just for the information of the hon. member for York South. It was drawn for the information of the council and for the citizens' committee who originally, by petition, asked for the inquiry under section 15 of The Municipal Affairs Act.

Therefore, I feel that the report is a full and comprehensive one.

So far as the next part is concerned, I think it had to do with the reference to 3 months' delay. There is no delay in that sense, but I admit it did not come out as early as was expected.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that since last April we have been in the process of reorganizing the department; we have needed Mr. Yates and Mr. Blake for other matters. While it is true that in East-view this may be of great concern to them, there are other matters of great concern to other municipalities. So I have to spread the energies and the time of these men around where they can be best used.

However, when the citizens' committee came to us and said they would like it out at least a week before nomination day, a drive was put on and we got it out I think 8 days before nomination day.

So far as the other matter is concerned, the reference to those persons who might or might not be qualified where there had been allegations of indictable offences, may I say this. It was made clear in the report that, if a further investigation is required, it is left for those people to start an investigation.

The transcript of evidence is there—every word uttered at the hearing. The counsel of those people is a learned gentleman, the counsel for the citizens' committee. He has the report.

I understand the transcript of evidence has been made available to him and to his people. If they wish to take action, that is their right and they may do so.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask a supplementary question?

In the instance of the York township report, the report was submitted by the hon. Minister's department to The Attorney-General's department, and the Attorney-General took the action with regard to alleged offences. Has the department—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: There was a reference in the report.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, whether or not the report recommended that it should be referred to the hon. Attorney-General is surely a little irrelevant. I do not want to get into a debate. All I am asking the hon. Minister is this: Is it the intention of the department to pass this on to The Attorney-General's Department for action, as was done in the instance of York township, or is the hon. Minister going to leave the responsibility completely and wholly to the citizens of Eastview?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, the answer is contained right in the report where it says that if certain other matters should be investigated, they may do it in various ways, not just through the hon. Attorney-General or the Crown attorney locally.

There are many ways an investigation can be held.

Probably under section 258, provision is made whereby the council itself can ask the county court judge to have an investigation on their own and the means are set out so to do.

But I would like to point out to the hon. member for York South that the report by Judge Sweet was under section 332 of The Municipal Act, and in that report he set out certain specific things which should be referred to the hon. Attorney-General, and that was done.

That has not been the case in this particular report, but it leaves it broadly for further investigation in respect of certain matters. It might be done under one section of the Act or under another section of the Act or even under the criminal code. I do not care what the hon. member thinks. I know he sat around at the hearings like a vulture waiting to pick the corpse.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I did not see you jump to your feet to call the hon. Minister to order when he made this kind of a statement. If the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is going to be permitted to make highly political statements like this when we cannot put a few extra words in our questions, I want to know if there are two sets of rules in this House.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Well, there is one fundamental rule, Mr. Speaker, and that is I am supposed to receive notice at an available instance—

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Minister did not receive notice, he did not receive it because the Speaker's office did not send it to him. Now I cannot be responsible for inefficiencies within the government.

I just want to explain to the hon. Minister that I happened to be holidaying in the Ottawa valley, and I sat in on 3 part days of that hearing. The only thing wrong was that every hon. member of this House should have been sitting in, and they would be supporting me in trying to get this government to act in clearing up this kind of situation, instead of shirking their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: One must remember that we cannot ascribe motives to the colleagues of this House. They have no idea what the motives are and in this case, of course, I think the motive was lost.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr.

Speaker, I do not know if it is in order to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister, but I could not follow, from his answers to the hon. member for York South, whether or not the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs intends to do anything further about East-view.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, I intend to do a great deal. Time will show just what will be done.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.30 of the clock a.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE PORTABLE PENSIONS ACT, 1960-1961

Mr. K. Bryden moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Portable Pensions Act, 1960-1961."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I said on Friday that I would give consideration to some of the matters contained in the report on the order of business in the House, which is now on the order paper.

I discussed the proceedings of the House with the Clerk of the House, and I think the best procedure would be to set aside all day Wednesday for committee organization.

This has to be done, since, if we postpone it then it only delays us in another direction. I had hoped to give precedence for, say, an hour to one of the private members' motions, but with Wednesday out, it would be impossible on Wednesday. I would, however, make the proposal that perhaps we might be able to call a motion, standing in the hon. member for Oshawa's (Mr. Thomas's) name, on a Friday morning.

I think the hour-and-a-half is a bit generous. Perhaps we could set aside an hour if that time is required, and if it is not required, I would say, sir that we could then proceed with other business. This would give the hon. members of the House a reasonable time, I think, to discuss the principles of that motion. May I say, sir, that I have never been enamoured of Ottawa's methods, in which a bill is talked out. I think it is a time-wasting procedure.

It seems to me that if there has been a discussion by all who want to discuss the item, and if it is not acceptable to the government, or further consideration is required, the matter can be adjourned. I think that is a far better procedure.

After all, sir, there is no doubt that we can learn many things from Ottawa, but I think there are a lot of things they can learn from us.

I am not concerned with some of their procedures. I do not take them as a last word. As a matter of fact it seems to be that the procedures in the House of Commons are such that I would hesitate to follow them slavishly because it might lead to unconscionable time being taken in this assembly, and I do not think we want to do that. However, sir, I would just mention that—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question? He has not dealt specifically with another procedure in this House, and I am wondering whether he has given any thought to it. I refer to the procedure of adjourning the debate which is tantamount to talking it out, so that there is never an opportunity to vote on the resolution. Do I conclude correctly that the hon. Prime Minister has, upon mature consideration of this issue, concluded that henceforth we will not adjourn a debate as a means of ending it, without reaching a conclusion?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It would, of course, go down to the bottom of the list. But I say to my hon. friend that I think he will recognize that very often a bill is introduced on a certain principle. There is a bill for instance in relation to portable pensions here. I think myself that it should be considered, and I think my hon. friend would agree we are striving for an answer to that question. There is going to be a lot of deliberation given to it this session I believe.

I think it is quite unfair that the matter should come up for a vote which makes it appear that a large proportion of the House are opposed to portable pensions, when such is not the case.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Why not vote on it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend will understand that many a bill or many a resolution can be introduced that sort of implies that old question: "When did you last beat your wife," sort of thing.

We want to give the opportunity for hon. members to raise questions and discuss them in a decent and reasonable way. We are not looking in this matter for trick methods of doing anything; the point is to raise the question and to have a discussion.

I would say, sir, that answers the question.

Now, sir, concerning this afternoon, the order to be called is a private member's motion which ordinarily would be completed in say an hour and a half. I agreed the other day that we would use this motion as the vehicle and the method by which we could have a comprehensive discussion on this matter, so I am following what I said the other day. I suppose the matter should be discussed without any limitation of time. I think that idea is agreeable to the House.

I would point out to the House that I would like to give quite a comprehensive description of what is being done by, for instance, the built-in protections there are now against unemployment, which the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) might describe. I count education as a very important matter to which the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Roberts) has given consideration. The winter works programme might be handled by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell).

There is also the matter of farm marketing. Now, I am not talking within our province but I am talking about farm marketing outside of our province, which can be discussed by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) and also the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton). Then highways, industrial marketing, public works; all can be discussed by the hon. Ministers concerned.

That, I think, is about the order that we would keep.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister whether it is his intention to call this order at this immediate time, and then follow with the respective hon. Ministers?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no! I thought this. The matters could be discussed in this way: The mover of the motion, followed, I should say, by someone from your side. Following that I have a few imperfect remarks which I would want to make myself and then let the thing follow along.

I think this is a very important matter which we can place before the House using this motion as—

An hon. member: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. Prime Minister in regards to the procedure he has mentioned? He indicated that on Wednesday, the House would not be sitting and would be dealing with committees. What happens to the debate on unemployment if it is not finished tonight? When do we pick up?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, we shall see what the situation is by nightfall. I would like to proceed with the Throne debate tomorrow. We shall see what the situation is tonight.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): You do not talk anything out—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, well, there is lots of time.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before calling the orders of the day I would like to address a question to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), a copy of which I have submitted to him through your office.

Some months ago the broker-dealer firm of Pielsticker Ltd. went out of business. Did the firm cease operating because of bankruptcy, or because its licence was cancelled or suspended by the Ontario securities commission, and are the operations of this firm still under investigation by the securities commission?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, the licence was suspended and still is suspended, and the answer to the second question is yes.

Mr. Bryden: Before the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Prime Minister as follows: With respect to question No. 7 of 1960, asking for certain information about advertising in some newspapers which first appeared on the order paper on January 29, 1960, and was made an order for a return on April 12, 1960, when may it be expected that this return will be tabled?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say, Mr. Speaker, to the best of my recollection that it was tabled. But, if it was not, then I will see that it is tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

RESOLUTION RE UNEMPLOYMENT

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 1 by Mr. R. E. Sutton.

RESOLUTION: That in view of the mounting competition and its effect on industry, particularly secondary industry, with its incidence of unemployment,

BE IT RESOLVED THAT while trade and commerce are within the confidence of the federal Parliament, every effort be made in every sector of the provincial economy to co-operate with federal departments and business generally to market our goods at home and abroad,

AND THAT this House urges that the initiative be taken by business, industry and labour and as well all levels of provincial government within the area that they can constitutionally operate to further and increase employment and job opportunities in Ontario.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. E. Sutton (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. A. F. Lawrence, resolution No. 1 standing in my name which has just been read.

Mr. Speaker, in rising to discuss this resolution, I am sure we are all agreed that unemployment is an urgent problem of great public importance. This matter, while it falls very largely within the competence of the federal Parliament, clearly requires the co-operation of all levels of government, of business leaders and, in my opinion, of every citizen of the country.

While leadership must, of necessity, rest with the federal government in meeting the problems of the day, where these affect the nation as a whole, it is essential in our democratic system that all of our citizens have a clear understanding of the problems involved if we are to meet successfully the challenges with which we are confronted.

Therefore, I feel that the resolution as read is most timely, and should receive the unanimous support of the House.

Practically every day in the press, we read the solutions to our problems offered by prominent industrial and banking leaders. At this time of year, when annual meetings of the chartered banks are being held, we can expect some very interesting comments on the subject of unemployment. James Coyne, governor of the Bank of Canada, claims that:

The greatest single cause of Canada's economic troubles is the heavy inflow of foreign capital. Large-scale unemployment and troubles of domestic manufacturers are direct results of foreign borrowing.

A net inflow of capital induces Canada to import more than she exports. Whenever foreign exchange is brought to Canada, either for direct investment or in the form of a loan, a Canadian must be found who will buy the foreign exchange, a Canadian who can be persuaded to spend more abroad.

Since 1949 Canada's net foreign debt has quadrupled from $4 billion to $17 billion by the end of 1960. This year alone it has increased $1.5 billion. By the end of 1957, foreign interests had control of 56 per cent of all manufacturing in Canada, 61 per cent in the mining and smelting industry and 76 per cent of the petroleum and natural gas industry.

International balance of deficit payments have been running from $1 billion to $1.5 billion in each of the past 5 years. Cost of servicing this foreign debt amounted to $500 million in interest and dividends in 1959, with an additional $480 million in unremitted earnings held in Canada by foreign accounts for growth and expansion.

To meet these two items alone, Canada should have a merchandise trade surplus of $1 billion. Instead, she had in 1959 a trade deficit of $380 million as well as an additional deficit in travel account of $220 million.

Mr. Coyne's solution is one of austerity. He says:

Canadians will have to start to live within their means. Increased productivity and employment by more energetic development of Canadian industry. We must carry on the future economic development of Canada on the basis of Canadian savings, Canadian capital—not foreign capital.

So much for Mr. Coyne and the central bank.

Let us turn for a moment to Mr. J. S. Proctor, president of the Imperial Bank of Canada and his speech on the occasion of the annual meeting last Friday, November 25. Among other things, he said:

A large part of the rise in our foreign debt has come about by the sale abroad of securities by provincial and municipal governments and corporations, who found they could borrow at a cheaper rate in

New York. By this borrowing the Canadian dollar is kept at a high price in the foreign exchange markets, exports are handicapped and Canadian producers of goods that compete with imports are put at a disadvantage.

An easier money policy in Canada would narrow the differential between interest rates in Canada and the United States, weaken the incentive to borrow abroad, and reduce somewhat the premium on the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Proctor advocates lower interest rates. I wonder if this is lip service only. Our chartered banks will show in 1960 larger earnings than any time in the past. The classification of their loans show very few loans to small businesses, but a very substantial increase in personal loans on which there is a 6 per cent interest charge and a 6 per cent service charge.

I ask, why would a bank manager wishing to make a showing for his own branch make a loan of $25,000 to small businesses at 6 per cent, if he could loan this same amount of money to 25 or 50 people by way of personal loans at 12 per cent?

Just one more prominent speaker, please. Mr. Walter Gordon, who was chairman of the 1956 Royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, said in a recent speech that in his opinion:

Unemployment problems in Canada will be solved by (1) cuts in the personal income tax; (2) lower interest rates; (3) a reduction in the premium on the Canadian dollar.

He pointed out that:

Today's problem is not inflation but rather a declining rate of per capita output and serious unemployment.

How does Mr. Walter Gordon think that interest rates can be lowered and the premium on the Canadian dollar reduced? In other words, what are the mechanics to accomplish this?

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Sutton: May I finish please? The hon. member will have all the chance to speak that he wants.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Please, please!

Mr. Singer: He does not know the answer. He did not hear the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) on Thursday.

Mr. Sutton: Well, let me try to explain. I think that what Mr. Gordon had in mind was for the Bank of Canada in their open market operations to lower interest rates. The Bank of Canada would buy securities in the open market and in that operation, when securities are delivered to the Bank of Canada, they are paid for in cash and the cash goes into the money supply of our chartered banks.

Now if we increase the amount of cash in our chartered banks, then each Thursday when we have these auctions of treasury bills there would be keener competition among the banks to buy these 91-day discount bills, so that the interest rates would go down, probably down to two per cent.

Ninety-one day treasury bills are 3.77 per cent today.

Now, if there were some keen competition and treasury bills did go down to say 2 per cent, our re-discount rate is then set each week .25 per cent above the average rate for the discount bills, so we would have a re-discount rate of 2.25 per cent.

In Canada our chartered banks make very little use of the re-discount rate. In the United States they do. But if you had a re-discount rate of 2.25 per cent and a prime rate of 5 per cent, in theory, the chartered banks making a loan at the prime interest rate of 5 per cent to someone who had 100 per cent collateral, the re-discount rate makes it possible for the chartered banks to re-discount that loan with the Bank of Canada. They would get the money and make a loan to someone else.

In other words, the chartered banks would make a profit of the difference between the 5 per cent prime rate and the 2.25 per cent re-discount rates.

Now, if you have a lowering of the re-discount rate then, naturally, you have a lowering of our mortgage rate. The mortgage rate at present is at 6.75 per cent, 7.25 per cent. But it would follow that if you had a prime rate of 5 per cent, you would have a mortgage rate of 6 per cent at least, maybe 5.5 per cent.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sutton: Well, if you were able to establish these easy money rates, I would imagine that Mr. Gordon would think that a lot of the borrowing that is now done in the United States could be done right here in Canada, lowering the premium on the Canadian dollar to some extent.

Also with easy money and very low returns on treasury bills, day-to-day loans and short-term government bonds, a lot of money now in Canada on a very short-term investment basis would move out of the country. Canadian funds would be sold and United States dollars bought, forcing our Canadian dollar closer to par.

What has Mr. Gordon in mind when he is advocating a lower premium on the Canadian dollar?

Mr. Singer: What did the hon. Prime Minister have in mind on Thursday?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a highly important subject upon which the future of our country depends. I think if our hon. friends opposite would talk a little bit less nonsense and listen a little more, it might be helpful. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for York-Scarborough is well known in financial circles, and for a number of years was stationed in New York for some of the banks and other loaning institutions. It may be well to listen and we might be able to find out something.

I am perfectly prepared to discuss my viewpoint in connection with Mr. Gordon, with whom I find myself in general agreement. I will discuss that in detail.

Now, I think if we will just listen to this, we may get a different point of view. I do not necessarily agree with my hon. friend from York-Scarborough, but on the other hand he is a man who has had a great deal of experience in this sort of thing.

Mr. Sutton: When Mr. Gordon speaks of reducing the premium on American dollars, what has he in mind and how would he go about reducing the premium on the Canadian dollar?

The premium is there because there are more buyers of Canadian dollars than sellers. Everybody all over the world in times of uncertainty have funds which they want to invest here, there and every place else, and they have chosen Canada as a very safe place to put their money because we have very sound and stable governments in Ottawa and Queen's Park.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, do you think the hon. member knows what he is talking about?

Mr. Sutton: Some hon. members will remember when the Aberhart Social Credit government in Alberta repudiated their debt. So much money went out of this country that our dollar went down to 80 cents, and we will remember that when the Grits repudiated their contracts with the Ontario Hydro, our dollar again went down to 80 cents—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Oh, give us your experience.

Mr. Sutton: And when the fine hon. gentlemen over there, if they ever formed a government, took over our banks and our insurance companies and our trust companies and nationalized all of our industry, every single dollar in Canada that could get out, would get out, and we would have a 50 cent dollar.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Just take a look at the financial status of the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. members on this side of the House will have equal opportunity to debate in the matter of the resolution.

Mr. Singer: Well, why did you let the hon. Prime Minister go ahead?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): If the hon. member does not want to hear it, he should move adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Sutton: When Mr. Gordon said he was trying to put the dollar at par, he must have had something in mind by way of a stabilization fund. The government would have to be prepared to buy every foreign exchange. They would have to offer Canadian dollars at par for United States dollars. They would have to offer Canadian dollars at par for sterling at $2.80.

Now, with this terrific amount of money coming into Canada and still wanting to come into Canada, it is conceivable that such a fund would run to $1 billion. How on earth would our hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fleming) borrow $1 billion on today's market? In the last two weeks, long-term "governments" have gone down 4 and 5 points.

Mr. Whicher: Ask the hon. Prime Minister, he is all for it.

Mr. Sutton: And what is more—

Mr. Singer: Take it out of the unemployment insurance funds.

Mr. Sutton:—what is more, if this $1 billion were used, and he had a long position of $1 billion of United States funds, would any of the hon. gentlemen here be happy with such a position today?

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): No answer.

Mr. Sutton: Roosevelt, when he became president, revalued gold from $22.67 to $35 an ounce.

Mr. Reaume: He was a great man.

Mr. Sutton: They have stood in there as buyers all these years. The United States government accumulated gold at $35 an ounce; they accumulated $24 billion worth. It seemed silly to us to dig the gold up out of a hole here and put it in a hole in Fort Knox. Everybody thought that gold had no further use except in the fine arts, and to fill your teeth, and what has happened in the last few years?

Six billion dollars of gold has gone out of the United States gold supply and has found its way to the United Kingdom, France, Belgium and Western Germany. Western Germany today has a gold reserve of $4 billion. Would it be foolish to ask the question now, is this the time for the major countries of the world to consider returning to the gold standard with currencies convertible into gold at fixed rates?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sutton: It is a stupid question, probably, but, if our funds—

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. member asking the questions or giving answers?

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very pertinent problem, now what is the hon. member's opinion?

Mr. Sutton: I am just asking questions. Mr. Speaker, my purpose is to focus attention on—

Mr. MacDonald: To evade action, that is his purpose.

Mr. Sutton: Mr. Speaker, my purpose is to focus attention on some of the urgent problems of the day, and this debate will go on long enough for all hon. members to express their opinions.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sutton: In any case, what seems to be the difficulty in lowering the interest rates on the premium on the Canadian dollar? Surely in the Bank of Canada, the operation of which I tried to explain in Hansard, page 433, 1958—read it, and learn the 5 different methods of making money and credit easier—we have all the machinery to carry out the purpose of the central bank to level off the peaks and the valleys of the business cycle through control of money and credit. In reading the statements of the Bank of Canada, there has been a large increase in the supply of money to our chartered banks since April of this year. But interest rates are still at a high level, and there has been no appreciable change in the premium on funds. I therefore ask the question: Is there any conflict in general overall policy between the governor of the Bank of Canada and the government at Ottawa?

Mr. Singer: Why not ask them up there?

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): I think he ought to answer that.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the hon. members on any one side of the House have any priority with regard to asking questions. I also think that when an hon. member asks questions, he should not be asked to answer them.

Now, if that is to be the new procedure, it may go too far.

An hon. member: That is a good one.

Mr. Singer: Especially if he does not know the answer.

Mr. Sutton: May I say a word—

An hon. member: Go ahead.

Mr. Sutton: —about unemployment problems in my own riding, York-Scarborough?

The other day I went around to the municipal buildings to get the monthly direct relief figures from our welfare administrator. I will not quote all of these figures. There is a large increase each month of 1960 over 1958 and 1959 in both numbers on relief and the amounts of money spent.

In the month of November, 1958, we had 667 persons on direct relief at a cost of $21,733. For November, 1959, we had 705 people on direct relief for a cost of $23,679, and the figure now for November, 1960, is 1,026 people, 321 up from last year for a cost of approximately $32,000.

I do not suppose Scarborough is any worse than any other municipalities adjacent to large cities.

The unemployed employables in this figure of 1,026 amount to roughly 10 per cent, and these persons are all of a classification of non-skilled labourers, and average in ages from 18 to 34.

Scarborough is taking great advantage of the winter works programme, but I am told that none of these unemployed employables, because of the suitability clause, will be hired on these winter works projects.

I am very concerned about the young man aged 18 to 21 who left school at age of 16 to drive a truck or take some other task similar to this who now finds himself unable to get a job.

I would suggest that a new branch of The Department of Lands and Forests be set up to employ all of these boys within the ages stated for a period of 3 years. Have them work as forest rangers in the summer months, and place them in the The Department of Lands and Forests school in Haliburton for the winter months, to learn a trade in a new school and let us call it the craftsmen's college.

There should be a rigid physical fitness programme.

After 3 years, they will come out expert tool and die makers, steamfitters, plumbers, electricians, and they will be redeemed physically, mentally and morally—a great asset to the province—and take their rightful position in the building of Canada.

During the last year we have once again become increasingly aware of the fact that we live in an ever-changing world. I have been deeply conscious of the changes that are occurring not only within our own province and nation, but in the many countries with whom we trade.

The last 15 years have been for us a period of spectacular progress and development. In that time our population has increased by more than 2 million or by 50 per cent. Ontario's gross provincial product has risen from less than $5 billion to nearly $15 billion. The total personal incomes of Ontario people have risen from less than $4 billion to nearly $11 billion. Employment has increased from 1.6 million to 2.3 million.

These basic economic yardsticks attest to the remarkable expansion that we have experienced throughout this period.

None of this suggests that we have always had smooth sailing. Every year has brought its problems. Sometimes these problems consisted of tight money, overemployment and inflation.

At other times they were concerned, as we are now, with a levelling off of activity and unemployment.

For instance, there was a brief recession in 1949-1950 which vanished with the outbreak of the war in Korea. Another short recession occurred in 1954, attributable in part to the heavy accumulation of inventory.

The resumption of the upward trend in 1955 was terminated by the recession in the winter of 1957-1958, following an unprecedented period of capital investment. This pause also proved short-lived and production, employment and income began again to rise in 1958, stimulated in part by increased private investment and housing and public works expenditure.

It is therefore apparent that, even in the past decade and a half of unprecedented prosperity, there have been periods of dislocation and pause in the expansion of the economy. Today we are again concerned with the increasing number of workers who are unemployed.

At the present time the competition from producers in the United States, Europe, Japan and other countries, particularly in the field of manufactured goods, is very acute. The European and Asiatic countries have modern, efficient factories, very low wages, and often favourable exchange rates. Exports from many of these countries have made major inroads into markets which we have formerly occupied.

Some adjustments in import duties and valuations and exchange rates will undoubtedly be required, but this action will provide no substitute for our own efforts to make ourselves competitive with producers in other countries.

We are not an island unto ourselves. On the contrary, we are very sensitive to changes that occur in the United States, Europe and Asia. Our exports make up $1 of every $6 of our gross national product. Capital investment, exchange rates and other related matters affect the tempo of economic activity in Ontario and Canada generally.

In spite of these difficulties, 1960, by and large, has been a pretty good year. Our population is continuing to grow rapidly, about 140,000 increase this year. Although this represents a slower rate of growth compared with that of 1956 and 1957, it still represents an increase of 2.3 per cent as compared with 2.1 per cent increase for Canada as a whole and 1.6 per cent for the United States during the past year.

For the first 10 months of 1960, employment exceeded that of 1959 by an average of 50,000 workers. Total labour income in Ontario has been maintained at an all-time high in 1960. For the first 8 months of the year it was 3 per cent higher than in the same period in 1959. For the first 9 months of this year, total industrial production was 2.5 per cent above that for the first 9 months of 1959—the highest in history. For the first 10 months of 1960, steel ingot production of Canada was 3.3 per cent higher than in the same period in 1959, a record production year.

Total mineral production will reach an all-time high this year of nearly $1 billion. Substantial gains in output of nickel, copper and iron ore are more than offsetting the declines in uranium production and the possible slight decrease in production of structural materials.

Canadian and Ontario shipments of iron ore during the first 9 months of 1960 are higher than in corresponding months of 1959.

Construction contracts in Ontario during the first 10 months of 1960 were nearly 7 per cent higher in value than those awarded in the corresponding months of 1959. The very steep increase in engineering contracts and minor rises in business and industrial contracts more than offset the considerable fall in the residential sector. The increase in the engineering contracts was largely due to Ontario Hydro contracts, work on which will carry over for several years.

Retail trade, which has been running about the same as last year through most of 1960, has shown more strength in the past month or two.

Domestic exports in the first 9 months of 1960 were 8.1 per cent over the corresponding total of 1959.

There is much about the present situation, therefore, which is promising. In spite of the inroads which foreign goods have made into our traditional markets, we have still managed to increase our production and expand our exports. Some of our manufactured products have not been able to compete with cheaper imports. Others, however, have prospered and some new products have been successful in taking over entirely new markets.

We must remember that the potential markets for Canadian products are expanding rapidly. Population has increased rapidly at home and abroad. In the North American market alone, nearly 3 million consumers are being added annually. In the rest of the world, population is increasing at the rate of about 50 million a year. With rising living and income standards throughout the world, this population increase can be translated directly into a larger rise in effective demand.

We in Canada have the enormous resources, the efficient modern machinery and equipment, and the technical skills to take advantage of these expanding markets. They provide a firm foundation from which we can advance. The opportunities are there for further expansion and development. To take advantage of them will require imagination, enterprise, hard work and sacrifice.

The problems now besetting our economy are somewhat different from those of earlier postwar downturns in our economic activity. New techniques must therefore be used in meeting these problems. Every stimulus must be given to industry—both primary and secondary—to expand.

Secondary industries offer great opportunities for an increase in productive employment in Ontario. Manufacturing is by far the most important single economic sector in Ontario. It accounts for two-thirds of our total output of goods and services and provides 30 per cent of the employment and 36 per cent of all wages and salaries paid in the province.

In addition, it supports employment in a multitude of auxiliary trades and services.

I realize that the major responsibility for an effective increase in our manufacturing activity must rest with industry itself. I sometimes feel that certain segments of our industry have not been adapting themselves to changing economic conditions. In a competitive world it is not sufficient for industry to rely on the sale of traditional products to established markets—and to demand higher tariffs when these markets are diminished through import competition. A continuous effort must always be made to reduce costs, to explore new markets, to experiment with new products for consumers whose tastes are changing and whose needs vary.

Labour also has a heavy responsibility in any efforts to increase employment opportunities. Union policies must not be so rigid that flexibility in plant operation is prevented. The jobs of their present and future members are at stake. Their co-operation is, therefore, required if our industries are to improve their competitive positions.

The co-operation of governments at all levels is essential to a solution of our difficulties. The federal government, of course, with its powers in the fields of trade and commerce, banking and credit, is in a position to make the most effective contribution to our economic expansion. I hope that it will use its powers to do more to encourage our secondary industry and to provide incentives for its further expansion and development.

I have been very pleased to note that our government is now undertaking a programme with expansion and development in mind. The expansion of the public works programme will aid in meeting our immediate unemployment problem. By increasing the activities in The Department of Economics, and by reorganizing and strengthening The Department of Planning and Development, it will be in a better position to further the efforts of our secondary industry to expand its employment, output and sales.

Through increased contact with federal government departments, it will be better able to co-ordinate government action and to be of greater assistance to business and industry.

There is no shortcut and no easy solution to our problems. Vigorous and persistent efforts must be made by industry, labour and government, to provide the sound economic foundation on which to base our future growth in employment and production.

My purpose is to focus attention on the tremendous task before us. Let hon. members take it from there.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise and participate in this particular debate—a debate that has been emphasized to be an important one, and surely we will all agree with that.

I will not take an unnecessary amount of time by way of introduction. Rather I would like to get to the substance of what I would like to say just as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with the Throne speech, and particularly in conjunction with the resolution that has been presented, it does seem to me that the broad outline of purpose is a desirable goal. I do not think anybody could quarrel with the goals that we have in mind. The question is, how do we implement these goals efficiently and quickly?

One observation I would make at the outset is this:

We talk a lot about economics and economic laws. We talk about economic planning. I would point out that in conjunction with the unemployment problem we have not only an economic problem but we have a social problem. The man who is unemployed in Ontario today does not care what we are going to do 2 months, or 3 months, or 4 months, or 5 months from now. He does not care what study groups we set up. He does not care what particular programme we evolve that will take place in terms of implementation a year or two from now.

He is concerned with what we are prepared to do immediately.

Therefore, I say, it does seem to me this problem divides itself into the social problem, if I may call it that, and the economic problem.

The social problem is the question of how we get money to the man who is unemployed in Ontario today, as quickly as possible.

I personally believe, and I think I can demonstrate in the presentation I am going to make, that the man who is unemployed in Ontario today is, in the main, a labourer, a manual labourer. He is a man who is equipped to do physical work only. That is why I suggest that the way that the Ontario government can most help is to provide jobs that demand manual labour in quantity quickly.

I did agree with the hon. member for York-Scarborough's observation, Mr. Speaker, that maybe the government should expand the forestry division. Certainly they should expand the conservation programme. Certainly, in my opinion, they should expand the planning programme, the recreational programme, that I understand is to take up park land in the near future. They should buy property quickly. They should determine now what they are going to do about conservation and start cleaning programmes. These programmes will employ people to do physical work immediately.

Now, that, Mr. Speaker, is the essence of my first point. There is a social problem here. A man who is unemployed today is concerned, not about plans for the future but his bread and butter tomorrow. And this is a real social problem.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I am not speaking dramatically about this, but I frankly believe that if we fail to solve this immediate social problem we will have failed the people of Ontario. And I cannot emphasize too strongly that thus far neither the Throne speech nor the resolution as such, except in reference to the forestry provision, comes to grips at all with this immediate problem of unemployment and the social aspects of it.

I believe, and state very clearly, that the big danger in the free world today seems to me to be a failure to solve this problem.

The failure will drive people to the conviction that maybe another system is better than ours. I do not think the choice is that which we had 15 or 20 years ago. The choice now is whether or not our system can be made to work quickly to take care of people who are in dire social circumstances—and there are people who are in dire social circumstances, Mr. Speaker.

I would point out that today, in Ontario, according to the last records I have, there are upwards of 109,000 people unemployed. Now 109,000 may not seem to be many people in terms of the over-all population. But if one can envisage, say, the city of London and its environs wholly unemployed, we would be up in arms! We would be ready to do anything! We would be ready to invoke the same sort of governmental restrictions and implement governmental activities as we would in war-time.

Now, that number is unemployed tonight.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, a year ago there were far fewer people unemployed in the month of August than there were in the month of August of 1960. And if the increase is going to continue during the winter months, when we all know that unemployment is more severe than in the summer months—I chose the month of August, I could have chosen the month of February a year ago, when there were almost 150,000 unemployed in Ontario—if that same increase continues it will mean that within a matter of relatively a few months, more than 200,000 people will be unemployed in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, that is a matter of great concern to us. We cannot sit idly by. We cannot talk about theories. We cannot decide what we are going to do in the future.

I agree that we have to discuss those latter subjects in order to bring our economic system into reality. But, the simple fact is that we must likewise tackle immediately the social problem, and it reduces itself to utter simplicity. How do you get money quickly into the hands of these people, so they can live the type of life we would expect for a person in Ontario at this particular time?

Now that is the first problem that I wish to point out. And I would point out that within the course of the next few years, this problem is going to be compounded. Our work force is going to increase. It is anticipated that we will be required to find about 200,000 new jobs each year from now on. That comes only as a result of the increase in our population.

During the last 10 years we were required to find about 100,000 new jobs each year.

In the course of the next 10 years we are going to be required to find double that number, and this—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I am sorry, I am talking about Canada. I could find no comparable figures for Ontario, but I suppose we could approximate it—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Fifty thousand is the figure.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —I would suppose about in the neighbourhood of 50,000. I can reduce my proposition, however, to understandability when I say that for every job that we were required to find in Ontario in the last 10 years, we will be required to find two jobs in Ontario in the period 1960 to 1970.

Now, the next point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is this:

I think we should analyze the character of the unemployed force at the present time. Who are these people?

Well, the first dramatic finding that I am able to present is this: Of that group that is unemployed in Ontario, 24 per cent, roughly a quarter, are under 19 years of age. They are youngsters. They are not the over-65 group. They are not the people over 45 we so often talk about. They are youngsters who are just beginning their working careers.

One out of every four of the unemployed group is under the age of 19.

I suggest that right here we must resolve that in Ontario today we are not adequately training our young people to take part in the technological demands that are incumbent upon us at the present time.

Obviously, these youngsters are going out of our schools unprepared in any trade, unprepared to do anything but physical work. The result is that they are the first to be set aside and rendered unemployed.

Now this is real criticism, in my opinion, and I would add that not only are 24 per cent under 19, but an additional 16 per cent are under the age of 24. In other words, 40 per cent of the unemployed group in Ontario at the present time is under the age of 24 years.

There, again, the same comment I have made before—these are people who are not prepared to meet the job demands that are in existence. They are not prepared for automation. They are not prepared for the technical demands that our economy is making on our society.

That fault must rest right here in this Legislature—of failure to anticipate the needs, of failure to prepare young people with training programmes that will assist and direct them.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that 40 per cent of our unemployed population lies between the ages of 25 and 45, and 20 per cent between 45 and 60. In other words, 40 per cent are under 24; 40 per cent are between 25 and 45; and 20 per cent are 45 to 65.

The next question we might ask ourselves is this: What was the nature of the new jobs that have been created in Canada in the last 10 years? In the years 1950 to 1960, some 1,038,000 new jobs were created in Canada. Of that number of new jobs, 9 out of every 10 were taken up by the so-called white-collar group, and I include technicians in the white-collar group.

In other words, the service industry, the clerks, the stenographers, the people working in insurance companies and so on, those skilled in the trades, took 9 out of every 10 new jobs. Only one out of every 10 new jobs went to physical labour. Manual labour made a demand of only 10 per cent on the new jobs created in Canada.

Yet we persist in turning out young people who are capable only of doing manual labour. This certainly, Mr. Speaker, is a criticism of those in charge of the administration of this province, and of all of us presuming to know, presuming to understand what the demands of this province are at this time, in terms of labour and in terms of jobs that are available.

Mr. Speaker, that, in rough language, is the background and the content in which I want to approach the economic problem.

I now want to talk about the question of the future, the question of economic planning, if you will. But I must emphasize, at this juncture, that my concern primarily at this time is what to do about the man and the woman who are unemployed. This is a social problem. They need money immediately and we must devise the quickest way in which to get it to them.

In the resolution that I will move at the end of my remarks, I will include a suggestion that immediately we should think in terms of conservation and recreational service in Ontario areas, wherein we are committed to spend money over the period of the next two years. We should speed up those programmes to absorb people who are able to contribute only manual labour to our work force so that they can begin, not 5 or 6 or 7 or 8 months from now, but within a very short time, to gain the type of dignified wage that is required to overcome, in large measure, this current problem.

Now let me refer to this economic problem. The ultimate objective, Mr. Speaker, I suggest—the ultimate objective of economic opportunity—is the maximum common welfare or good. The great majority of the Canadian people want to achieve that objective within a mixed economy, where the direction and composition of public and private sectors are determined by the democratic process and free markets.

The requirements of general welfare are varied. They can be expressed partly by 3 secondary objectives—namely, sustained and balanced growth, price stability, and minimum unemployment.

Canadians today expect an ever better performance from their economic system. They do want rapid economic growth and the social improvements that go with it. But they do not want irregular growth interrupted by periods of mass unemployment or hampered by inflation.

In other words, they want long-term development but also short-term stability, with high levels of employment and stable prices. In addition they wish to retain their freedom of choice.

Mr. Speaker, that indeed is a tall order, but that is the order we must look to, and that is the order we must meet.

I have said that the ultimate objective of economic activity is the maximum common good. What are the factors which involve that common good? What are the economic factors that we must consider?

I have outlined these factors in terms of growth—economic growth in terms of inflation, if you will—price stability, and employment or unemployment.

With respect to growth, what are the factors that contribute to growth, to economic growth?

On the supply side, Mr. Speaker, I suggest we have the problem of an efficient labour force that is a necessary adjunct to growth, economic growth.

As for the question of resources, any society that intends to grow economically must have the natural resources to prosper.

And, thirdly, available capital.

So, on the supply side of growth, you have resources and you have quantity and quality of employment. On the demand side, markets.

Mr. Speaker, it is as simple as that—markets—and we do not have the markets we require in Canada and in Ontario. Much of our difficulty, today, relates itself to markets.

I think we have the size and quality of labour force. I think that we can, as the hon. member for York-Scarborough has talked about, increase the availability of capital. There is no question but that it is a contributing factor which we must discuss, but I think it can be made available. I, personally, am in agreement with those who would arbitrarily bring our Canadian dollar into line with the American dollar.

I am not too much concerned with the economic rules of supply and demand. I suggest to you there are two ways of doing it. Literally, the Bank of Canada now has power under our legislation to simply produce dollars, if you will. It will be an inflationary move—"Buy up all the bonds," as the hon. member for York-Scarborough says. It will simply produce more dollars.

Those more dollars will be inflationary in their nature but they will bring the Canadian dollar into par—into line immediately.

Or, go to the international monetary fund and make an arrangement, as England did, to arbitrarily bring our dollar in line. I suggest one or the other of those arrangements should be made.

As for natural resources, who in the world—and what country in the world—has the natural resources that we have?

On the supply side we have all the necessary factors. But we certainly, in terms of markets, have not done what should have been done, and what must be done.

Let me talk about markets for a few moments. Comparing ourselves with the year 1948, our imports are up 87 per cent. In other words we are importing 87 per cent more than we did in 1948. Our exports are up only 34 per cent, less than half of what our imports are, and our gross and national product has gone up by only 57 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, those simple figures demonstrate that what is happening is that we became a paradise for the other fellow's market. We are importing more than we should. We are not exporting as much as we should; and our gross national product is not going ahead fast enough to absorb the labour force coming on the market as a result of the growth in our population. More, what about industrial expansion and production?

Well, between 1950 and 1953 our industrial production was up 20 per cent; from 1953 to 1956 it was up again, by 20 per cent. But from 1956 to 1959 it was up only 7 per cent. Here is a factor.

What about investments from 1950 to 1953? Up 24 per cent. I am talking now, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for York-Scarborough did, about capital: 1953 to 1956, up 23 per cent; 1956 to 1959 actually down.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the facts we should look to. Also when we talk economic trends, let us think of the future; let us think of the years that are immediately ahead. What are we going to do between now and 1970? The forecast suggests that between now and 1970, this will be the trend in employment: Agriculture will employ about 8.6 per cent of the working force; our primary industries—and they are our natural resources industries—will employ about 11.4 per cent, or a total of about 20 per cent; one-fifth of our total employment will be in the neighbourhood of natural resources, heavy industry and agriculture with 80 per cent in the secondary industries and in the service industry. Manufacturing is going to be the big source of employment, in the next decade.

Again markets, again trade agreements, and I would intervene at this particular time, Mr. Speaker, to tell you that I am not one who believes we have lost our markets because of our high cost of labour. We have lost our markets because we have not had the ability to go out and make trade agreements that would give us certain protection in given markets.

What about our Western European markets in the growth of—what do they call them—outer and inner countries? They are making agreements amongst themselves, excluding us. There are other agreements throughout the world that exclude Canadian products. In the United States today, it is impossible for any Canadian firm to bid against an American firm for governmental business, unless the Canadian firm's is something like 12 per cent less than the American price.

This sort of protection, that has been given to manufacturing industries outside of Canada, has not been used here.

I am not a tariff man. I am not an out-and-out protectionist. But I say this: We have to understand this problem; we have to understand the facts that in secondary industry and in manufacturing we are committed to a high labour cost.

I believe in unions. I believe in high wages, and I do not make any apology for it. I say, Mr. Speaker, that is not what is causing unemployment. The simple fact is that, if we make a type of agreement that could and should be made, we will take care of these markets.

But what is Ontario doing? Let me illustrate: In the electrical industry, a typical secondary industry, this is what has happened in the last few years.

In 1959, one-third of all electrical produce sold in Canada was imported. Now, what has the government done? What has this government done about assisting that industry? We have Hydro buying in England, in Ireland, and in West Germany in competition with companies doing business here in Canada, simply because they can buy goods for a few dollars less.

Mr. Speaker, I disagree with that policy. I believe that there are instances where Hydro has acquired produce, if I may use that word, transformers specifically, in England at a price a little less than Canadian producers were prepared to sell at, but at a price less than the same manufacturer in England was permitted to sell in the English market.

In other words, in England that manufacturer had to sell at a price in excess of what the Canadian manufacturer would have charged Hydro, yet Hydro took the opportunity to buy because they thought they could buy for a few dollars less. Is that helping secondary industry? Is that thinking of markets? Is that assisting the unemployment problem? Is that building up this industry to which we are going to have to look for 80 per cent of our employment in the future, the manufacturing and servicing industry?

It certainly is not, Mr. Speaker. And these are things that I suggest, in the long view, we have to think about

I have said that we do not want excessive growth, then mass unemployment, as we had in the 1930's. I think we want a certain control. I think people today recognize there must be certain controls. They are prepared to accept reasonable controls in government.

I said that I acknowledge the high labour cost. I do not want to change that. I am not one who thinks that is the whole problem. But, understandably, if we have a high standard of living, we are going to have difficulty in competing in secondary industry with other countries that have a lower standard of living.

Now what is the real need today? Well, the real need in my opinion is some economic co-operation and co-ordination between industry, labour, agriculture and government. I believe this is the area that must be pursued.

I believe in a certain amount of economic planning. I think this is what we have to look to. This is what we have to think about, and this is what we have to prepare to determine. What are our national objectives? Wherein do we want to do something?

We talk about the natural resources industry. Of course, they are exporters. They have a low labour content. It may be possible, it may be desirable, in their turn to export as much as possible, but we must think likewise of the manufacturing industry.

The point I want to make is simply that there has to be an element of economic planning in the future, and that must come with the leadership of government.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, it is all right to talk about co-operation with—

An hon. member: Sounds like socialism to me.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —the other levels of government.

But the question that we must face, Mr. Speaker, and must face directly is this: How are we going to bring about this in a way that is acceptable to people, in a way that is reasonable and not with the extreme intervention of government, nor in a completely planned economy? That is not what the people want. But they want some direction. They want some leadership, and I suggest this is what is not happening at the present time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will have a few more words to say about that. But let me now go back, if I may, to another point with respect to the structure of unemployment.

You recall I talked about the people who are unemployed, who they are and why they are unemployed.

Let me point out that there are other factors. There are the seasonally unemployed, there are people who are unemployed for cyclical reasons, and there are the people who are unemployed for structural reasons.

Let me differentiate. We all know what seasonally unemployed groups are, people who work in the summertime. The fishing industry and others may be illustrations.

The extraordinary part is that last year our unemployment in Ontario, in relation to the national scene, went up in the summertime. Last year the Ontario unemployed represented 24 per cent of the total national unemployed group in the month of February. But in the month of August, they represented 34 per cent. In other words it is not the seasonal problem that we are faced with. Other provinces have a greater seasonal problem than we have.

Is it, then, a cyclical problem?

The cyclical problem is simply this. It is known and it is obvious that industry produces for market and that market sells to consumers. Now when the market becomes flooded, if you will, when it becomes satisfied it backs up. Inventory stacks up in the salesman's warehouse. He in turn stops buying from the manufacturer and the manufacturer stops producing.

That cyclical unemployment has had a history of roughly 22 months. As we have gone through the cycle in a period of 22 months, every 22 months, we have gone through this cycle. I do not think that is too much of a problem. I think one of the serious problems we are facing, at the present time, is the structural cause of unemployment, the area to which I referred at the outset when I said that there are people unemployed in Ontario today—in spite of the fact that there are job demands for skilled technicians; in spite of the fact that there is demand in the white-collar fields for people.

The structural fact is that automation and technology have done away with many of the physical jobs. Consequently those unfortunate persons, who are not trained and who are not prepared, cannot switch to more technical jobs, so find themselves on the unemployment rolls. They are older people who are not skilled. Likewise, and very unfortunately, a large part are the young people who are simply not prepared now and never will be.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer again to this question to which the hon. member for York-Scarborough addressed himself. It is the question of money, of fiscal policy, of monetary policy.

I believe it is time we had cheaper interest rates. I believe that our dollar should be at par. I am not afraid of inflation at this particular juncture, and I would think that this government should use its influence now, not just talk about it, but use its influence to bring what pressure is required to be brought in the proper sources to bring this about.

It will need expansion. There is no question of cheap money needs and easier availability of capital. It means that people will borrow, where they would not otherwise borrow. This will, of course, create economic activity.

The problem always is that the creation of that activity can mean at the same time inflation and this is the area of concern. But, I do not think that it is the immediate concern, and I think the government should address itself to this problem.

Mr. Speaker, now comes the substance of what I want to outline to you.

I think that the speech from the Throne and the resolution have outlined certain things, desirable goals I call them. I repeat that. They are desirable goals.

But I am concerned about their implementation. I do not think that the goals outlined in the speech from the Throne and in the resolution are going to do a thing for the unemployed in Ontario today, and I do not think any concrete plans are being implemented to pursue the goal.

Now my first suggestion is this:

First, create job demands in the physical manual field, as I have said two or three times. I refer specifically to the area of conservation and recreational land clearing and development. In conjunction with the economic problem, what we need here in Ontario is an economic research council. Certainly we need more economic research. We have not had it in the past. We must do economic research in the same way as we are doing medical research, in the same way as we are doing scientific research.

We do not know enough about pure economics. We do not have enough facts and figures in Ontario to guide us and direct us and let us know what the situation is.

The figures I have given this afternoon are federal bureau of statistics figures. They are not Ontario figures. I do not know where we can get Ontario figures.

Do we have them? Are they being published? Are we in a position, is anybody in a position tonight in Ontario to analyze this situation in a scientific fashion? I suggest they are not, I suggest the development of a new economic department that will advise the varied other departments of the province of Ontario in coming to grips with its problem. We need an economic research council that will bring the best economic brains that we can accumulate to pass on the findings in the research they do to all the people of Ontario.

The second thing we need is an advisory board on economics, development and stability. We need a non-partisan, non-political board made up of representatives from management, labour, agriculture and government to advise on these things. We must co-ordinate our efforts. We must co-ordinate the public and the private sectors. We must know whether our stress next year is going to be building schools or whether it is going to be trying to expand our manufacturing industry. We must co-ordinate these efforts in the private and the public sectors. But today we are doing nothing about it.

There is nothing mentioned in the speech from the Throne, and there is nothing mentioned in this resolution that would bring to bear such intelligence from a non-partisan advisory board to assist.

I think this board could be implemented. It would bring to bear the type of observation I have tried to make in terms of markets. It would bring to bear the position of labour in this province and, likewise, agriculture. Further, it would give us an opportunity to co-ordinate governmental objectives and goals, with a private goal. It would give us an opportunity to say to industry: This is what we would like, this is where the stress should be. That board, advising government in a non-political and non-partisan way, could assist in gaining the confidence of industry to co-operate with any objectives set forth.

Thirdly, we have to prepare immediately technical schools to assist the young people. I think that the young people who are unemployed today should not only be encouraged to attend these schools but should also be paid for attending them, because this 40 per cent of our unemployed group is going to remain—and I hate to say it—on our labour markets for the rest of their lives.

The fact is, they are not prepared today. They are not going to be prepared tomorrow nor the next day after that. As unemployment rears its ugly head periodically, they are going to be the first to feel it.

These people should be schooled. They should be prepared now.

Then, as I said, we must pursue this question of getting money to the older, unemployed people immediately and quickly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for these several reasons I would like to amend the resolution of Mr. Sutton, the hon. member for York-Scarborough. I would move, seconded by Mr. H. C. Nixon, that the resolution be amended by adding the following words:

In order to further these desirable goals, the government of the province of Ontario forthwith:

(a) Immediately expand provincial projects such as conservation projects, recreational projects and other provincial projects which, in their implementation, require heavy demands for physical, manual labour;

(b) Establish an economic research council;

(c) Establish an advisory board on economic development, planning and stability, to co-ordinate the private and public sectors of our economy, and that the said board be non-partisan and include representation from management, labour, government and agriculture.

(d) Expand existing facilities and develop new facilities to assure the immediate opportunity of young people to pursue further advanced technical studies to fit such young people for the job demands foreseeable in the next 10 years.

(e) Establish a job retraining programme for unemployed people whereby such persons will be encouraged to retrain themselves during periods of unemployment for the job demands foreseeable in the course of the next 10 years.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, I may say that we have heard two very thoughtful speeches: the addresses by the hon. member for York-Scarborough and the hon. leader of the Opposition. May I say, sir, that I count this problem to be the most serious and most fundamental one facing the Canadian people. I am looking at this matter, first of all, in the long range. I think long-range solutions are those to which we should address ourselves and which we have to solve if we are going to meet the Canadian situation.

Of course, the other angle is the short-term solution as to what we should do in the present situation. One of the fundamental problems of the Canadian people is this: since 1945 we have placed too many eggs in one basket. As a matter of fact, the underlying motivation of Canadian policy in the last 15 years has been very largely directed to business with the United States. In Canada, in the last years, we have been in a seller's market, and have grievously neglected the United Kingdom market, the South American market and other markets which would be open to us.

I think our problem, to put it in a few words, is this: that we are living, in the words of this resolution, in a highly competitive world. We are living in a world which is no longer a seller's market but is a buyer's market. We are faced with competition from all sources that did not exist before.

I think, sir, the fundamental problem facing Canada is this: the readjusting of ourselves to the new world in which we have emerged. That, sir, is the situation as I see it.

Recently, I have had the opportunity of making two presentations about which I have no doubt hon. members know. One of them was the submission of the government of Ontario to the Royal commission on the automotive industry.

I suggest, sir, that the hon. members of the House, who have not already done so, read the first portion of that brief which is directed to the problem of secondary industry. And I should say they should pay particular attention to the concluding part of that presentation, pages 12 to 17, which I think deals with the problems faced by Canadians and with which we here in Ontario, as an immense manufacturing area, are faced.

Our manufactured products run to about $11 billion annually and the hon. leader of the Opposition has said that only a very small portion of that can be consumed here in Ontario, indeed in Canada, with our 18 million people.

Therefore, we have to live on the markets of the world. This, I think, is the problem we have to contend with.

The first part of the submission we made to the Royal commission deals with the problem of secondary industry, because the automobile industry itself is only part of one facet of the great compass of secondary industry.

The second point I made, the other day, was to the industrial conference where I made some, I think, very objective references to both the problems of today and the immediate and the long-term problems.

May I say to my good hon. friend from York-Scarborough that he asked a number of questions, the answers to which I endeavoured to put from my standpoint in that presentation. I would like to point out, as I said at the time, that I recognized that these things are controversial. Some of the things I said were controversial.

Nevertheless, I think these are all things we should consider at this time, when Canadians are looking at the prospects of their country, which I believe, sir, to be unlimited. The prospects of this country are unlimited, if we have the courage and the adaptability to take over. I think that is the underlying situation.

May I say this to the House, that I am now able to look back in this country over a very considerable period of time. As a matter of fact, the days of my activity really started with the emergence of a new world in 1914. I have mentioned this, perhaps, in the House before. But I very well remember standing on the streets in the town where I was born, and seeing the men of the first contingent going to war, wearing red coats and blue trousers to a war that was going to be over in 30 months.

It happened, sir, that at that time we were emerging into a new world which we did not recognize. We who lived in that world always thought we would come back to more stable things of perhaps the latter part of the Victorian era.

This has not been the case, and is not going to be. We are going to continue in a world which is going to be newer and more competitive, as time goes along. Canadians have a great ability to adapt themselves to circumstances. In fact, we have seen our economy emerge from the days of red coats and blue trousers to the atomic and nuclear age and, all in all, we have done pretty well. I have no doubts about the ability of Canadians to do this job.

First of all, sir, may I say that there are very many references which I could make. My hon. friend has moved an amendment to the resolution which I have not had the opportunity to read, but which I would say to him sounds well in words. I point out to him the difficulties of adding to a resolution a nebulous factor because we have got to remember this:

We must have ways and means of translating things into action, and I would say concerning the type of committees he mentioned, while they had their good points, nevertheless their history is not one wrought with a great deal of success.

I am not saying it could not be successful in that particular case. But, on the other hand, I would refer my hon. friend to the programme that was placed before this House in the speech of his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay). Now I do not want to be out of order on this, but I would point out to my hon. friend the specific way of dealing head-on with these problems in a way which does not require the bringing in of nebulous people and nebulous influences to design policy and produce activity. However, sir, I do not say those things to be derogatory in any way of my hon. friend's address or proposal. I think it was a reasonable approach, and to that extent I am prepared to give my hon. friend full marks for what he said.

In approaching this problem, we first of all must remember this: We have to take this matter in a setting, and I think it is fair to point this out. In taking it in a setting, we have come a long way from the days of the depression of 30 years ago. The hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) will be giving the particulars of this.

However, in the province of Ontario what you may call the built-in stabilization factors are of the order of nearly $460 million a year. Of course, those are not all of the expenditures made by any means by the government of Ontario alone. It is a combination of federal, provincial and municipal government expenditure.

That is a very huge sum of money indeed. The things it encompasses of course, include very many facets of our society, and they were designed late in the depression by succeeding governments, at all levels of government, to meet requirements raised by the various adjustments which occur. These things include, as the hon. Minister will mention: unemployment insurance, old age assistance, old age pensions, pensions for disabled persons and others.

The matter of unemployment assistance, for example, has taken a very advanced form because we are able to achieve the abolition of the .45 per cent provision about which we complained very bitterly in this House.

Now, sir, I will not elaborate other than to say that other hon. Ministers will deal with a number of the problems that my hon. friend mentioned, and will deal very specifically with plans, short range and long range, to meet the situation.

On the other hand, I say this again, sir, the real problem has to be faced and met by all levels of our people. This is a Canadian problem. The hon. member for York-Scarborough mentioned that, in bringing this forward, he did it to provide the opportunity for discussion and making people think about the situation which we must face. I think it is a very fair and proper thing to do.

Now, sir, this problem as I said at the outset—and as the hon. leader of the Opposition mentioned—is really divided into two portions. There is the immediate situation, and there is the long-range situation.

This resolution is obviously directed to the long-range situation rather than the short range; the former will be discussed here in great detail in the next few hours and in the course of this present session. I think it is well to get this prominent problem in perspective when we are discussing the short-range situation. There has been a confusing use of figures on the old basis and figures on the new basis.

I read with very great interest a speech delivered by my friend Mr. Walter Gordon, on the night of November 23. I delivered a speech myself on this subject the next day at noon. I can assure hon. members there was no collaboration between Mr. Gordon and myself, and agreement on certain points was purely co-incidental.

I think Mr. Gordon's figures, as I have been able to read them and assimilate them—I am not an economist, I do not profess to be in that calling—but as I have been able to assimilate them, I think that Mr. Gordon's references were to figures compiled on the old basis. At the present time, both in Canada and the United States, there has evolved a new method of computing these matters which should be more satisfactory.

In Ontario, our present unemployment figure is approximately 5 per cent. That is, 5 per cent calculated on the present basis, which gets away from a lot of the difficulties and duplications which are apparent in other figures.

I am using the figure of October 15, which is the latest available. The Ontario figure then is running approximately one per cent over the 4 per cent which is calculated to be a fair average of unemployment in what is described in modern terms as a situation of full employment. It will be understood that in any condition of full employment, there is always a residue of unemployed, which upon present calculations—there was reference to this in the press today—runs to about 4 per cent, including temporary dislocations and things of that sort.

Now the present 5 per cent figure in Ontario is based upon a computation, as I say, somewhat different from that used before. It is presently based upon employment by persons subject to recall through temporary layoffs, and who, therefore, are only temporarily unemployed.

I say in that regard that unemployment insurance, and the figures in connection with unemployment insurance, can be subject to a very misleading result if we work them out.

I think that those in charge ought to have a look at unemployment insurance, and see that it is insured.

Now, in Ontario we are in an additional period where temporary layoffs cannot be avoided. Employment is sometimes called to a halt in a plant which is adjusting to a market situation. We have plenty of market situations today, for example during "tooling up."

At present, there is more of the dislocational type of unemployment than usual due to the increasing availability and the competitiveness of the demand for the product. This dislocational type of unemployment is referred to by economists as functional unemployment. This refers to delays which occur in re-establishment where it is necessary for the employee to obtain work in another area or industry.

A breakdown of the employment in Canada as of October 15 this year is as follows: The average unemployment in Canada has been running at 5.7 per cent. The Atlantic provinces showed unemployment of 7.8 per cent; our sister province of Quebec, with 126,000 unemployed, 6.9 per cent; in Ontario, 120,000. My hon. friend used the figure 109,000, but as of October 15, 120,000 or 5 per cent of our work force was unemployed; in British Columbia 45,000 unemployed: 7.7 per cent of their working folk.

It will be seen from these figures that not only are we in Ontario below the Canadian average, but I would say that we are below the United States average.

In the great manufacturing province of Ontario we are producing $11 billion worth of goods annually. We are showing the lowest unemployment percentage and ratio in Canada, and one that is below that of the great country to the south. I would point out that Ontario is most affected by unemployment in the secondary industries. The provinces most comparable to our own are Quebec and British Columbia. In the case of Quebec they are running at 126,000 unemployed or 6.9 per cent, and in British Columbia, 45,000 unemployed or 7.7 per cent of their work force. Now I give to my hon. friend here, also based upon these computations, some rather interesting greater figures.

Three years ago, in 1957, the unemployment average in Canada was 4.6 per cent and in Ontario it was 3.4 per cent. In other words, we were running about 1.6 per cent below what we are today. In 1958, unemployment in Canada rose from 4.6 per cent to 7.1 per cent, and in Ontario, we rose from 5.4 per cent which is .4 per cent higher than we have at the present moment. In 1959, unemployment in Canada dropped from 7.1 per cent to an even 6 per cent, and our unemployment here fell to 4.5 per cent, which is .5 per cent less than it is today. The figure I have given you is for October 15, 1960: 5.7 per cent in Canada.

The prairie provinces have a lower rate of unemployment because of their farming economies. In Ontario we are at an even 5 per cent as of that date. Now, sir, those are interesting figures, to which, I think, it is well to give fair assessment at this time, while we are facing up to this very important problem.

Now sir, this problem has not arisen in the last 2 or 3 years. As a matter of fact, it goes back at least to 1952. I noticed in Mr.

Gordon's address, which I read with great interest, that he mentioned there had been a drop in the output per head.

Now, that is a very important matter. As a matter of fact, that gets right into the heart of this thing. It is a question of how much our people are able to produce per head, and sell, not only at home, but abroad.

As a matter of fact, the highest period was the 4 years between 1948 and 1952. We found that, at that time, in counts of dollars, the production was increasing at about 13 per cent per capita. Between 1952 and 1956 production dropped down to 7 per cent, and the trend that commenced in 1952 has persisted through the intervening years up to the present time.

Mr. Gordon says this is a sad story. It is certainly one to which the Canadian people should give attention. In other words, it means that we have progressively in that period of time—and I have taken it to 1952 although I rather believe from what economists tell me that it goes back for a year or two before that time—that in the last decade, in per capita of our population, we are actually becoming less productive.

This is certainly a problem for all levels of government. It is a problem for industry and it is a problem for labour, because upon that matter depends our ability to maintain the standards of living which we have in this country. It is not a problem for one sector alone, it is a problem for all of us to look at in a world which is so highly competitive.

Mr. Singer: There are also more people out of work.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no. That is not true, for this reason. If we go back to that period from 1948 to 1952, we will find our unemployment averages on the basis of new computations here in Canada were running only about 3.2 per cent, and here in the province of Ontario, 2.3 per cent.

Economically, these slides are easier to start than they are to stop. Now that is so. They gain momentum.

So I would say to my hon. friends that this is a cause for soul-searching. I said we placed too many eggs in one basket in those 15 years, and now there are a lot of them getting broken up. We are in difficulty.

I would not say we are in difficulties beyond the capacity of our people to solve. But I just point those things out.

My good hon. friend from York-Scarborough asked certain questions about what has been described as tight money, about which I have complained bitterly in this House. These include high interest rates and the high exchange rate.

That problem, sir, had its beginning, as far as this country is concerned in a very real way, in the year 1955. If hon. members will look at my addresses to this House they will find that I had to complain, as I complain today, as far back as 1955. These are not new complaints at all.

I would say this about the exchange rate with the United States: I have usually found economics a pretty sensible thing that follows the processes and evolutions of common sense. But, I must admit that, to see our country faced with an exchange rate running up—I suppose 5 or 6 per cent at one time, perhaps higher than that—in relation to a country over which we have had, over most of that period, something of the order of $1 billion a year of trade deficit, seems to me completely senseless.

I have mentioned that in this House on several occasions. And I say to my hon. friend from York-Scarborough, I did mention that at an address on Warriors' Day at the Canadian national exhibition back some 3 years ago in 1957.

The strange part of it was this. I said that, in my judgment, Ontario was being victimized by international forces and others, and that our exchange rate was held at a ridiculously high point. The queer thing is that they must have taken more stock in me, Mr. Speaker, than some of the hon. members do, because the rates fell from, I think, around 5 or 6 per cent to about 2 per cent overnight.

But, afterwards these people found that what I said was not particularly serious as far as they were concerned, and the rate went up.

Now it seems that, when we talk about our trade being unbalanced with the United States, yet give them a premium to get their goods in here and undersell us, it is a procedure beyond my conception of what is common sense.

Mr. MacDonald: He should get the hon. member for York-Scarborough to explain it to him.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Frost: When an hon. member said, "Go outside and waken up," that is what he needs to do. However, Mr. Speaker, some hon. member now says it is impossible for some to waken up.

I want to make a reasoned address here, and I would say that, like Mr. Gordon, I am probably better when I make non-political addresses, and that is what I propose to make at this time. It is a non-political address, a dissertation on things as I see them.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): This is a national problem.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I propose to try to view this in a very impartial, non-political way. I say to my hon. friend from York-Scarborough that I have objected very much to the floating bank rate which was introduced in 1955. Now I could be wrong about it, but I have objected to that. It was introduced in 1955, and I say to my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, that from his party stem the difficulties that we have had since, with a floating bank rate.

If there is a fixed bank rate, then there is the authority to direct our economy and to control interest and money. It seems to me that to have it drift along haphazardly from perhaps a 7 per cent rate down to a 2 per cent rate in a period of half-a-dozen months is carrying things to the point of absurdity. These things have been happening, and that is the objection which I have taken.

I would say to my hon. friend, what I am saying here now I have said on very many occasions. He has been here since 1955, and I know that he has listened very carefully to my speeches and perhaps he might have tabulated and indexed the better ones, I do not know. He seems to be pretty good at that.

But if so, he would find that I have said those things about exchange rates, and I have said those things about the bank rates. I have complained very bitterly in this House over that period of time about interest rates and the charges that we have to pay here, including the very great increases there are for servicing our debts and servicing the debts for the municipalities.

All, I believe, are because of the fact that over that period of time there has been too much attention paid to a matter that is important, that is the matter of inflation. But not enough attention has been paid to the underlying requirements of this country—that we have to expand in this country in order to live.

Now, sir, that is the fundamental point. We have got to expand to live, and I say to the hon. members of this House that in Canada we have to be prepared, at all costs, to do this for this reason: Canadians, with 18 million people, are living on half a continent in a world which is land-hungry.

I think one of the hon. members mentioned the great increases in population in the world. If Canadians are not prepared to go out and develop their heritage, and do it in a very forthright way and take all sorts of chances in doing it, then we run the great risk of somebody else doing it for us. That is the situation as I see it.

There are some matters in Mr. Gordon's speech with which I find myself in agreement. Some I find myself in disagreement with.

First of all, I have referred to the imbalance in trade with the United States. Mr. Gordon mentions 3 remedies and he prefers the third. I will refer to these in my own way in just a moment in conclusion.

He refers to his own remedy, that is the control of monetary policy as opposed to tariffs and things of that sort. I think one of the great problems we have to face today is that very fact, and that is one of the reasons why we have been paying so much attention to it, as is evident in the Throne speech if my hon. friends would take time to read that non-political document. Here they would see that is one of the basic conditions set forth.

Now, sir, this brings us down to what my hon. friend said about various types of public works. I point out to my hon. friend that, at the present time in Ontario—and this figure has been given before in this House—that our programme, roughly a $1 billion programme in the levels of provincial and municipal governments—the latter which we subsidized to the extent of about $350 million a year—is producing work for around about 310,000 people.

Now that is capable, I would say to my hon. friends, of some expansion in the matter of winter works and, of course, it is capable of certain other expansions provided we are able, on the financial markets, to get something in excess of the $225 million that we are now compelled to borrow for refinancing and for new money.

These include certain things such as urban renewals and redevelopment and public works in the immediate range and the hon. Minister for Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) will mention this later in the day.

There are some very interesting proposals made by the federal government. One of them is in relation to pollution works. Now, going back to the days of the other government—with Rt. hon. Mr. St. Laurent as a matter of fact—the correspondence has been tabled here to the effect that Ontario in very, very many ways was the unfortunate recipient of pollution and other troubles brought about by the very rapid industrial development of this province and therefore to an extent it is a national problem.

Now I greet with great approval—subject to what I am going to say—the fact that the federal government is proposing certain assistance to this and other provinces so afflicted.

I say that, sir, subject to this: If we had our own rates in this province, we would do that job ourselves.

Mr. Singer: Why do you not make some?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he go out in the corridor and shake himself up. He might be able to bring himself down to a point of reasoning in connection with that. That has been a much debated subject in this House. Mr. Gordon said in his address that he was very much interested in and viewed with approval some of these things I mentioned, and I too will be very interested to see the legislation that is brought down to implement these proposals.

Now, a point where I disagree with Mr. Gordon is in the matter of deficit financing. I have heard this point argued and I have seen it brought forward starting with the conferences in 1945—this matter of cyclical financing. Of course, with cyclical financing you are going to meet your periods of ups and downs and therefore I would say I think it is a very great mistake for us to view with very great horror and terror the fact that there are periods of cyclical financing which show deficits, even large deficits.

In the government of the United States, this was very plain during all of the days of the Roosevelt administration. But I think that administration for some 12 years, living in highly uncertain times, both in depression and in war from 1932 up to 1945, I do not think had a surplus at all. That perhaps is a very extreme case.

On the other hand, to run into certain deficit financing, I would say, is going to be natural in the operation of this country.

Now, we cannot do certain things. For instance, take this government. If we restricted expenditures, it would put people out of work. So would such actions by any other government.

On the other hand, if this government reduced taxation, or the Ottawa government reduced taxation, then the same result applies. We are going to have deficit financing and we cannot avoid it. We cannot have our cake and eat it too, in these things.

If these things are viewed and are understood by people, the situation becomes an understood fact and is not viewed from a standpoint of distortion or terror on something which I think is going to apply in the financing of this country.

If people are not prepared to meet deficit financing at certain times, then it is going to mean that certain things cannot be done. We cannot go out and spend more money in public works or we cannot make reductions in taxation unless we are able to face those facts. Now, sir, I want to, just in conclusion—

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, I just want to get it clear here. Is the hon. Prime Minister suggesting that Mr. Gordon was saying he is against deficit financing?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I read his speech very carefully and that was what I gathered, that he felt that. However, if my hon. friends feel that I am "on all fours" with Mr. Gordon, then there is one point less of disagreement. But I took this interpretation from reading his speech, and I would be very glad, if my hon. friend from Oshawa does not have a copy, to give it to him. That is what I took Mr. Gordon to mean.

However, I want to leave that, in conclusion, and say that my feeling about this is as I expressed it the other day, and I apologize for the repetition to those who heard me say it then.

My first point is this: At all costs, we must set out to expand and develop our country. Now we cannot afford to do anything but be optimistic and confident of Canadian ability to do the job.

I would say to this House, sir, that is first and fundamental. Pessimistic people never get anywhere. We have to be optimistic. That is one of the great troubles of the Opposition, sir. They are affected with a deep pessimism that pervades everything.

For myself, sir, I am an expansionist.

My second point is this—

Interjections by some hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Do you see the pessimism, sir, that exudes itself over there?

First of all, what I am going to say is this, and I will put it on a more non-political basis. First of all, Canadians must have confidence in themselves to do the job.

Secondly, I say this: There is no justification for our exchange being at premium with that of the United States. I have said that on very many occasions and I will not elaborate.

Thirdly, I have disagreed with the floating bank rates which have been Bank of Canada policy since 1955. The control of this rate led to control of other things, including exchange rates.

Fourthly, we talk too much about inflation in this country to the extent that we discourage and impede expansion at a time when the world, despite every risk, must expand if we are going to justify government of half a continent. The risks of inflation are far less than the risks involved in the failure to expand and develop.

Fifthly, and I say this for the benefit of those people who seem to fear foreign capital—this new country cannot pull itself up by its own financial bootstraps. We need never to fear foreign capital coming into this country as long as Canadians have faith in themselves and faith in their ability to govern this country.

Our simple objective must be to maintain Canadian independence. We are a proud people and a proud country, but we must at the same time be able to welcome foreign capital which helps us to develop decently and fairly; we must be able to inspire the confidence of foreign investors.

In getting out to expand this country, I think we should write that on the wall for people to see. That is the way we ought to go about things.

Sixthly, I think this young developmental country must have reasonably easy money and lower interest rates and I have complained about this bitterly since 1955.

Seventhly, we must have the concerted resolve and a national objective on the part of our people—business, labour and government—that we will work, that we will produce, that we will compete and expand and throw our goods on the markets of the world. Now that is the true answer to the decline which Mr. Gordon in his address dates back to the days of 1948-1952 and something which I think is of very, very great importance.

Eighthly, as a matter of fact we are part of the North American economy. With our small population and great land area and our manufacturing potential, we must live on foreign trade. The imposition of high tariffs and quotas are never, in themselves, the best solution; we must expose ourselves to competition. There are, of course, refinements under special circumstances.

I have heard the hon. leader of the Opposition go into some of the things which happen because of unfair trade practices elsewhere. I think, myself, that, with these things, we have to adjust ourselves and our tariffs and our quotas to meet unfair competition wherever it may arise. But again, fundamentally, we must be able to go out and compete and sell our goods in the markets of the world. If we do not do that, then we invite retaliation and difficulties. Not only that, but we take from industry and our people competitiveness that otherwise applies.

So I think that those refinements must be very carefully exercised. I said the same thing at the time of presenting the brief to the Gordon commission. Essentially, we must be enterprising enough to achieve low unit costs. We must make more and more of our goods for export.

Concerning the North American economy, of which we are a part, it is not fair that we should run a $1 billion yearly deficit in our commodity trade with the United States. I think our friends to the south understand this. As a matter of fact, they can go a long way in understanding the ways and problems of other people in this world, including the Canadians. We are their best customers. They should be ours.

One of the crying needs of this country is to build up trade with the United Kingdom and the trade blocs of Europe and South America. We must remember that we are faced with huge economies such as those of the United States and the Soviet Union and now with the trading blocs I have mentioned. They can use mass production and marketing techniques.

Our very obvious objective must be to expand trade with all countries. Present trade imbalances with the United States are not beyond the realm of Canadian ingenuity to close and to produce conditions which are more mutually advantageous.

There are just 3 more short points.

While control over international trade arrangements, import duties, valuations, exchange rates in the whole field of banking and credit is under our constitution invested in the federal government, nevertheless Ontario will, should, and must, co-operate fully in helping to create the common front that is necessary to meet the challenges and take up the advantages of the opportunities in this changing world. Now, that is somewhat the same purpose that the hon. leader of the Opposition proposes in his amendment.

I think that I propose something that is more objective than that. As one step in this direction, I propose to reconstruct our Department of Planning and Development into a new Department of Commerce and Development. As a result of this reorganization, more direct collaboration will be provided with federal departments for the purpose of stimulating business, increasing production and extending trades.

Now that answers the question asked at the conclusion of last session by the hon. members opposite. As a matter of fact, we propose to put The Department of Planning and Development in its true and original place.

In addition, as part of the reorganization, a product research division will be set up to complement the department's present commercial and industrial development activity. This new division's function will be to stimulate production and employment in existing manufacturing industries of Ontario, and to increase the processing of raw materials in our province. New products will be set out and defined which can be manufactured by Ontario companies.

This work will be co-ordinated with that of the Ontario research foundation, which is being expanded in order that it may play a fuller role in the development of manufacturing in our province.

Now, I do not want to elaborate on what I say, other than this: The Ontario research foundation provides a way of co-ordinating the research work being carried on by our extending family of universities. I would say to the hon. members that we propose to bring into the research foundation a wider representation of both labour and industry in the matter of research which, in very many cases, need not be fundamental research but specific research. I think that we can very greatly extend the work of that foundation.

In attendance, the department itself has already had one gathering, one forum, in connection with the bringing together of labour and industry and commercial interest in this problem.

Now, The Department of Economics is also increasing its studies of the Ontario economy.

I am going to send to my hon. friend brochures, which apparently he has not read, concerning the work of The Department of Economics. I shall send them over for him to read and study. He will see that actually this department, which is unique in provincial governments in Canada, is doing very great work and will do very much greater work.

May I point out, sir, that in the matter of public works in Ontario, as I have already said, we have an immense programme now in progress. The programme that will come before this House will be very much larger than the one on which we are presently engaged this fiscal year.

I conclude by saying—and I mention this very inadequately—because the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) will be referring to it, that the development of our human resources is, I consider, of the most fundamental importance.

There is nothing more essential than the development of our people, if we are going to develop Canada. Education is not only our greatest objective, it is our most costly and challenging problem. Education is of vital necessity if we are not going to fall behind in the struggle for economic supremacy.

The lag in this area simply cannot happen. I would say to my hon. friends in this House that, as far as Ontario is concerned, taking education by and large, from the primary area through to higher education, no area in North America is ahead of us in that regard.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh nonsense! Utter nonsense! I will point out—

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right! I would say to my hon. friend, of course there are places that he can pick out here or there. But if he takes the great broad area from our primary education to university—and I say this to my good hon. friend from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop)—there is no jurisdiction in America that can equal us, or has a record such as we have here. I want to reassert and emphasize that because it is a good thing to emphasize. We have established a lead in both Canada and America in this great area. Furthermore, we intend to forge ahead and to do much greater things as we progress in the years immediately ahead.

These, sir, are my very inadequate remarks at this time.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): They sure are!

Hon. Mr. Frost: I repeat that, in the tone of the programme laid before this House, in what we have said elsewhere and what we have said in our submissions to other governments, and to others, we feel, sir, that the development of our country, the employment of our citizens, and the raising of standards of living is the great, and must be the great, objective of our people.

I welcome the resolution proposed by the hon. member for York-Scarborough as giving the opportunity to discuss this very great subject at this time.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I think we have made at least this degree of progress with regard to the problem of unemployment: Governments have reached the stage where they acknowledge its existence.

One of the problems we have faced—the main problem we have faced in the last 10 years—is that any time anybody rose to speak about the growing problem of unemployment, which the government now concedes emerged years ago when the Liberals were in power, the government would immediately start to dismiss such presentations as the outpourings of gloom-mongers and doom-mongers.

When the Liberals were in power they did the same with regard to Progressive-Conservative and CCF protests. The Progressive-Conservatives get into power, and, for 3 or 4 years, we have had warnings about growing unemployment dismissed by the Progressive-Conservatives in Ottawa as the outpourings of doom-mongers and gloom-mongers.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should at least acknowledge we have made progress. The problem exists and government acknowledges its existence.

However, sir, I wonder how much progress we have made beyond that point. I wonder—because we have a resolution this afternoon presented by the hon. member for York-Scarborough and he ended up with a grandiloquent flourish, a peroration, in which he said, “My purpose is to focus attention on the problem.”

He had no answer—he was just focusing attention! The hon. Prime Minister gets up and he refers a little bit later to “make people think, this is our challenge.”

I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have passed the stage where we want to focus attention on the problem. We have passed the stage where we want to make people think. What we need in this country is governments which will come up with programmes and do something about the problem. And this we have not had this afternoon.

We get exactly the same kind of proposition from the Liberals. I was interested, for example, in this rather sensitive approach emphasizing “the social aspects of the problem,” as the hon. leader of the Opposition said. It is interesting to hear the Liberals now talking about the social aspects of the problem.

I can remember a few years ago when, to pick one example, the unemployed workers, who have been turfed out of the farm machinery industries in the province of Ontario, went to talk to that great Liberal, Rt. hon. C. D. Howe. What sort of social reaction did they get from him? "Go home—you will not likely get your jobs again in the same plant—look for them elsewhere."

What the Opposition have provided here, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, is a pathetically inadequate answer. It is a mish-mash of undigested statistics with regard to the unemployment problem. Its solution is to set up a few boards. We should step up the raking of leaves, in the conservation areas, for these unskilled workers who have nothing but brawn to contribute to the working force. This is about all they had to offer.

They are in exactly the same kind of position, fundamentally, that they were when they were in power. They have learned nothing and they have forgotten nothing since.

And as for the hon. Prime Minister, he, too, spends most of his time trying to soften the problem. He dare not now dismiss it as "gloom-mongering and doom-mongering," but he softens it.

For example, he talks about what is known in the economists' language as "the irreducible minimum" with which we can live and still describe ourselves as having full employment. It is now up to 4 per cent. This is news to me.

I do not profess to be an economist, but I have been doing some reading in economics for something like 25 years now, and 2.5 to 3 per cent was the figure, the irreducible minimum, that we could accept for unemployed people such as those moving from one job to another.

The hon. Prime Minister delightfully amends it and boosts it to 4 per cent, trying to argue that our 5 per cent in Ontario is not as bad as all that.

Furthermore, the hon. Prime Minister talks about our figure as being less than it is in many other provinces across the country.

What he did not tell this House is that the increase in unemployment in the province of Ontario this year—the percentage increase over the last year—has gone up more in the province of Ontario than in any other province of Canada, with one exception, namely, the province of British Columbia. So I do not think there is any need for trying to soften the importance and the proportions of the problem we face.

Mr. Speaker, I want to try to map out, to begin with, what I am attempting to do with this resolution, because we have, by general admission this afternoon, relaxed the rules in the discussion of a specific resolution on the order paper, to have a broad discussion of the problem of unemployment.

I think we face the danger, Mr. Speaker, that we are going to be shooting in so many directions at once that we are not going to hit some of the bulls'-eyes that need to be hit today. So, what I am proposing to do is this: to deal with the resolution as it is on the order paper; the specific proposals with regard to trade and commerce, the plight of our secondary industries, and the result of world competition. And having dealt with that, then to propose a 5-point programme which I suggest will be somewhat more substantial than the rather anaemic one presented by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Our amendment will deal with what this government can do now—in addition to the indefinite employment possibilities sketched in the Throne speech—to provide jobs for those out of work at the moment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as for this resolution we have before us, I would just like to remind the House of the phase of unemployment that it has focused attention on. It reads as follows:

In view of the mounting world competition and its effect on industry, particularly secondary industry, with its incidence of unemployment, be it resolved that while trade and commerce are within the competence of the federal Parliament, every effort will be made in every section of the provincial economy—and so on.

In other words, the resolution deals with just one small aspect of it. I should not say "small" aspect. It is an important aspect, but it is only one aspect of the whole unemployment problem.

I think the first thing we should recognize, Mr. Speaker, is this: That this resolution is by implication a frank acknowledgment of the failures of the Diefenbaker government in providing full employment. In effect, it suggests that the provincial government—and I think we should note this—that the provincial government should move into fields which have hitherto been primarily and constitutionally a federal responsibility. It is, in other words, Mr. Speaker, a provincial effort of unprecedented proportions to try to bail out the federal government which has not done the job.

If, Mr. Speaker, the federal government, in the fields of trade and commerce, is unwilling to implement the necessary policies to bolster employment through our secondary industry, then provincial action would be commendable, if there is any realistic hope for its being effective. But may I suggest that, unfortunately, the constitutional limitations on provincial power seriously restrict the possibility of effective provincial action.

After all, is it not self-evident that if the federal government with its constitutional power has not been able to do an effective job, how can this government do an effective job when it does not have those constitutional powers?

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the proposal that the provincial government should move into these federal fields is inevitably going to result in a costly duplication of efforts and services, all of which is going to have to be paid out of the taxpayer's pocket.

Now it is a little difficult to believe why the people of Ontario—in fact it is ironical, that the people of Ontario should be asked to pay such a needlessly high price for a Tory government at Ottawa which has failed, and should be asked to pay that price by the Frost government which did so much to elect them. Now, what we are able to do, “within the four corners” of resolution, is to deal with this resolution on the assumption that the provincial government is now going to move in and do something on trade and commerce.

For example, the hon. Prime Minister says that we have to sell our goods in the markets of the world, we have to compete in the markets of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I think one of the first problems that we have to face up to is the contention that has been activated for years that we in Canada have priced ourselves out of the world market and that labour is to blame. This is the contention which has been advanced by both of the old parties at one time or another. It is the favourite song and dance of the chamber of commerce and the board of trade.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, what rather fascinates me is that a few weeks ago, a glimmer of sanity emerged on this issue, and it emerged from the most unexpected source. Speaking in Oshawa on October 17, the federal hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) is quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail on October 18:

Labour Minister Michael Starr said tonight, “The failure of manufacturers to provide new jobs in the volume required, has created Canadian unemployment problems. Employment has not kept up because of improved production methods, automation, technical changes, and above all the need to reduce costs in order to maintain competition.”

“Wages in selected industries over the past 10 years have remained almost stable, but other costs have increased. The whole field of increased expenses should be studied by manufacturers,” he said.

About two weeks later he was even more explicit and, as a matter of fact, he chose a good place to be explicit. He was talking to the Toronto board of trade, and here is the opening paragraph of a news account on that occasion:

Labour Minister Michael Starr said in Toronto last night that Canadian industry should examine its profits, its capital investment and efficiency, rather than blame labour costs for its inability to compete in foreign markets.

Now, Mr. Speaker, labour economists have been saying this for years and, as a matter of fact, not only labour economists—I can think of an old professor of mine at Queen's university who, in presenting his views to the Senate committee on inflation a year or so ago, made the statement that there is no conclusive evidence to suggest, as has been said so widely—particularly in business circles—that we had priced ourselves out of the market because of exorbitantly increased labour costs. Now we have the hon. Mr. Starr saying this because, apparently at this late stage, an investigation is being carried on in his own department in seeking the truth of the matter.

So far so good, Mr. Speaker, but we have had no evidence that these new views of hon. Mr. Starr are accepted by the government. We have had no evidence that there are going to be new policies based on this truthful assessment of what actually has created the high costs that have contributed to pricing ourselves out of the market.

However, Mr. Speaker, if this government is going to seriously tackle this problem, then the hon. Prime Minister must face up to something that this government, along with the boards of trade and the chambers of commerce have misrepresented to the public for years, namely—labour's limited responsibility for our costs.

In fact, only a week or so ago it was reported that the cost of living index had risen more in the previous month than any single month for quite some time. If working people in this country are going to live in this high-cost economy, they must have wages high enough to be able to buy the produce of this economy—food for their families, to pay the rent, and everything else. In seeking a wage that is going to be in keeping with our cost of living, admittedly labour contributes to the high cost.

But what this government has never been willing to face up to, and I am wondering—under the guidance of a little bit of light from the federal hon. Minister of Labour or his department—is whether they are going to face up to the real factors contributing to the rising costs that are pricing us out of the market.

The first factor is that in this North American economy today prices are not fixed by the mythical laws of supply and demand. Prices on the North American continent today are what are known in economists' terms as administered prices. The advisers of President Eisenhower a year or so ago estimated that 60 per cent of the prices of basic commodities in the United States were administered prices. This simply means that management sits down and fixes a price in accordance with the profit levels that they want, and then works back from that chosen profit level, as to the price that they are going to charge the people. If there is a glut on the market so that their product is not selling; if their workers are out on the streets, this is of no concern to them. As a matter of fact, if they think they are not going to have adequate profit levels, they raise the price for the limited sales to maintain their profit level.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have referred to administered prices and their contribution to our high level of cost in this nation, and the problem of pricing ourselves out of the market.

The second contributing factor is the profit level. Here we have governments for years—including the government at Ottawa—which went out a couple of years ago and pleaded with the working force of this nation to hold the line, but it would do nothing with companies and their refusal to hold the line on profits. It would do nothing by way of sitting down and persuading management that it must hold the line on administered prices.

I have still seen no evidence to suggest that the government at Ottawa even now is going to do it.

However, this is their responsibility. We have ours here in the Ontario Legislature. Now that the Ontario government is moving into this field, and is trying to boost trade to assist our languishing secondary industries, the question I want to put to our new Department of Commerce and Development is: What it is going to do? Instead of pinning up all the responsibility and sacrifice on labour, what is it going to do in tackling the problem of administered prices and high profits to help in bringing our price levels down?

Now the second point I want to draw attention to, Mr. Speaker, is this: Many of our secondary industries are not exporting because they are forbidden to export. Many of our secondary industries in this country are wholly foreign-owned subsidiaries, mostly of American corporations. They are forbidden to export because the export field has been pre-empted for the parent company in the United States.

In this booklet that was produced by The Department of Planning and Development last summer, I was very interested to read the figure that, in the last decade, the number of wholly foreign-owned subsidiaries in Canada has gone up from 3,400 to 7,000.

Now what is this government going to do? Let us forget about Ottawa. They have done nothing for so long under Liberals and Tories that there is no reason to believe they are going to tackle this problem now. What is this government going to do about this issue—7,000 industries, many of them in the province of Ontario, which are forbidden to export?

Mr. Singer: How many?

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact the hon. member raises a good point with which I had meant to deal, and that is that nobody knows exactly how many of them are forbidden. I have done my best to find out, but some certainly are, as hon. members can learn from that bible of the business world The Financial Post which has emphasized this as one of the main problems.

However I raise the problem for this government which is now going into this field: what is it going to do to free these subsidiaries, a major proportion, a significant proportion of which are forbidden to export—

Mr. Whicher: What would the hon. member do with this problem?

Mr. MacDonald: We got no answers from the hon. member, so he had better sit there and listen.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member for York South is not providing any.

Mr. MacDonald: The third problem for this government, now that it is moving into this federal field, is a related one—that is the question of United States domination of Canadian industry. The hon. member for York-Scarborough discussed this. As a matter of fact, he gave us figures which are even worse than the ones I have. It shows he is even more pessimistic than I am, Mr. Speaker.

I thought that 43 per cent of Canadian manufacturing, 52 per cent of mining and smelting and 71 per cent of the natural gas and oil industry was American owned and controlled. But at least his final figure was higher. He had it up to 76 per cent. But 60 per cent of the dividends from Canadian corporations today are going to foreigners—60 per cent of the dividends from Canadian corporations!

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not one who believes that foreign capital is any less considerate of our national welfare than is Canadian capital, because what we have to face up to is that private capital is international. It knows no boundaries. It goes where the profits are highest. So I do not think—and on this I agree with the hon. Prime Minister to some considerable extent—there is any point in drawing a line between foreign and Canadian capital in this respect.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think we are dangerously close to the point where we will cease to be economic masters in our own house. If such a significant proportion of our economy is controlled outside of the country, the decision, for example, as to whether or not there is going to be 2,000 or 3,000 people laid off in Sudbury at International Nickel Company is not going to be made in Sudbury, it is going to be made in New York.

As a matter of fact, about two years ago when I happened to be in Sudbury, I read a news story in the Sudbury Star, datelined New York, stating that a couple of thousand people were going to be laid off.

So much for the problem. What about the solution?

The interesting thing is that the Diefenbaker government rode to power on a programme of anti-Americanism. They have done nothing. As a matter of fact the situation has gone from bad to worse. As for the Liberals, there are a lot of eloquent voices in the Liberal ranks on this issue—men like Walter Gordon, for example.

However, the thing that interests me about Walter Gordon's pronouncements on this issue, apart from their eloquence, is that Walter Gordon has not made one single proposal in the last year that was not included in the Royal commission report 4 years ago. And that Royal commission report was submitted to a Liberal government still in power in Ottawa. What did they do about it? Nothing!

Furthermore, Walter Gordon went down to that so-called thinkers' conference, the first one held in the party in 47 years, down in Kingston a few months ago, and the significant thing is that—if we got an accurate assessment of what went on in that conference by some of the TV interviews afterwards—he was a voice crying in the wilderness on this issue. There were many reports indicating that the tendency among the Liberal thinkers was: let us not get too excited about United States domination of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that either of the old parties is likely to tackle this fundamental problem—important though it is. They are not likely to tackle it because they are not free to tackle it. They are controlled and dominated and financed by big business which is itself so much American orientated so that they are not, therefore, going to tackle it. People who are going to solve this problem are going to be the people rising from the grass roots of the mass economic organization through the New Party in this country.

However, Mr. Speaker, if the provincial government is now going to move into this field and the hon. member for York-Scarborough acknowledges the existence of this problem, I am interested to hear what this government is proposing to do about it.

Now, the hon. Prime Minister made another comment. He looks as though he is getting a little weary.

An hon. member: We are weary of the hon. member for York South, that is all!

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister said that we have to be enterprising enough to achieve low unit costs. Well, here is another problem which I would invite the new Department of Commerce and Development to look at.

Much of the Canadian industry is fated to have high unit costs—for this reason. If industry has a limited market, as the Canadian market is, and if some of them are forbidden from selling in the export market, so that they have to live within the limited market in Canada, it is not economically feasible to introduce all the technological changes that the modern world offers today.

In other words, automation is economically feasible only as long as you have long runs and some big markets which will pay for the automation and absorb its products. If you do not have long runs and you do not have big markets, you are not going to automate your plant.

As a matter of fact, I was very interested a few months ago to read an article in The Financial Post with regard to the Canadian automobile industry in which they referred to the automation of it as being a great white elephant—$50 million invested for what? If they operated at full production, they could produce all the cars we need in Canada in perhaps 4 or 5 months of the year—so all automation has done is produce all that is needed in 4 or 5 months instead of in 7 or 8 months, creating even more difficulties for the working force, and not being able to make the kind of contribution necessary to the lowering of the per unit cost.

Mr. Speaker, I present this as a problem upon which I would like to have the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development (Mr. Nickle)—since this is now his daily work—give us some enlightenment. I think it is a problem we have to face up to.

Now here is another problem, Mr. Speaker. I have been interested for years in reading a publication that has come out from the old Department of Planning and Development on fabrication gaps in Canada. In other words, they point to this astounding fact: that of the imports we buy, from the United States, over 70 per cent are fully manufactured. What the hon. Minister's department has been saying for quite some years is that surely some of these things can be manufactured in Canada.

There are fabrication gaps in our economy. The interesting thing, about which the hon. Minister must be profoundly disturbed, is that in 1955, the percentage of our imports from the United States that were fully manufactured was 76. In 1956, it was 76. In 1957 it was 77. In 1958, it was 77, and in 1959, it was 78. It is getting worse each year.

So I am not surprised that the government is now going to establish what will be called a products research division. This is a very interesting development. Private enterprise has not been enterprising enough to get out and find out what they can manufacture in Canada, so this Tory government is resorting to a socialist solution. They are going to spend the people's money to do the research to find what products can be manufactured in Canada, and hand the results over to private enterprise to make a profit on.

Interjections by hon. members.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1960

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Prior to the 6 o'clock adjournment, I had dealt with some 5 problems which I suggest now might preoccupy our new Department of Commerce and Development. There are 2 further problems which I would like to touch on before I go on to the substance of my suggestions as to how we might grapple with the problem of unemployment.

The sixth problem is one that relates to secondary industries which are now being driven to the wall by imports from so-called low labour cost countries, particularly Japan.

Now what, Mr. Speaker, can be done by a province in this connection, I must confess baffles me. The control of it rests primarily in the short run with tariffs or with quotas and these are wholly within the constitutional jurisdiction of the federal government.

However, in this connection, if there is nothing that the province can do, it might usefully contemplate an aspect of this problem that I think has received far too little publicity. That is, in the province of Ontario, we have had some of these industries—for example, the electrical industry—constantly complaining about what is happening to its production and the layoffs in its working force because of imports from Japan at a cost with which we are not in a position to compete at all.

And yet, if one examines what has happened in Japan and other low-cost countries, we will find in many instances the factories which are producing these goods in Japan are either subsidiaries of the same parent corporation in the United States or else they are companies which have working arrangements and agreements with the same parent company in the United States—the company which owns the subsidiary in Canada—

An hon. member: Name it.

Mr. MacDonald: So what we are faced with, Mr. Speaker, is a form of economic fratricide. In other words, the parent company has established a subsidiary in the low-cost country so that they can exploit the low labour costs in that country, and they are shipping goods in which are, in effect, driving another of their subsidiaries to the wall.

An hon. member: Name the company.

Mr. MacDonald: This kind of thing, as a matter of fact, is happening in some instances with companies which have been established in Europe and they are competing today with companies back here.

The final problem, I think, relates not to any single aspect of trade, but the whole of our overall trade policies. For example, when the Diefenbaker government rode to power in 1957-1958, it did so on the promise to the Canadian people that it would switch some 15 per cent of our trade with the United States to the United Kingdom.

Now, we are all painfully aware of the fact that, far from a switch taking place in the interval, the bad situation which they deplored has become worse. Canadian trade with the United States, or imports from the United States, have gone up until today we have a trade imbalance with the United States, which as the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Sutton) pointed out, is going to reach an all-time high of close to $1.5 billion.

All of this has relation to United States domination of Canadian economy with our failure to fill some of the fabrication gaps and so on.

However, it seems to me that in the other area, the United Kingdom and Europe, as the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) indicated this afternoon, there should be the greatest hope for an expansion of trade, because this is a natural trading area for Canada. At least it has been a natural trading area in the past. And our trade levels at the present time are far below what they have been on past occasions.

Now, what disturbs me, Mr. Speaker—and I am wondering, now that this government is moving in to occupy this field with the federal government, whether they might exert some influence on federal government policy—is that the stand that is being taken by the federal government, as enunciated by the federal hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) at the recent Commonwealth economic council, may well lead to less trade rather than more.

What hon. Mr. Fleming did was to visit Great Britain at a time when Great Britain is faced with an historic crisis. Some years ago, when the 6 European countries, now known as the European common market, banded together, Great Britain decided not to join the European common market. There is no doubt in the wide world that the reason she did not join was because of her associations and her obligations with the Commonwealth countries.

Now, this is all very fine except that we have now reached a situation in which there is good reason to believe that events are going to drive Great Britain into a closer economic association with Europe.

In the last few years, the economy of Western Europe has boomed. In the past year, each of the 6 European common market countries has found its trade increasing by a minimum of 20 per cent and a maximum of 57 per cent in the instance of Italy. During that same year, Great Britain's trade has declined 23 per cent. This is what I meant a moment ago when I said that she is faced with an historic crisis, because we all know that Great Britain, that tight little island, has to trade if it is going to survive.

Yet, faced with this kind of situation with all of its inevitability of Britain having to move into closer association with Europe, what was the stand of hon. Donald Fleming?

It was an adamant stand that Great Britain must not do this. Such action by Britain would cause some economic dislocations, some trade dislocations back in Canada. This is obviously true. But if it is inevitable, if for economic survival Britain must move into closer association, would it not have been a more far-sighted policy, a far more sensible policy, to have recognized the inevitable, to have joined forces with Great Britain in attempting to establish, not only for Britain, but for Canada, some closer economic association with Europe so that we could get a bigger foot in the door of this 200 million consumer market that is today booming?

But that is precisely what hon. Donald Fleming did not do. His thinking is apparently still that of Bennett based on a concept of the Commonwealth back in the 1930s. He is about 30 years out of date. The idea of an exclusive trade alliance may well have been—and even this is a little doubtful—necessary in the 1930s. But the prospect of that kind of exclusive trade alliance surviving in the modern world of the 1960s, I suggest to you, is getting less and less.

Surely the answer is that Canada should take the initiative with Great Britain in attempting to establish closer economic relationships with Europe so that we can get an expanding market in Europe, too, and we may be moving towards the establishment of what ultimately will be the solution of Canada's problems: An increasingly freer trade area in the whole of the North Atlantic community.

However, hon. Mr. Fleming did not do this. He did not do it presumably because he wants to retain the Commonwealth and protect it.

I suggest that the stand that he took is ultimately going to undermine the Commonwealth, because the genius that permitted the British Empire to develop into a Commonwealth arose from the fact that it was able to adapt itself to the changing conditions in the changing world. Faced with the kind of development that they have in Europe, I suggest once again, that it has to change.

But what hon. Mr. Fleming did was to assume an inflexible stand more in keeping with the Bennett concept of the 1930s rather than the necessities of the 1960s. I suggest this is something that this government conceivably, if it has some weight in the councils at Ottawa, might raise.

Those are problems, Mr. Speaker, that the provincial government is presumably now going to share with the federal government. But in moving into this field of trade and commerce in the fashion envisaged by the resolution moved by the hon. member for York-Scarborough, I come to the conclusion, in the light of what I have just spelled out in some detail, that the province is likely to achieve little, and that little only at the expense of costly duplication of federal effort and service.

That brings me to the basic criticism of this resolution, if it is a resolution designed to meet our unemployment problem. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution is not focused at the heart of the unemployment problem at all. It is focused out on the periphery of the problem.

The basic reason for unemployment arises from the failure of the federal government to plan development of the Canadian economy so as to maintain a sufficiently high rate of economic growth.

Now, this word planning always provokes some neat display of verbal footwork. For example, when Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker was faced with a delegation from the Catholic syndicate in the province of Quebec 2 or 3 weeks ago who urged upon him the idea of establishing some kind of an economic planning agency, which, I suggest, is vitally necessary—not a research agency, but a planning agency—Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker dismissed this as being socialism. Again this afternoon we had the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) saying that we must have some planning and the government must take a lead; on the other hand, we must not have a planned economy. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): It is not what I said, Mr. Speaker, it certainly is not. On a matter of personal privilege, that is not what I said. I want the records corrected accordingly. I asked for an economic research bureau as one feature; I asked for an advisory planning committee as a second—

Mr. MacDonald: After asking that, what he said was that we want some planning, but we do not want a planned economy. That is plain, simple double-talk.

I was interested a few weeks ago when a page 7 story in the Toronto Globe and Mail—by Phillip Deane, it was—recounted the views of Mr. Lamontaigne with regard to what was necessary for the economy of this country. The story ended up with a paragraph, which I thought was a brilliant summary. It said, obviously, what Mr. Lamontaigne meant was all the benefit of planning without any planning, and this is precisely what the hon. leader of the Opposition was seeking through all his verbal footwork.

As a result, Mr. Speaker, of the Tory failure to plan and the Liberal failure to plan when unemployment arises, whatever be the source of that unemployment, Mr. Speaker—and it might be from automation, with a worker displaced and forced to find another job altogether; it may be from farmers who are displaced because of technological changes on the farm front; it may be because of depressed industries or depressed areas, or whatever reason—what has happened is that these displaced workers are not able to find another job; they are added to the growing hard core of unemployment in this country.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker—and I hope this is not going to raise the blood pressure of my hon. colleagues to the right, I use the term broadly—there is a myth in this connection which cannot survive the examination of the fact. Here I agree with the hon. Prime Minister, for the moment. The problem of chronic unemployment is not the creation of the Tories alone. Its foundations were laid when the Liberals were in power.

And just let me document that—

An hon. member: Document that when you—

An hon. member: Mr. Tim Buck—

Mr. Speaker: The members on both sides of the House will have plenty of opportunity to present their views, and it is much better when the views are presented one at a time.

Mr. MacDonald: The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that they had an opportunity to present their views, but they had none to present.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, we did not hear anything new this afternoon from the hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want, for the edification of these Tories in Liberal clothing, to remind them of a few basic facts which, as the hon. leader of the Opposition says, are drawn from the federal bureau of statistics. For example, back in 1953, Canada's economic growth was only 3.8 per cent. In 1954, it was 2.9 per cent, both of them insufficient to maintain full employment. And that is the reason—

An hon. member: Bring it up to date.

Mr. MacDonald: —why we have a recession. I am coming up to date. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is where the basis of our chronic unemployment began, under the Liberals. Now, what they constantly remind us of is that because of a period of high investment in 1955 and 1956, Canada's economic growth jumped to 8.6 per cent. But what they ignore, and what is proof of the fact that the foundations for our chronic unemployment were laid in those years, is that even when the growth of the economy went up to 8.6 per cent in 1955 and 1956, the number of unemployed was still in excess of 4 per cent in 1955.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): What is the hon. member going to do about it?

Mr. MacDonald: Just listen, I will come to what I am going to do about it. When they did have this high level of investment, which had restored the Canadian economy, what did they do? They choked it off with their disastrous tight-money policy, creating a situation which, under the Tories, has gone from bad to worse.

An hon. member: Even the hon. Prime Minister agrees.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, we will get back to the Tories, and perhaps the Liberals will be happy and listen.

An hon. member: When are you going to get to the New Party?

Mr. MacDonald: We got to the New Party in Peterborough and we will spread Peterborough across this nation, too. The fact is that during the past 4 years Canadian economic growth has slowed to a halt.

In 1956 the gross national product did not increase. It dropped .3 per cent. In 1958, it rose by .8 per cent. In 1959 it picked up by something like 3.5 per cent, and this year's preliminary figures indicate that it will rise very little if any. As a matter of fact, the figures for the third quarter indicate that the gross national product was dropping.

The significant point here, Mr. Speaker, is this: If the inflationary factor in our price levels is removed, the real per capita gross national product is actually smaller today than it was in 1956. This is what the hon. Prime Minister was talking about this afternoon and we did not seem to be able to communicate.

My interjection was this: surely, the reason why the real per capita gross national product in Canada dropped over the last 4 years is that we have had something like 200,000; 300,000; 400,000; or 500,000 people not working. And if you have that body of workers in the Canadian working force not contributing, obviously, the real per capita product is going to drop.

In fact, last year, the yearly average for the 12-month period ending in September was actually 417,000 people out of work—as a monthly average for the 12-month period ending in September.

An hon. member: Does that average—

Mr. MacDonald: That is not the question. The question is that if you have 417,000 people not producing because they are out on the street, and not working, obviously your real per capita gross national product is going to drop.

Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of fact that I suggest makes a mockery of the Pollyanna statements which this government made, for example, in its industrial development review. Because it talks of the prosperity of the 1950s on the basis of which the prosperity of the 1960s is almost inevitable, it is just going to be projection.

What it is ignoring is that from 1953 on this problem of chronic unemployment emerged. And even during the two years in which our rate of growth did jump to an adequate level, our levels of unemployment persisted. In other words, unemployment has been chronic right since 1953.

May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that full employment is going to be restored in Canada only with overall economic planning by the federal government providing a framework within which each province and municipal government can play its part.

The great difficulty is that this government has come up with its programme within that framework. But there is no framework, because the Tories at Ottawa refuse to do the kind of planning which is necessary. This planning must seek to achieve not only an expansion of the private sector of the economy, but supplement it with a massive expansion of the public sector of the economy to meet our great backlog of public need—such as homes, hospitals, schools, parks, roads, urban region developments and conservation projects, and the rest.

But all of this, Mr. Speaker, is relatively long term. At best it is going to provide jobs for next winter and beyond. There may be some additional jobs because of the expansion in the departments, but all of it is relatively long term. What is urgently needed now is a short-term programme to provide jobs this winter. This is what the government evades almost completely, not only in the Throne speech but in this resolution.

For that reason, I propose, at the conclusion of my remarks, to move a 5-point amendment, which I suggest constitutes the kind of emergency programme which this government can tackle immediately, and with which it can make a contribution one way or another, to meeting the unemployment situation at the moment.

The first point has to do with our winter works programme. Mr. Speaker, I think we must be realistic about this winter works programme. The fact is that, in the last couple of winters, it has been pathetically inadequate. It provided 10,000 jobs, many of them of a short-term nature—10,000 jobs across the whole of the province of Ontario.

When the new winter works programme was announced back in September, the Toronto Daily Star of September 8 which I hold in my hand quotes the hon. Prime Minister as saying that about 40,000 jobs in Ontario will be provided by the federal-provincial winter works programme.

The hon. Prime Minister was really dreaming that day. Nothing has happened in the intervening 3 months to suggest that the number of jobs to be created in the winter works programme will reach anywhere near a 40,000 figure. Because it started earlier, it may get beyond the 10,000 figure, but the 40,000 figure is sheer dreaming.

I suggest the winter works programme is ineffective for this reason: It is leaving too much of the financial burden upon the municipalities. The arrangement is that the federal government will meet 50 per cent and the provincial government 25 per cent of the labour costs alone.

This means leaving the remaining 25 per cent of labour costs and all the material costs to the municipality. Most municipalities simply are not in a position to meet 25 per cent of the labour costs plus all of the material costs. Therefore a pathetically inadequate number of projects were planned last winter and are going to be planned this winter.

Mr. Speaker, the only answer to this is that if the federal and the provincial governments are serious, they should be willing to underwrite 75 per cent of not only the labour costs but of the material costs of the winter works programme.

In this way, the people that the hon. leader of the Opposition was disturbed about, because they do not have a job tomorrow morning, can be given a job tomorrow morning or next week, at least some time soon.

The criticism may be made that this opens the door to municipalities dreaming up projects with exorbitant material costs in them. We all know that these projects have to be approved so there is available through this approval the necessary safeguard against any project with exorbitant material costs in it.

But if we want the overburdened and debt-ridden municipalities to really build up winter works programmes that are going to provide the amount of employment required this winter, we are not going to get it unless we are willing to share more of the costs.

The second point I want to mention, Mr. Speaker, is that if we want to reduce unemployment, I suggest it is time for this government to reduce the legal work week in the province of Ontario from the present 48-hour week to a 40-hour week.

The proposal of 40 hours a week is not radical. It is one that even the civil service has had implemented or is in the process of implementing. The net result of this move would, in a broader way across the province, be to spread the employment, instead of overworking some people, when others are walking the street looking for jobs.

The third point I propose, Mr. Speaker, is that supplementary estimates should be brought into the House this fall, to launch a low-cost housing programme immediately.

The speech from the Throne talks rather vaguely about a new approach to low-cost housing. Talking about a new approach now means that, at best, the government is going to provide some jobs in November, 1961, for next winter.

We want some jobs now, so that the effect of it can not only be in the housing and construction industry, but in all the related industries. This can be done by bringing in supplementary estimates immediately so that we tackle this with the degree of certainty the seriousness of the problem merits.

My fourth point is that if we want to start the wheels of industry going again—and this is something the hon. leader of the Opposition, I thought, was touching on—is to put purchasing power into the hands of the people whose needs are so immediate, that they will spend it immediately, that we will build consumer purchasing power in this nation and this province.

I suggest that this can be done by the federal government, with the urgings of their fellow Progressive-Conservatives in this House, to increase unemployment benefits so that these people will not have to live on something like $30 a week. We should also increase the general welfare benefits because these are the kind of benefits that go into the hands of people who are going to spend it immediately. They are not going to put it in a sock and hide it under the bed, or something like that, for a long time. It will flow out immediately into the economic life-stream of the country.

As a result, instead of having clogged markets, it will remove products from markets and put factories back into full instead of partial production. At the same time, it will bring some of the unemployed off the streets. This is the kind of thing that would have relatively immediate effect and the government can make its contribution to it.

I have just touched briefly, Mr. Speaker, on these 4 points. Other hon. members in the CCF group will expand them if, and when, they ever get a chance to participate in this debate. But there is one final point, and, by coincidence, it was the final one made by the hon. Prime Minister upon which I want to lay chief emphasis. This situation provides Ontario with an historic opportunity under schedule M of The National Vocational Training Act, which makes federal funds available to the extent of 75 per cent of capital costs, on retraining to expand in a major way our trade and technical training facilities in this province.

At the moment, Mr. Speaker, the unemployed lines in the province of Ontario are swollen by two groups:

They are swollen by older workers, who have been tossed out of industry for one reason or another, and who need an upgrading of skills or retraining before they can once again find a position in the working force.

Secondly, we have—as the hon. leader of the Opposition pointed out—tens of thousands of young people who have gone out into the labour market without the necessary skills to be able to secure and hold employment.

These people can be trained under schedule M of The National Vocational Training Act under an arrangement in which the federal government is willing to meet 75 per cent of the cost.

In other words, if the province of Ontario is willing to share the spending of $1 along with the municipality, the federal government is committed to match it with $3.

The thing that has always puzzled me about schedule M and the possibilities for retraining in trades and technical education, Mr. Speaker, is that this has been in existence now for quite some years—I think it is 16 or 18 years—and the province of Ontario has actually availed itself of it very little.

Moreover, our present apprenticeship training programme does not meet the widespread needs for technical and trades training, because it has two major disabilities.

Our apprenticeship training programme has age limits in it, and they are low age limits. The older worker therefore, in effect, is barred from the kind of retraining on the apprenticeship scheme.

Secondly, you must have a job before you can be apprenticed in one of the designated trades. But a job is precisely what the unskilled younger worker does not have. So, it becomes foolish to say that he must have a job before he can be trained.

We have to break this vicious circle and provide the opportunity for training that will fit the worker, whether he is young or old, for modern employment.

Canada has done a relatively poor job in developing its human resources. The hon. Prime Minister suggested this. Then, a little later, he made a statement about the province of Ontario having the finest educational institutions anywhere in the world.

Mr. Speaker, may I borrow a phrase from the late Sidney Smith, when he wrote a foreword for the youth commission studies at the end of the war? Mr. Smith referred to the fact that we have done a very good job in educating our professionals and he concluded by saying that we have botched the education of the great mass of the workers. That was in 1945.

We have escaped the consequences of our failure to develop our human resources, because we have been importing the skills from Europe and elsewhere, and we are still doing so. But, with the higher skills required by modern employment, our past failures are now finally catching up with us.

I read a rather significant figure in the paper, the other day, indicating that unemployment today, among unskilled workers, runs at about 15 per cent; some 3 times what it is in the general working force.

Now there is no mystery, Mr. Speaker, as to the reason for this.

I have here, for example, a document put out by the vocational training advisory council dated December 3 and 4 of last year, 1959.

In the back of this document they provide us with some interesting figures. They point out, for example, that in secondary school enrolment in Canada—this is for the benefit of the hon. Prime Minister who thinks our educational system is the finest in the world—that in the secondary school enrolment in Canada, 82.5 per cent are enrolled in academic courses, 9 per cent in commercial courses, only 4.3 per cent in technical courses, and only 2.1 per cent in trade courses.

The interesting thing is, if we compare these figures with others on the next page, we find that the professional occupations in Canada represent only 8 per cent of our working force.

In other words, 8 per cent of our working force, along with the skilled occupations representing 17 per cent, a total of 25, are drawn from this 82 per cent in our secondary schools. The white-collar occupations are 29 per cent, the semi-skilled and unskilled occupations are 31 per cent; all the other occupations are 15 per cent.

In other words, we have an educational system which has traditionally failed to provide the kind of trade and technical training for the person whose particular aptitudes do not lead him into an academic course.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Why?

Mr. MacDonald: What does the hon. member mean, why?

Mr. Lewis: Why? Where is education falling down on technical training? We cannot force them into it.

Mr. MacDonald: I will come to that. The result is a failure of long standing to develop our human capital. Recent studies have indicated how vitally important human capital is for economic growth.

Here, Mr. Speaker, for those who are interested in economics—and I presume the whole House is, in a debate of this kind—is something new that we might well consider: The conventional view has always been that physical capital goods have been primarily responsible for increases in labour productivity. In other words, a greater investment in machines will increase productivity.

But there are some interesting figures coming out now to indicate that this is not the case. For example, in the United States, where studies have taken place, it has been shown that the average increase in the physical output there from 1919 to 1957 was 3.1 per cent per year while the total input of man hours of intangible capital during the same period was only 1 per cent each year. This leaves us with 2.1 per cent or two-thirds of the total actual increase to be explained in terms of intangible capital, or improvements in efficiency other than that due to machines.

Let me quote, for example, from testimony in the hearings of the joint economic committee of the American Congress:

Professor Theodore Schultz, of the University of Chicago, has been testing a hypothesis that the explanation for the remaining two-thirds is to be found largely in the rapid accumulation of human wealth represented by training, education and additional capabilities based on health and knowledge.

Further, his preliminary studies lead him to the strong belief that the return on human capital exceeds by a wide margin the returns realized on the stock of non-human capital.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the investment in human education and well-being has very important economic values as well as human welfare values.

This brings me back to the point to which the hon. member for York-Humber was drawing attention. It brings me back to the yawning gap in Canada's educational system.

For those hon. members who may be interested in it, I would like to draw their attention to the fact that some 4 years ago, before the estimates of The Department of Education, I spent all of my introductory remarks, to be found in the Hansard of March 14, 1956, in pointing to the gaps of our system of education in the provision of trades training.

I reminded this House, for example, that away back in the year 1908, Dr. John Seath, the then superintendent of education, was sent by the government to examine the trades training facilities in Great Britain and in Europe. He came back and he made a report in the year 1910 which was put on the statute books of the province of Ontario in 1911. This was to establish, in the province of Ontario, legislation for a range of trades training within our public school system.

What has happened in the intervening 49 years? Well, for the benefit of my friend, the hon. member for York-Humber, what has happened is that we have one provincial trades institution on Nassau Street. We have technical courses in our schools which are too closely tied in with the academic courses, with the result that many of the students taking them are plowed under in the academic courses and do not get an opportunity to complete the trades training.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member knows as well as I do that the unions have taken over the training. Do not try to tell the House that.

Mr. MacDonald: My good hon. friend from York-Humber is blaming it all on the unions.

Mr. Lewis: I am not blaming them. I am stating a fact.

Mr. MacDonald: The unions have something to do with a few of the designated trades, and The Department of Labour decides what should be done only in the apprenticeship training courses.

Mr. Lewis: Will the union accept gentlemen from trade schools? No. The hon. member for York South knows it and I know it.

Mr. MacDonald: Just listen. When The Department of Labour proposes what should be done, The Department of Education, in effect, acts as the supplier for this need. The hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Roberts) nods his head in the affirmative.

But here is the situation. This covers only a limited number of designated trades. For example, in the province of Ontario we have never gotten around, in the provincial institute of trades, to providing a trades training for radio and TV technicians.

Next to motor car mechanics, Mr. Speaker, as I look around the world I am now living in, I could not conceive of anything that is more likely to attract youngsters and give them a trades training. Yet we do not have this. We have no trades training for chefs, for meat cutting, for a whole range of things.

Mr. Lewis: Would the unions not object to this?

Mr. MacDonald: They will not object at all.

Mr. Lewis: Oh yes, they will.

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact, for the benefit of the hon. member, I spent last Friday afternoon visiting the provincial institute of trades, so I have an up-to-date picture of what I am talking about at the moment.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): How about my institutions?

Mr. MacDonald: I am about to come to the hon. Minister's institutions. It is remarkable how, when the hon. Minister approaches this question logically and rationally, he will find he is stealing the next paragraph out of my prepared text, because the next paragraph is this:

In recent years, we have added to our advanced training technical facilities by building institutes in Ottawa, Hamilton and Windsor in addition to Ryerson and the Lakehead technical institute.

But the point I am making, Mr. Speaker—and I ask the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions to consider it because I think action in the field is going to help his over-all job—is that we have not yet tackled the job of building the wide range of training facilities which will provide the necessary skills for modern employment for the great mass of our workers—not at the advanced technical level, but down at the trades training level.

The federal government has offered 75 per cent in their recent Throne speech for the capital cost through 1963 in addition to 75 per cent of the actual operation of any re-training courses. So my hope would be that this government would move immediately, not only to meet the urgent need for training for employment now, but for building trades training facilities in this province in order to fill a major and long-standing gap in our educational system.

In this way, we shall be solving something of the future unemployment problem before it develops. Furthermore we will also be solving some of the present unemployment problems, Mr. Speaker, by taking these unskilled people out of the unemployment ranks and providing them with the skills so that they can be returned to the working force later and be able to apply themselves effectively.

In order that the government might move on this kind of an immediate programme for jobs this winter—not long-term planning, but jobs this winter—I want to move, seconded by Mr. K. Bryden, that the proposed amendment to the resolution be further amended by striking out all the words after, "the following words," and substituting the following:

AND THAT this House, while recognizing that the unemployment problem can be permanently solved only through long-term economic planning by the federal government in co-operation with industry, agriculture, labour and provincial and municipal governments, is nevertheless of the opinion that the government of Ontario can make an important contribution to the solution of the current unemployment crisis through an emergency programme of action and to that end urges the government to give consideration to:

(1) Providing in co-operation with the federal government 75 per cent of material as well as labour costs incurred in approved winter works projects;

(2) Increasing allowances to the unemployed and other welfare payments, and urging the federal government to increase unemployment insurance payments, so as to expand consumer purchasing power;

(3) Laying immediate plans for large-scale expansion of public housing projects, with particular emphasis on the provision of low-rental housing;

(4) Taking full advantage of the provisions of schedule M of The National Vocational Training Act under which the federal government will contribute 75 per cent of the operating and capital costs involved in providing trades and technical training;

(5) Introducing legislation immediately to reduce the legal maximum work week from 48 hours to 40 hours.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the development of welfare services during the past decade has been a remarkable accomplishment. I would like to make a few remarks to show the position that this province is in at the present moment in respect to what is being brought up here today.

While there is no true substitute for employment, it is reassuring to know that a wide variety of welfare programmes can, and do, cushion any letdown in economic conditions.

It is apparent that during the course of this fiscal year, almost $76 million will be expended on the basis of provincial legislation to serve needy persons, whether they meet with adversity through unemployment, disablement, ill health or other circumstances of need. And I know that all hon. members of the Legislature have subscribed to the adoption of progressive welfare measures which are shared in part by the federal government and municipalities.

It is evident that Ontario is meeting the lion's share of the cost of the welfare services administered under provincial legislation with the contribution of some $40 million from provincial taxing sources, or 53 per cent of the total expenditure. The federal government provides 27 per cent, and the municipalities 15 per cent; and other sources about 5 per cent.

But more than this, the province provides unconditional grants which are totalling about $26.7 million to underwrite the municipal share of the cost of welfare services at the local level.

I think at this time it would be well to outline some of the built-in stabilizers for both the economy as a whole and in relation to individuals and their basic needs. Provincially, mothers' allowances are available as a total charge on the province at an annual cost exceeding $12 million. General welfare assistance, formerly known as direct relief, is shared by the 3 levels of government at an anticipated gross cost of $24.1 million for the current fiscal year.

I should just add that the numbers receiving assistance through local municipalities in September, 1960, amounted to some 68,635 persons. One year ago, the total number was 75,735, with the result that about 16,900 individuals have been added to the assistance rolls in the course of the past year.

In passing, I might also say that I am pleased indeed that the federal government agreed with Ontario's proposal to remove the insidious .45 per cent restriction which originally accompanied the introduction of the agreement to be made under The Unemployment Assistance Act of Canada.

As a result of the present unemployment assistance agreement, we are sharing in the cost of assistance to employable persons who have either exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits or who were not previously insured, together with the assistance granted to unemployable and borderline employable cases.

More than this, Mr. Speaker, we are extending assistance to native Indian bands living on reserves and we now provide funds for the care of persons in proprietary nursing homes. Also, of course, supplementary aid is available to persons who require assistance beyond the amount granted under the special welfare programme, such as old age security, old age assistance, blind and disabled persons' allowances. Included also are provisions for sharing in the maintenance of all persons in homes for the aged and charitable institutions.

Other basic welfare programmes involve gross expenditures in the following amounts: Old age assistance, $13,535,000; blind persons' allowances, $1,150,000; disabled persons' allowances, $8.5 million; mothers' allowances, $13 million; rehabilitation services, $300,000; child welfare services, $15 million; day nurseries, $510,000; homemakers and nurses' services, $1 million. All these programmes as well as the others mentioned provide a very effective cushion for persons in economic distress.

Hon. members will also know that we have embarked on a very large capital construction programme to make modern homes for the aged available for all who need this special type care. This year, in addition to operating and maintenance grants, we will spend almost $7 million towards the construction of homes for the aged. But the gross sum spent during the past decade, I would say, would come to a total of about $50 million for new construction.

Also, we have made substantial payments to children's aid societies in the form of capital grants as well as to the charitable organizations operating children's institutions. We have also maintained extensive medical services on behalf of public welfare recipients. In fact, $2,246,000 is being directed alone for medical services to persons receiving assistance under the various special welfare programmes.

An additional amount in excess of $1 million is being paid—80 per cent—by the province for the medical care of persons receiving general welfare assistance through the municipalities.

Beyond all these varied programmes administered by Ontario, large amounts of money are directed to persons through federal channels. The war veterans' allowance programme is a case in point.

While the sum of $216 million is being paid in the form of old age security and $163 million for family allowances, I would, of course, remind the House that the unemployment insurance fund makes a decided contribution toward the alleviation of distress caused by unemployment, in the current yearly amount of $175 million. The various monies being spent in Ontario for public welfare and related services total well in excess of $500 million.

Now I suggested earlier that employment is the keynote to progress and, while the numbers of unemployed have increased, I am informed also that more people are employed in Ontario today than at any time in our history. According to the estimates of the federal bureau of statistics on September 17, Canada as a whole—including Ontario—had 5.1 per cent of the labour force unemployed, but in Ontario the unemployment rate was recorded as being 4.6 per cent.

We are all vitally concerned in seeing the province develop at the same pace as during the last number of years, and I am certain that this hesitation in the economy will be overcome. We have taken certain intermediate steps to cope with unemployment by means of the huge capital programme being carried out by the province, at present, at an estimated cost of some $225 million. In addition we will find the winter works programme will create many thousands of jobs, thus providing wages and adding to the further development of the province.

I would agree that this is the time to look forward rather than turn to comparisons with previous years. I do emphasize, however, the many, many stabilizing factors which are effective today to serve persons who, in previous years, would have encountered very grave problems, indeed, in maintaining themselves and their families. I would also emphasize that the public monies which must be found to support this varied and broad programme in the millions of dollars of services to our people undoubtedly places a most heavy burden on the treasury of the province. But, at the same time we are now, as always, firmly committed to lend every assistance possible within our means, to encourage employment and any measures which will lessen unemployment.

I cited these figures, Mr. Speaker, to advise you of the fact that in Ontario it might be very interesting to the people generally—as I am sure it is to the hon. members of this House—to know there are public monies available from federal, provincial, and municipal sources, in the amount in excess of $500 million for public welfare and related services to our people. I am quite sure with this discussion, and with everything else that is being brought about as we see the problem, the people of Ontario need have no excessive fears.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Welfare a question. I recalled, while the hon. Minister described the programme in connection with welfare, that he had stated in the last session that he was going to bring in an amendment to The General Welfare Assistance Act. I have wondered if he has removed these two clauses with respect to that Act: Firstly, that a recipient who applied for welfare assistance had to have 12 rooms in his house in order to get the maximum $50 rent and, secondly, he also had to have a family which did not exceed 6 children. Have these been changed?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Speaker, I know my hon. friend refers to the regulations we spoke about that were to be changed last session. Well, these have just been recently brought in, and there are many changes which have taken place. Also, there have been some additions. In case I might be in error I would much prefer if my hon. friend would table the question so that I can give a proper answer.

Mr. Thompson: The amendments were going to be changed two years ago. I asked last year if they were being changed—the hon. Minister said they were just in the process. Are they, as I understand, still in the process?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, they are not in the process any more. They have been changed.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate.

Having listened to the hon. speakers on the other side of the House, I am of the opinion that this whole debate is an opportunity, an attempt by the government, to avoid and evade its responsibility for the unemployed in this province. The whole wording of this resolution, the whole tenor of the remarks of the government, are to try to throw the blame elsewhere. They do not want to find the federal government too responsible because of their Tory pals whom the present hon. Prime Minister of this province had so much to do with seating in Ottawa, which I am sure even he regrets.

Mr. MacDonald: He sure does.

Mr. Trotter: The problem of unemployment is facing us here in this province, and it is the responsibility of this government to—

Mr. MacDonald: What is the hon. member's side doing now?

Mr. Trotter: —solve the problem of unemployment. All these long-range plans are well and good. It is true that we must have them. But it is not helping the 109,000 unemployed in this province at the present time.

I am glad to hear the hon. member for York-Scarborough say it was an urgent problem. But I certainly wish he would tell our federal Prime Minister. Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker has said: "There is no economic emergency in Canada; there are difficulties."

Well, there certainly are difficulties, and to a large extent these difficulties—this very serious problem which could be a major disaster—are largely the making of the Tory administration of the last 3 years.

Often when we have a depression or unemployment in this country and in this province, we say, "Well, we follow what happens in the United States." If there is a drop in the gross national product in the United States, the same thing will happen here. But when the gross national product dropped in the second quarter, it dropped first in Canada. Now there is a possibility that the same will happen in the United States. If the depression in this country started here, we certainly cannot throw the blame on the United States.

The blame, Mr. Speaker, is here. It is a result of a lack of leadership, a lack of vigour, both in Ottawa and here in this province.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trotter: The shadow of Avro hangs heavy on this House this evening. And that is just a symbol of the manner in which this government has handled industry here in this province.

To start talking about planning now is appallingly late after 14,000 people have been thrown out of work in the Malton area. It is all well and good to blame it on the federal government, but certainly it is a most serious problem for this province.

The hon. Prime Minister of this province talks much about his Department of Economics, but certainly they have done very little in the way of planning or trying to find out what is wrong.

There are so many investigations, so many plans afoot these days. The Senate is investigating unemployment; the federal hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has a sub-committee of the federal government investigating unemployment; and I understand there are 4 or 5 hon. Ministers of this government who are supposed to be investigating unemployment as a group.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: I would suggest that the hon. Prime Minister of this province get in his oversized limousine and drive down Spadina Avenue, and he will find there is a mighty lot of unemployment here in this city.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Would it be all right if I went down in my Chev?

Mr. Trotter: I would be glad to drive the hon. Prime Minister myself if it would wake him up to the problem that is facing this province. There is in this country, Mr. Speaker, 45 per cent more unemployment this October than there was last. I am certainly glad to see that even though this government tries to throw the blame some place else, we are given an opportunity to say something and try to bring it to the attention of the people of this province.

Now, the hon. member who introduced this resolution did a lot of talking about foreign borrowing and he blamed the banks for many of the problems. I suggest he should go and tell the federal hon. Minister of Finance and Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker. They are the individuals who have the power in this country and I suggest that they do something about it; not sit around here and try to blame the banks.

If he wanted to talk about the mortgage rate, Mr. Speaker, if he wanted to give us a positive suggestion, the province could use its credit power to give second mortgages on all the people's homes. In other words, put some money into the economy and give the economy a shot in the arm. But we do not hear any positive suggestion of that kind from the Tory administration which we have here.

Now, the hon. member for York-Scarborough asked many questions and he did not give us any answers, except one, with which I was rather concerned. Most of us, certainly all of us on the Liberal side, want to see retraining done. But the hon. member for York-Scarborough seemed to be talking about taking young people off into the forest for 3 years and it sounded too much like Mr. R. B. Bennett's Tory work camp, and I hope that was not the type of retraining they wanted to have.

In dealing with the hon. member for York-Scarborough's address, Mr. Speaker, he said what we need is imagination, enterprise and hard work. We certainly do. But we are not getting it from that side of the House. The government of this province is showing no imagination and no enterprise, and is certainly doing no hard work.

He said also we should focus attention on unemployment, but I would gather that the hon. member's leader, the hon. Prime Minister, wants to get the problem a long way out, for he said we should look at it from a long-range point of view. The Tory long range however, seems to be a long, long way off, and what we are interested in is getting work for our people who are unemployed in this province now.

The hon. Prime Minister talks of the colour of uniforms back in 1914 and I think that is his attitude, that is what is in his mind in approaching these problems that face us in the year 1960. He blames the slide or so-called depression, saying it started back in 1952.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall these figures to you, that from 1950 to 1956 our industrial production rose 20 per cent, and our investment increase was up 24 per cent over that period of time. But from 1956 to 1959, instead of going up 20 per cent the industrial production increased only 7 per cent, and the same thing happened with investment capital, only it has been worse in the last 3 years. From 1956 to 1959, there was a decrease.

Some people say the Liberals, when they are in power, are just lucky; they do not seem to hit the depressions. But I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is time the people in this province and in this country got lucky again and put in a Liberal government.

One of the most feeble efforts that this government has put forward in recent times is the so-called winter works programme. They can have no conception of the difficulty of unemployment when they come through with such a measly attempt at solving a problem that is becoming increasingly dangerous. Unless we do something quickly, it can have a cumulative effect.

We have heard in this House tonight about the programme they had last year, with the 9,000 they supplied work for, between 9,000 and 10,000 people. I understand the provincial government last year through the winter works programme gave $3 million.

This year, I believe it plans to make it $5 million so that we can expect they are going to be able to put to work about 12,000 people. If at the present time we have 109,000 unemployed, which is increasing all the time, we can see that this government has little or no intention whatsoever of trying to solve the real hardships that our people are facing in this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister and his cohorts over on the government side want to talk about foreign trade. They want to get away from the problems that are in the province, they want to talk about something they cannot touch or cannot solve.

For one thing the hon. Prime Minister talked about trade with the United Kingdom. Well, he should have talked to Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker some time ago when at Mont Tremblant the British government came and offered free trade to this country in various stages. But instead of even discussing the offer, hon. Mr. Fleming and Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker would just not touch it.

And I may recall, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. Prime Minister was speaking on that subject, that the Financial Post, certainly no Liberal journal and I daresay a good staunch pillar of the Tory party, had to say on government action at the time they threw out the British offer that they were "not doing their homework."

I suggest to this House that this government is not doing its homework. It is not coming up and trying to meet responsibilities as it should.

The hon. Prime Minister says he will give us a brochure from The Department of Economics. I suggest if they let another contract to print another book, they do some work. The people want to see results in dollars and cents and not just a brochure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one word or two about the hon. Minister of Public Welfare. He should have a real interest in this problem which is supposed to be the area The Department of Public Welfare looks after—helping those in need. Of course, it is far more economical to have people doing work that is useful, instead of being charges on The Department of Public Welfare. But I do agree, Mr. Speaker, with the hon. Minister of Public Welfare when he says the government is putting money into the hands of those who need it. It helps prime the pump. As hon. members know, the Liberal federal government did much to give this country prosperity by use of the family allowances scheme, and if it had not been for the social measures of the Liberal administration from 1935 to 1957, this nation would be in a disastrous situation. I say this because so many social measures were put through by that federal government there is a "good cushion," as the hon. Minister of Public Welfare said.

If the hon. Minister of Public Welfare will recall the estimates during the last sitting of this House, old age assistance pension payments were down $429,000; blind persons' allowance payments were down $12,000; disabled persons' allowances were down $324,000. The capital disbursements of this department were down $800,000. It certainly is no indication that this administration is making any effort to prime the pump or to put money into the hands of people who will spend it and, as a result, help the business as a whole.

Now my understanding, Mr. Speaker, is that the spending of The Department of Highways this year is down $25 million. Certainly the government cannot be intending to create more employment. This situation has been with them for some time.

And again, Mr. Speaker, I point out there was over $65 million voted by this House to be spent by this administration on public works, which money was never spent but was used to show those phoney surpluses over the last few years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a few words regarding this party that has had the good sense to vote itself out of existence.

When I heard the hon. member for York South ranting away about the Americans, he sounded more Tory than Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker, and on Mr. Diefenbaker's pet subject, and I wondered if he had gone Tory. First of all they had a manifesto in Regina which they threw out in Winnipeg a few years ago. Then, recently, they threw out the party altogether; manifestoes and all.

I was rather interested in hearing their amendment to this resolution, Mr. Speaker; they had 5 items, and 4 of these had in essence, not so very long ago, been given in a speech on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation network by the hon. member for Dovercourt. I was wondering if they were desperate for ideas and were copying what the hon. member had to say.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I should, through you, draw to the attention of hon. members of this House other instances of the poverty of ideas of this former CCF party member.

The hon. member for York South read a quotation. It said:

If it is men that count, then our first concern must be with arrangements for conserving and developing personal talents, —and so on.

We have read that book too, and I am glad to see that he is reading from a good Liberal book. From my notes, it is by John Kenneth Galbraith and is called the Liberal Hour. I am glad to see that those hon. members are improving their minds by reading this.

In case they do not know who Mr. Galbraith is, he is the advisor to the President-elect of the United States (Mr. Kennedy) and certainly is no socialist. I am glad to see that the hon. gentlemen to my left are reading this good literature.

There is one more point in which the hon. member for York South was casting aspersions on Liberal trade policies. I found it on one page here when he was talking about the Atlantic free trade scheme. The Liberals, of course, have been in favour of this for some time, but I read from one of our older pamphlets, 1958, which said that a Liberal government would give an immediate, sympathetic and detailed consideration to the British proposal. That is the one hon. Mr. Fleming and Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker would not bother considering. I quote:

To the British proposal for the gradual establishment of a free trade area between the United Kingdom and Canada, we have taken into account both the new opportunities that might be open for Canadian industry and the importance of maintaining existing industries and living standards in Canada.

I rather suspect, therefore, that the hon. member for York South has not only been reading the Liberal Hour, but he has been reading the new statements of Liberal policy as well as listening to the hon. member for Dovercourt.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that what is needed in this province, and what this government should do and must do if it is going to solve the problems of unemployment as they are before us today—and I do not mean years in the future—is that we must help these people as they live today, and as they should be able to work today. They have the right to work. The vast majority of these people who are unemployed want to work, and they need to work.

I have come upon some pretty unhappy and depressing situations, Mr. Speaker. One of the most depressing is when people who have been working for The Department of Public Works phone up and say they have been laid off. They have been laid off by The Department of Public Works in this province, in the last few days, and at a time, Mr. Speaker, when the government should be doing something, should be expanding and trying to develop public works.

Instead, we get word of the layoffs.

This shows that, in this province, there is a lack of leadership, a lack of drive, a lack of policy. It has been demonstrated here again this evening by the very fact that the government has nothing to offer. It wants to talk about trade. It wants to talk about the banking system, something which it cannot touch, and something over which it has no control at all, unless the hon. Prime Minister can persuade Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker that something should be done.

For example, think of what this province could do in retraining people who are unemployed. Here is a situation that would be of immediate help to many hundreds of people in this province. But here is the record of this government:

According to the report of a director of Canadian vocational training for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, Ontario offered only 13,496 days of training to people who are unemployed, because of lack of skills.

This is slightly more than 5 per cent of the days given in all of Canada under schedule M during 1958-1959. British Columbia provided 64,384 days, Alberta a little over 47,000 days, Manitoba over 51,000 days of training.

In view of the size of our population and the needs of the unemployed, it would appear that a large expansion of the training programme should be undertaken on schedule M.

Despite the remarks of the hon. member for York South, I would like to draw to the attention of this House through you, Mr. Speaker, that schedule M is legislation put through by a federal Liberal administration. In these trying times, any legislation we have to turn to has been passed by a Liberal administration.

So I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it would be a good thing for this province and for this country, if we had here a Liberal administration. Not until that time will we be able to solve our unemployment problem; then this province and this country will once again be able to go forward, a prosperous, a great country, and a land of opportunity where it will be a mecca for hundreds of thousands of people in Europe, instead of a situation we have today in which they are kept out because there is supposed to be, and there is, unemployment in this province.

What we need is vigorous leadership, and what we need is men who have the energy and vigour to carry on. And, Mr. Speaker, we are not going to find it in the present administration of this government.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that back in 1958 this government started the original winter works programme. Admittedly, as a result, not too many persons were hired. But, as time went on, the federal government picked up the idea because it thought it was good, and, as a result many more thousands of persons have been hired.

No matter what anyone may say, the figures are here. First of all, I will give the figures for last year. Last year, the figures show that there were approximately 10,000 persons hired under that programme, 187 municipalities and 669 applications. This year to date—and this is now up to November 25, 1960—already we have had 197 municipalities apply. There have been 970 applications as compared with 438. This will provide work for 13,165 persons, and as I say, it is only up to November. This means 723,000 work days, and our cost to date is about $2.9 million, which shows the increase over last year.

For the comparable 6-week period of last year's scheme, the figures are: 124 municipalities, 438 applications and employment for 6,582 men.

The point I wish to make is that already the applications are flowing in to a much greater extent than they did last year. It is quite apparent that this winter works programme is paying off despite what is said by the hon. members on the opposite side.

We will go into this year. We will go into North York at the time the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) was reeve and give all the details.

Now, I shall outline the rest of this winter works programme, and indicate that it is not yet tied into certain municipalities, although this is most important to them. I want to give some details about the camp ground—picnic area programme. In order that our winter works programme may also be as broad and as successful as possible, the province, in co-operation with the federal government, is again planning a large camp ground—picnic area construction programme.

The government has been mindful of the increased popularity of outdoor activity in this province during the summer months, and is making every effort to provide for recreational facilities across the entire length and breadth of this province. Hon. members will realize that during the winter period a great deal of groundwork and preparation for these camp grounds and picnic areas could be undertaken, and that the work is of a nature that would require a high content of labour, particularly unskilled labour.

In all cases the government directs its operations into those areas where the labour content of the work undertaken is greater, and whenever possible, where unemployment is heaviest. The programme this year covers the period from November 1, 1960 to April 20, 1961. To illustrate the extent of this programme, not just one but 3 departments of the government will be engaged in camp ground and picnic site construction.

On the problem of highways, I have been asked to draw to the attention of hon. members that there will be a schedule of picnic site construction in 18 districts throughout the province. The extent of this programme is illustrated by the fact that projects will be undertaken in the London, Stratford, Owen Sound, Toronto, Port Hope, Kingston, Ottawa, Bancroft, Huntsville, North Bay, Cochrane, Sault Ste. Marie, Fort William and Kenora areas, amongst others.

The work will include landscaping, tree planting, clearing and grading for parking space, the construction of access roads, fireplaces and picnic tables, as well as filling and developing certain areas where necessary. The total cost of these projects is expected to amount to about $131,000. Projects in 12 of the 18 districts have already been started.

The Ontario-St. Lawrence development commission, administered by The Department of Planning and Development, has undertaken a plan to construct a total of 15 parks along the St. Lawrence river, stretching from Kingston to the Quebec border. Projects this year will be undertaken at Adolphustown, Ivy League park, Brown's Bay camping area, Riverside park, Chrysler Beach, Chrysler park, Mirrison and Nairn islands, Farran park, the Long Sault parkway, Woodlands park, Woodland park picnic area, Mille Roches park, Charlottenburgh park and Glengarry park.

The work will include the removal of old and broken trees and the planting of new ones, grading and the construction of lavatory buildings, sewage and water facilities. These projects are expected to cost $329,000.

The Department of Lands and Forests is planning work on 62 different parks throughout the entire province this year. These range from Aylmer, Cochrane, Fort Frances, Geraldton, Gogama, Hespeler, Kapuskasing, Kemptville, Kenora, Lindsay, Maple, North Bay, Parry Sound, Pembroke and Port Arthur, pretty well across the province.

In total, these projects are expected to cost about $1 million through the winter period. It is estimated that 1,900 men will be put to work each month as a result. Since the work will cover a period of 6 months, a considerable amount of employment will be generated.

There are special winter works programmes under other public works. The government each year has made it a custom to continue on public works programmes throughout the province during the winter months, at extra cost, in an effort to keep jobs open whenever possible.

The Department of Highways intends to continue work on contracts during the winter months, valued at more than $1 million. These include the London, Port Hope, Ottawa, North Bay, New Liskeard, Fort William, Kenora, Chatham, Hamilton, Owen Sound, Kingston, Huntsville, Sault Ste. Marie and Fort William districts. The work will also include the construction of several bridges.

A great deal of the cost of these projects will be for labour. At the present time it is estimated that The Department of Highways' winter works programme, including the picnic site programme, will this year employ an additional 18,000 men throughout the period. The programme of The Department of Public Works is going to be enlarged upon by my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), but I am told it will come to about $99 million and it is estimated that more than 5,000 persons will be employed on these projects.

The government is also engaged in a programme of roads to resources construction in conjunction with the federal government. Over a period of 7 years, $15 million will be spent on these. They will provide valuable access to mineral-rich resources in the northern section of the province. One of the conditions of this scheme is to do as much work as possible in the winter time, particularly that of clearing and levelling. This provides work for a great number of men. Work to be carried out this year is expected to cost about $1.5 million.

So far as the water resources commission is concerned, they have several very large projects in hand. As a matter of fact, to date—and they have only been in operation for 4 years—they have over 132 contracts, representing a total expenditure of capital money of over $52 million.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): And who put up the money? The municipal taxpayers.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I have certain statistics prepared for the 1960 season, to show what it will mean in various ways so far as their activities are concerned. I am told by the officials over there that 682 families will have their wage earners provided with 4.75 months of work through the water resources winter works project.

Each of these wage earners will receive an average of $1,632 as winter relief employment wages. Over $9 million of capital works are involved. To date the winter works programme is nearly double that of last year, and the subsidy paid to each municipality—that is, through both federal and provincial assistance—represents an average saving of 2 mills in taxes per community for 1960, which I admit is no mean accomplishment.

To conclude, sir, and to indicate that we have not just been talking about long-range programmes, but short-term programmes which will give immediate assistance, it is all laid out right here for those who wish to see.

Recently, as everyone knows, the federal government announced a programme to assist the municipalities so far as sewage works are concerned. I have not yet seen the bill, but I was able to get a typewritten copy of excerpts from the bill. A sum of $100 million is to be placed from the consolidated revenue fund with the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The Governor-General in council permits this corporation to loan to municipalities two-thirds of the cost of the sewerage project for a term not exceeding the useful life of the project—

An hon. member: Oh, what on earth—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: It is a funny thing to me, Mr. Speaker, hon. members of the Opposition say: "What are you going to do to help these poor unfortunate people?" But as soon as we indicate what we are going to do, certainly with the people's money, they say: "Who is going to put up the money?"

Mr. Singer: Who has to pay it back? The municipal taxpayers.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Why do not those hon. members go back to school?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, if I may continue. Mr. Speaker, I have come to the conclusion that these hon. members do not really want to hear the facts—

Hon. Mr. Frost: They do not know and they do not care.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I have never heard so much propaganda as I have heard tonight from the other side of the House. It is obvious the hon. members opposite only wanted this debate to bring out all their stuff about the poor, unfortunate people.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: We brought out the facts. Listen to the propaganda!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. I would ask the members to give others full consideration when they are making speeches and I believe that all members will have an opportunity of making their own speeches.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, a considerable sum of money is going to be made available to help the municipalities with their sewerage projects. It could be $100 million. Provision is made for that amount if there is a demand there from the municipalities; but the initiative rests with the municipalities.

Just as we have had instances up to this time of a great demand by the municipalities to have help not only with their sewerage but with their water problems, I am convinced that this programme will also help the municipalities. Furthermore, there is a factor here which should be a great incentive to the municipality because provision is made for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to forgive a municipality paying 25 per cent of its loan if the work is completed before March 31, 1963. The corporation will also forgive 25 per cent of the interest that has accrued in respect of the loan up to the date of completion.

I do not understand all the implications contained in this bill because it has not been fully explained as yet. But I talked to the federal hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker), and I hope to see him in a day or so to find out exactly what regulations are going to be passed to support this particular legislation. But it is my hope that with the co-operation of the municipalities—and we have had every co-operation from them to date—and with the assistance of the water resources commission which is geared up to handle a tremendous amount of this kind of work, it should all be very helpful to our economy.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister has suggested that we could ask questions in order to derive information at the end of his talk. I speak with concern about some of my constituents who had applied for the winter works programme and some who are trying now for it.

As I understand it, before they can be accepted for the winter works programme, they have to come under public welfare. This means that they have to sell their home, turn in their car, no matter if it is a 1935 car, and then their name is put on the list in order to get on the winter works programme.

The second point that I am concerned about is that I have listened to the talk about the winter works programme of last year. Am I correct in thinking that the average number of days that this provided work for men was 40 days out of the whole winter?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Worked out as an average per man, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that information. I will find out for the hon. member and let him know. But as far as the first part of the question is concerned, it is my understanding that to register one has to go through the national unemployment agency service office. It is then decided whether a man has qualified to take part in the winter works programme. I understand they do have to be unemployed in the strict sense of the word; they must have no other source of employment and must not be receiving unemployment insurance.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a further question. In my riding there are a great number of municipalities that are not organized. These people do not come under the winter works programme. What is to be done about those people?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is why I read out so many of these other projects which are being spread across the province including picnic areas, roads, and so on. These will help those people who are not within an organized municipality.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister what was the total amount of money spent by his government for the winter works programme during the winter of 1959?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: The answer is $1,171,373.96.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): What was the amount we voted on for that?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: It was $3 million gross, which meant $1,333,333 net, for the municipal portion of the scheme.

Mr. Belanger: So we spent half of the $3 million—roughly?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is one way to put it. Another way to put it is that the initiative, as I said, is left to the municipalities. If they had come in with requests for $500 million worth, we would have been prepared to give them the money. No matter what the amount is this year—I think it is $7 million gross—we have it in the estimates; it is available.

So far it appears we are committed for $2.9 million from Ontario funds. If it happens that the demands from the municipalities are such that they run over, the money will be made available.

We have to put some amount in the estimates in order to know where we are going, and that is the amount provided. It is entirely up to the municipalities and we have given them every opportunity. The programme has been advanced in time, and it has been expanded. We have done everything we can to encourage them.

Mr. Belanger: In regard to these people who live in these unorganized municipalities, the hon. Minister referred to the picnic areas that are going to be developed. Will there be camps set up for these people? Otherwise they will have difficulty in getting to them.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Where they have to go out some distance from their source of employment?

Mr. Belanger: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Yes, facilities are made for camping and for feeding the persons.

An hon. member: Are school boards allowed to participate in the winter works programme?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, the application is made through the municipality. No provision has been made in the winter works programme for the construction of either schools or hospitals. We queried that a year or so ago and the answer we were given was that already a great deal of money is being given to the municipalities for this particular purpose and, therefore, they are excepted from the programme.

I might say though, to enlarge on that point to the hon. member, that the programme this year has been extended considerably to cover the cost of municipal structures. That could include band shells, skating rinks, athletic structures around athletic fields, and so on.

Mr. Belanger: The request must be made by the municipality and not by the school board?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is right.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments. I want to speak with respect to an industry in this province which has never suffered from unemployment. I refer to farming. On the contrary, farmers as a group can never find enough hours in the day to do all the work that they have to do. It was not my intention to enter into this debate on unemployment. But since it does tie in with the increasing markets for farm commodities, I thought I should make a few observations at this time.

Unemployment has been, to some extent, created, I presume, by the evolution which has taken place in agriculture in the past 20 years, due in chief to mechanization and the fact that we have 38,000 fewer farmers in the province of Ontario than we had some 20 years ago. We have a great many so-called farmers in this province who, perhaps, are affecting the labour market inasmuch as they are working part time as farmers and part time in other types of employment.

However, what we farmers have experienced for a number of years, and what we have thought might happen in our economy, is apparently taking place at the present time. We have found ourselves, as farmers, in the cost-price squeeze. The price of everything the farmer had to buy, somehow got just a bit too high, and as a result the net income of the farmer has suffered in the past few years. I hope that in any policy or programme which is adopted, nothing will be done to increase the value of the Canadian dollar by implementing any further restrictions or tariffs which would raise the cost of farming in this province and in Canada.

We should be encouraging trade rather than putting restrictions upon it by any raising of tariffs or any other means which will raise the cost of what people have to buy in this country. In my opinion as a farmer, prices are high enough now and we would be in a much better position in world markets were we able to trade more freely with a lower-priced dollar than we presently have in Canada.

I might say that the best market that we in Ontario and Canada ever had, as far as a long-range market is concerned, has been that which we enjoyed in Great Britain. With war-time production, when it was necessary to see how much we could produce here in Canada in order to feed the people of Great Britain, and following the war, with restrictions on European trading with dollar countries, we developed in this country a generation which knew nothing about the balance of trade, or of trying to develop trade in Great Britain and the European market.

Following the organization of The Department of Agriculture with whose help we found how to grow two blades of grass where but one grew before, we discovered that we had neglected to give proper consideration to the marketing of farm products. This was the main purpose in the reorganization of the department earlier this year when it was divided into a department of production and a department of marketing.

It is our intention to make further studies in connection with research in agricultural products. I think there is a great field in agriculture for research and development in farm products, particularly to discover further uses for them.

In addition to that, it is our intention to encourage wider sale of farm products in outside markets. It is not our desire or intention to interfere in any way with the federal departments concerned with and responsible for trade and commerce in agricultural products and the export of Canadian goods. Whatever efforts we put forth will be supplemental to those carried out by the federal government.

It is our feeling that there is need for a study to be made of the potential in the British market, particularly in view of the increased purchasing power which the people in Great Britain have at the present time. Such a study is also warranted by the fact that a generation has grown up in this province and in this country which has very little idea of the tastes and requirements of the consuming public overseas.

It was my privilege to head up an agricultural export market study group comprised of representatives of commodity groups as well as processors representing the products which we have available for export.

As far as the export of food products is concerned, outside of wheat and one or two other agricultural commodities, practically all the exportable farm commodities in Canada come from the province of Ontario.

Our feeling is that there is an overseas market to be developed. With that in mind, considerable time was spent in Great Britain to determine what the British consumer preferences might be.

I do not intend to go into any details in connection with particular commodities at this time, since there is a full report being printed in connection with the various exportable commodities along with recommendations proposed by the group which made the study. This report will shortly be presented to all the hon. members of this House. The chief object of the study group was to inquire into the possibilities of increased export trade in Ontario agricultural products now possible as a result of the removal during 1959-1960 of most of the United Kingdom restrictions on imports of food from the dollar countries.

On their return home, the representatives of the commodity group reported they were convinced that there is a definite possibility of renewing and expanding the prewar trade relationship that was so mutually satisfactory prior to World War II.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that it is my intention that this group will not just simply make a trip overseas and make a study for the time being, but that it will continue as a group to continue to study potential development of markets overseas. The group was very well received over there and there was a good deal of enthusiasm. They made over 500 contacts with trade representatives in the 3 weeks they were overseas, so I assure the hon. members that they were extremely busy.

I will leave it up to the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton), who accompanied us representing the grain, grass and clover seed section of the study group, to go into more details in connection with the individual activities of the members of the committee.

As I said, it is not our intention to interfere with the export activities of the federal department, and I want to give credit to the new federal hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce for his awareness of the situation and the necessity to develop export trade. That is evident from the fact he has called together his trade commissioners from across the entire world for a conference on December 5 to 9 at which 119 representatives from

The Department of Trade and Commerce will be called together to discuss the possibilities of expanding Canada's trade.

I feel there is a very definite field where we, as a province, can assist, and that is in the matter of promoting and developing quality products.

There were 3 things which seemed to stand out more clearly than anything else in the conclusions that were reached upon our return. The first was that we must put more and more emphasis on the quality of farm products. It is one thing to produce the commodity but it is just as important—in fact it is more important—to make sure that the quality of that product is of the very best.

The British housewife, perhaps, spends more of her dollar on food than does the housewife in practically any other country. The British people like food and the British housewife is very selective. I would say to the producers in the province of Ontario that it is very essential that we must at all times be quality-conscious in order to compete with other countries exporting to the United Kingdom.

The British market should not be considered as something in the nature of a dumping ground where we can dispose of surpluses of one commodity or another. Rather it must be considered as a market to be developed, a market where the trade and consuming public will have confidence in the quality of the products that we make available to them and that will ensure a continuity of supply.

There is no point in building up a market this year unless we are prepared to give a continuity of supply in that particular commodity next year and in the succeeding years.

There is one other matter that stood out in addition to quality of product and continuity of supply. That is that the price must be competitive. I feel that—in spite of the fact that we are living in a high-priced economy, influenced as we are to a great extent by trends in the United States of America. Perhaps I should not say this, but sometimes, I think, we, in Canada, would have more of a Canadian spirit, and we would be much better off as a people, if we were about 1,000 miles removed from the United States and were not Americanized, but were more Canadianized.

I feel that we can trade with these countries, but we will not be able to trade with Britain and with Western Europe—and I mention Western Europe because some members of the trade group visited several countries in Western Europe, particularly in respect to tobacco exports. We can trade with them if our prices remain as at present, providing we give them a quality product.

I feel that if we are going to compete in the European market with its population of nearly 100 million people who are producing only about 60 per cent of what they consume, we will also find a tremendous market potential in Great Britain.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that market can be developed through the production of good quality products, if we do not price ourselves out of the market.

At the present time, as far as flue-cured tobacco is concerned, we have very little competition price-wise. But, at some later date during this session of the Legislature, it is my intention to give further details to the House in respect to the mission I headed overseas.

It is our intention to establish a market development branch in The Department of Agriculture. It is our intention to place representatives overseas in order to be, what I might call, "trouble-shooters."

I think it is very important, whether it is cheese, livestock products, tobacco or any other exportable product, that we should have someone over there working with the trade to deal with any complaints with respect to quality or any other problems. We should have someone over there who is fairly conversant with Ontario farm production, and Ontario farm commodities. Such representatives could follow up on those complaints, working back here with the processor and the primary producer, in order to establish a better feeling of goodwill which, I am sure, will bear fruit insofar as the export of farm products to the United Kingdom and Western Europe is concerned.

I feel that it is absolutely essential for us, in Ontario, and in Canada, to be able to trade on a competitive basis in the free markets of the world. I think that the survival of agriculture in this country, and the survival of our whole Canadian economy, is tied up with trading as freely as possible with other peoples in the free world.

From information which was brought to our attention from various—particularly government—sources, there was some concern from an agricultural standpoint, if Great Britain should become a part of the European trading bloc.

I feel that such a step would not be necessary, if we were to appreciate what a great market Great Britain has for our products, and if we also were to appreciate the fact that Great Britain, herself, has to export in order to live. I think we should have trade just as freely as possible between ourselves and Great Britain. If Great Britain should join the free trading bloc in Europe, it could have very detrimental effects on the export of Canadian farm products.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to elaborate further, at this time, on the purpose of our visit overseas. I may add that every member of the party was more than impressed with the possibilities and the potential. In addition, I am sure that it is something we must keep working on, must keep developing. We must also establish confidence on the part of the British buying public and the British housewife. We must make sure of the quality and the continuity of supply as far as Ontario farm products are concerned.

It is our intention to place over there representatives of the agricultural industry in the province of Ontario to assist in developing a market in Great Britain.

An hon. member: Are there none there at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: There are none there at the present time; no agricultural people as such.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): I am interested in the latest entrant into the ranks of the Liberal party, when the hon. Minister of Agriculture tells us that he too is a free-trader and has no sympathy with the attitude now prevalent at Ottawa—the attitude which almost killed us economically in the Bennett days of 1930.

I was surprised, though, to hear his current attack.

The hon. Minister is not blaming Ottawa; Progressive-Conservatives from coast to coast are joining to blast the United States. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that as far as the part of the country from which I come is concerned, there would indeed be very little employment of any kind, indeed there would be little industrial development of any kind, were it not for our neighbours to the south.

I do not like some of the attitudes which America, in an official sense, takes towards Canada, and I have said so on many occasions. But I do not think we should flog to death the best neighbour any country could have, and indeed flog to death the best customer we could possibly find. One thing about the trading—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That did not happen around here.

Mr. Wren: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, I point out to my hon. friend, just got through saying that he wished the United States were 1,000 miles away.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I said nothing derogatory about the United States. I like the people of the United States, but I still think that we as Canadians are quite capable of standing on our own feet and not being controlled and run by the United States of America.

Mr. Wren: I would like to tell the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, that were it not for the United States, for example, the great Steep Rock iron mines might not be in existence today in northwestern Ontario. Were it not for money from the United States, the Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Industries at Kenora and Fort Frances would not be in existence today. Were it not for capital from the United States, a good many of our gold mines would not be in existence today.

I agree that Canada can, and should, stand on her own feet. But I suggest, very seriously, that we are not doing Ontario or Canada any good when we are telling the only customer in the world who pays cash that we do not like him.

As far as the northern viewpoint on unemployment is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we get removed at times from the situation here and at Ottawa. But the one thing we are concerned about is this: Despite all the brilliant speeches we hear from people who are supposed to be learned, and people who are supposed to be skilled in provincial, national and international affairs, we are plainly and simply, Mr. Speaker, at war. This is part of the economic war world socialism has forced upon us. The reason we and other countries are losing our markets today is simply because the world socialist movement is moving in on us.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that we have heard speeches from many sources where we are going to have to face personally the dangers from military conflict. But before that, and perhaps instead of that, we are going to have to face an economic war developed by an enemy who is just as capable on the economic front as he might be on the military front.

We are faced with a situation now, I repeat, where world socialism is creeping in on us. If those of us who believe in individual enterprise do not have sufficient fortitude to stand and meet this threat, then I say to hon. members that we are not meeting our responsibilities in public affairs. If war were to start and actual military conflict were to take place tonight or tomorrow morning, there would be no shortage of money to meet the emergency at hand.

Parades and bands would be streaming up and down the street and people would be enlisted to align themselves on the side of our country and our people.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the situation with regard to unemployment is just as serious. The needs of our people are just as serious in today's social sense as they might be in tomorrow's military sense. I emphasize this because if we are not prepared to meet this kind of emergency, then the economic theories which are not agreeable to us will be forced down our throats whether we like them or not.

In a dynamic and growing nation such as Canada, standing on the threshold as it is of industrial greatness and of industrial development, the cause of serious unemployment today as in history, in this country at least, can be attributed among other things to one important point. I refer to unemployment in government in Canada. For never in the history of Canada, or in the history of Ontario, have our people witnessed so many people holding high office in government and doing so little with their high office.

It is significant, Mr. Speaker, and I want to emphasize this, that the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario is to my mind one of the most hard-working individuals that it has ever been my lot to meet. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that some of the tired blood about him might be helped by Geritol, but I think they are too far gone for that. It is significant of hon. Ministers of the cabinet and appointees of the cabinet that we have in this House today, 37 people living "high off the hog," with at least 15 additional people hanging on the ropes waiting for someone to fade out so that they can take their place.

Never in our history have we had so many chiefs and so few Indians; and never in our history has so little been accomplished by so many—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Where were all the Indians in those two by-elections? Will the hon. member please tell me that?

Mr. Wren: What by-elections?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Has not the hon. member heard about that? He had better come back to earth and read about them.

Mr. Wren: I have not been to any by-election with any Indians.

An hon. member: He has not? He was up around there.

Mr. Wren: I have not seen them. I have not seen any Indians since the last general election and neither did the officials, because they took some of their votes 5,000 feet in the air, so do not talk to me about Indians.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member had better get down to the resolution, and leave all those other topics alone or he will burn his fingers.

Mr. Wren: All right, I will get to the resolution. I am not going to burn my fingers because I am going to submit evidence to support my contention.

We have the all-important need right now for a national government which is capable of producing and maintaining a climate under which individual provinces can breathe.

History shows again very clearly how Tory thinking in national government always produces serious recession, which ultimately hits those who can least afford it, the working man and his family. The years 1930 and 1957, incidentally, produced two national political figures each swearing to do great things for this country. The greatest contribution the late Mr. Bennett made to Canadian history was when he landed on British shores to become a British citizen. And I suggest that the unemployed aircraft workers at Malton, who are now making boats, would be glad to contribute $1 apiece to finance the present Rt. hon. Prime Minister's exit to Britain.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Wren: I may say I am going to talk to my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. Boyer), in a minute.

Mr. Speaker, a recent Gallup poll revealed a sharp trend away from the Progressive-Conservative government in Canada—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, I appeal on a point of order—

An hon. member: If he wants to talk on the Throne debate, let him talk about this then; but this is no place to talk that—

Mr. Speaker: I would point out that there is rather a little latitude tonight. There is some difference between the discussion of a motion which we have before us, which is a distinct motion to discuss a specific matter, the matter of unemployment. And I would say that the members have greater opportunity and greater facility in other debates and speeches than at the present time for a much wider discussion, so I would ask that we discuss the resolution under consideration.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, part of the spirit of the resolution of the hon. member for York-Scarborough included methods and means of assuming responsibility, either separately or with the government at Ottawa, in matters of national importance such as trade, unemployment and the like. I cannot remember offhand the exact wording of the resolution, and I submit that I am staying with the spirit of that when I want to demonstrate to this House that one of our prime problems is the need in Ottawa for understanding of our problem in Ontario before we can successfully arrive at any solution, temporarily or permanently, to the unemployment problem.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Bring me over a copy of the resolution, please.

Mr. Wren: I have one here.

An hon. member: He said he did not know anything about it.

Mr. Wren: A recent Gallup poll revealed a sharp trend away from the Progressive-Conservative government in Canada—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Our hon. friend has a perfect right to talk on the Throne debate, but that has nothing to do with this resolution.

Mr. Wren: May I proceed, Mr. Speaker? Thank you. This survey, Mr. Speaker, showed that every region except the Maritimes had swung away from support of the existing government in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: I mentioned, the last time I was on my feet, that we should keep right down to the specific subject of unemployment, and I fail to see why the member is not keeping to the subject. Now, I will let him proceed a little further—

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, I would point out respectfully, sir, that I believe you are being unfair, because the hon. Minister who preceded me talked almost entirely about agriculture and agricultural markets and I made no protest.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is included in the motion.

An hon. member: Of course, it is among the things that should be done.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, we are discussing matters according to the notice of motion—resolved that trade and commerce are within the confidence of the federal Parliament.

Mr. Wren: All right then, I am talking, I want to lead up to the question on matters of trade and commerce.

An hon. member: Read it! Read it!

Mr. Wren: Then let every effort be made in every sector of the provincial economy to co-operate with federal agencies in business generally to market our goods at home and abroad. I want to talk about that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Does the hon. member mean to say agriculture has nothing to do with that? Of course, it has.

Mr. Wren: I did not say, Mr. Speaker, that agriculture had nothing to do with that. The hon. Prime Minister indicated that I was to talk only about unemployment.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I said no such thing at all.

Mr. Wren: Well then, let me carry on. It is interesting to examine the reason why only the Maritimes continue to support the national government in federal government matters contained in this resolution.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I strongly object to this. It has nothing whatever to do with this resolution. We are not discussing the popularity or the unpopularity of the federal government. We are talking about trade and commerce and I would suggest we stick to that.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! I would say the Prime Minister's point is well taken.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! We are not discussing the vagaries of the actual government, or the trends of government, we are discussing unemployment. I realize that members need to discuss things that lead up to them, but I would ask once again that members keep to the resolution on unemployment. We have other areas in this Legislature where we can discuss these things of wider content.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me to lead up to talking about this very thing, about economic conditions, employment, job opportunities—that is what I am leading up to. I want to compare, for example, the economic conditions of the Maritimes with ours. What is the matter with that? We are going to talk about business in Ontario. That is what I am going to talk about.

What I want to say is this: The reason why only one sector of our whole population is agreeing with the government of Canada on economic policies is that now all the other provinces are reduced to the poverty of that area, so that the Maritimes feel so much better because we are all equal.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is a bright one! That is typical of the Opposition. They have no interest in the welfare of this country or the unemployed.

Mr. Wren: I have uttered only about two statements. The introduction of a resolution, Mr. Speaker, such as we are considering today is in our mind another time-wasting instrument designed to cloud the issues and stall resolutions.

This Ontario government came to office in 1943 and held office through the postwar years when buoyant conditions allowed not only time to develop but also time to prepare for emergency—which I consider this present economic situation to be. But now when a real emergency presents itself, we hear noises about studies in conferences and planning.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, what on earth has the government been doing with its time since 1943? Where are the plans which were the responsibility of one whole department to have ready for these times? Where are the lists of unemployed classified by age and occupational groups for immediate diagnosis? Where are the industries which now could be encouraged to build or expand? Where are the warehouses, the barns, which could be dispensing our agricultural products? Where are the access roads which could now be developing new mineral wealth in the north?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: The hon. member just opened one.

Mr. Wren: No, I did not. The hon. Minister could not go.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Oh yes, he did!

Mr. Wren: The hon. Minister could not come.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: No, but you got it built.

Mr. Wren: Certainly, we got it built.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: My hon. friend knows what this government has done up there. Do not kid us about that!

Mr. Wren: Where has an attempt been made to disburse long-productive government activities to areas outside metropolitan Toronto and relieve downtown government properties for industrial and commercial development and aid depressed areas elsewhere in the province?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: He knows what this government has done. Does he want me to read—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I can read for him several details from the Port Arthur News Chronicle.

Mr. Wren: I can read to the hon. Prime Minister several articles from the News Chronicle of what he has not done.

An hon. member: Ah, but not lately!

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, I am going to continue this speech if I have to be here all night. I have the right to speak in this assembly, but I have been faced with far more adverse opposition than faces me here. Hang on! If the resolution now in debate had—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I thought that the hon. members opposite were "raising Cain" with the hon. member for York-Scarborough for reading his speech. I wonder what they say about that now? This afternoon they were objecting to the hon. member for York-Scarborough. I do not hear them objecting now.

Mr. Wren: If the resolution now in debate, Mr. Speaker, had in its text or through its hon. sponsor, set out to explain why the government has been so long unemployed, more purpose might have been achieved. Instead, we find the government today acting in some departments as the exposed part of the civil service only. Not planners, not leaders, not courageous administrators, but simply declarers of the vacuum situation which exists. And they talk about reading speeches and using material prepared by a civil service—and a civil service which is not at fault for they have not had the leadership which could conceive of forward progress in departments and divisions. They are in some instances directed by hon. Ministers who have seemed to have undergone a complete mental blank.

An hon. member: Who is this speech putting to work, might I ask?

Mr. Wren: Wait and I will tell him. Instead of trying to find and correct deficiencies, this government has now embarked on the most luxurious public relations campaign in history. There are now scores of people, Mr. Speaker, grinding out material on the most expensive paper available for reasons—

An hon. member: Name one! Name one!

Mr. Wren: The Road. What a classical example of pure waste of public funds. They are grinding it out, Mr. Speaker, because this government fears the interpretation of the press—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order just read to my hon. friend the resolution? Have I permission to read the resolution?

An hon. member: Is the hon. member for Kenora giving him permission to read the resolution?

Another hon. member: On what point of order, Mr. Speaker? Certainly he must express—

Mr. Speaker: I must point out I have not heard it yet.

An hon. member: Surely the hon. Prime Minister may state his point of order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My point of order is this. This resolution reads:

THAT in view of mounting world competition and its effects on industry, particularly secondary industry with its instance of unemployment,

BE IT RESOLVED THAT while trade and commerce are within the competence of the federal Parliament, every effort be made in every sector of the provincial economy to co-operate with federal departments in business generally to market our goods at home and abroad,

AND THAT this House urges that initiative be taken by business, industry and labour, and as well all levels of provincial government within the area so that they can constitutionally operate to further and increase employment and job opportunities in Ontario.

Now, sir, my point of order is this: That is the resolution. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition moved an amendment which is a reasoned amendment, as did also the hon. member for York South. I think my hon. friend should confine his remarks to that. If he wants to abuse the government, let him do so on the Throne debate. Let us deal with this resolution, which is very broad, I can assure you, sir.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, I say to you with respect, sir, that you are permitting the hon. leader of the government to ride roughshod over everything.

Mr. Speaker: I would say myself that when the member started discussing The Road, the extravagance of the government, and something about The Road and publicity, I myself could see no connection at that point with the matter and the subject of the resolution which is, namely, unemployment.

Mr. Wren: It is 10.30, may I continue?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest it is 10.30, and if the hon. member would move the adjournment of the debate, it would be in keeping with the spirit of the resolution which was introduced here. It is 10.30 and I think I said we would try out the recommendations of the committee. If my hon. friend would move the adjournment, he could continue at an appropriate time.

Mr. Wren: If that is the wish of the House that I continue on another day, Mr. Speaker, I will move the adjournment.

Motion agreed to.

An hon. member: Is it the intention of the hon. Prime Minister to continue the Throne speech debate tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, we will have the Throne speech debate tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.30 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petition was brought up, laid on the table, read and received:

Of the corporation of the city of Ottawa, praying that an Act may pass establishing an active treatment hospital, or convalescent hospital, or both, in the city of Ottawa, and for related purposes.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it do stand adjourned until Thursday next; also that this House meet at 10.30 a.m. on Friday next, and that rule 2 of the assembly be suspended insofar as it may apply to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I may just make this explanation before the introduction of this bill, or a bill which will be introduced by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts).

There will be introduced amendments to The Legislative Assembly Act and to The Municipal Act, concerning the rights to sit on certain elected bodies under certain conditions of school teachers and retired members of the civil service, who are, in the ordinary course, entitled to certain payment from the public funds of Ontario.

I may say, sir, this is just part of the matter I raised a few days ago.

I shall, at the beginning of the week, table a complete report in relation to the matter of Philip Hoffman, member-elect for the electoral district of Temiskaming. It is sufficient for me to say, at the moment, that, in my opinion, there is not a shadow of doubt as to his right to take his seat, excepting for the matter of the ordinary superannuation, which applies to all the civil servants.

This, however, I shall not elaborate upon or further explain at this time, as I shall be making a full statement at the beginning of the week.

As I intimated to the House previously, there is a very definite problem in connection with superannuation payments to retired civil servants and to a retired teacher, or teachers, under The Teachers' Superannuation Act, to both of which the government contributes and votes funds from year to year. Last year, of course, there was the sum voted in the ordinary estimates. Then on the supplementary estimates, there were further sums voted.

These matters are, sir, I think, strictly technical. Nevertheless, they affect the rights of this House and I shall have available a full explanation of these matters, I hope, at the beginning of the week. May I point out that it was never contemplated by the Legislature that these matters might affect the rights of such individuals to sit in the Legislature—as a matter of fact, I think it was never considered.

When the matter of the measure relating to pensions for members was introduced last session, it is my recollection that it provided that such pensions would not affect the right of individuals to accept superannuation from the various funds that are sponsored by the government.

Amendments will be introduced to clarify this situation. It is subject to the fullest explanation to this House and this very brief explanation is usual on the introduction of any bill, on its first reading.

I believe, sir, there are 6 hon. members, and possibly 7, affected by the superannuation provisions.

Instead of introducing the bill myself, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) will be introducing a bill which is now under consideration by the law clerks, in connection with these matters insofar as they affect municipalities. The hon.

Attorney-General will introduce the other bill relating to The Legislative Assembly Act and, as I say, this is the explanation that is given on the first reading.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: It being our practice here to give some short explanation on introduction, I would point out that there are 3 sections of The Legislative Assembly Act: (1) section 8, which deals with employees, officers of government and so forth, and their position with respect to sitting in the Legislature as members; (2) section 9, which deals with contracts with respect to the same people; and (3) section 10, which gives a number of 12 or so exceptions, enumerated from the general prohibition or ineligibility.

The first section of this bill would implement the recommendation of the select committee. It is not particularly in relation to anything that is being dealt with or being thought about in this legislative assembly at the present time, in relation to any person. The recommendation was that a resolution be provided as a vehicle for providing for qualification where disqualification might otherwise appear in relation to special and specific instances, with respect to members, and to apply to section 9 only—the one that had to do with contracts.

The amendment adds the following words to section 9, at the beginning:

Except as authorized by resolution of the assembly, no person holding or enjoying or undertaking or executing directly or indirectly and so on . . . contracts . . . and so forth, shall be eligible to sit, except as authorized by resolution of the assembly.

Then, with respect to section 2, which is the section that would have a corrective effect, in relation to those matters which the hon. Prime Minister has just mentioned, superannuation and so forth, sub-section M of section 10, which would be one further exception under the excepting section, would read:

By reason of his being—and these are the provisions which do not exclude a person from sitting—

By reason of his being entitled to, or in receipt of, any money under The Legislative Assembly Retirement Allowance Act,

1960, The Public Service Act, The Public Service Superannuation Act, 1960 or The Teachers' Superannuation Act, or under any other Act of the Legislature or the Parliament of Canada—that would take care of pensions and that sort of thing—that provides a pension, annuity, allowance or other similar payment made up in whole or in part of public money.

Then a further section makes sections 2 and 4 applicable to every member of the assembly heretofore or hereafter elected.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the uninitiated, may I say, in regards to wearing a tartan—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Ah, that a man's reach should exceed his grasp!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do not show an ill respect for St. Andrew's day, hon. gentlemen!

For the information of the uninitiated, what the page boys are wearing is a little bi' o' heather from the highlands o' bonnie Scotland.

I could not find, Mr. Speaker, a Grossman tartan. I think if I had had a little more time I might have been able to; I expected to speak on this occasion tomorrow. So I borrowed what the experts tell me is a tartan of the MacIntosh clan.

We in St. Andrew have been waiting for years for this occasion. This is the first time that a session of this Legislature coincides with the day which is known as St. Andrew's day. None of my predecessors representing the riding of St. Andrew have ever had the occasion to be able to stand up here, as has the hon. member for St. David (Mr. Price), and speak—as he has spoken of the good qualities of the fine Welsh—and the hon. Attorney-General, who represents the constituency of St. Patrick, who has told us on St. Patrick's day of the fine qualities of the Irish—and finally comes the year when the fall session coincides with St. Andrew's day. However, there seemed to be a conspiracy to do us out of this, because, tomorrow, which is really St. Andrew's day, has been called a day for committees and this Legislature, therefore, will not be sitting.

But the Scottish people, sir, will not be thwarted. Perhaps I might even suggest that the hon. Prime Minister when he did me the honour of appointing me to his cabinet, did this with a view to the coincidence which occurs this year, as some sort of a sign or good omen from the spirits of his Scottish ancestors.

As you know, sir, I represent the riding named after the patron saint of the great Scottish people. And, while some may think it is a little peculiar for me to bring greetings, it is not as peculiar as it may appear. As has been reputed, by some at least, the Scottish people are one of the lost tribes of Israel. As a matter of fact, it might be interesting to note that my own spiritual leader is known as Rabbi Dr. Stuart Rosenberg.

It is a great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, therefore, for me—on behalf of the thousands of fine people in St. Andrew riding, coming as they do from all parts of the globe—to bring greetings to all of those fine Scottish people in our province and in our country, who played, and are playing, such a magnificent and significant part in the pioneering and development of this province — a province which, at this time, is governed and headed by an hon. Prime Minister and a fine hon. Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay), both Scots, two citizens of whom I think any race would be justly proud and both of whom are a credit to their ancestry.

I think, sir, too, that it is a credit to their ancestry that both the hon. Prime Minister and the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor are particularly respected in this province because of their approach to all those of other faiths and other ancestries.

St. Andrew, therefore, with its cosmopolitan population, wishes the Scottish people of this province long life, health and the continued respect of all.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I make this announcement or proposal related to procedure in the House?

It has been the custom in the past, at the time of the introduction of the budget, to present and table all of the estimates. Now, at one time it was the custom to complete the budget debate before the consideration of any estimate. This was in the great happy days when we used to put through all the estimates in one night's sitting; sitting from 8 o'clock in the evening until 6 o'clock the next morning. That was in the days of the enlightened regime of the party opposite.

This was changed a few years ago. As a matter of fact, I changed it to the more enlightened procedure of introducing the calling of the estimates immediately after the introduction of the budget which has given us the opportunity of discussing the business of the province in great detail.

Now, sir, in many jurisdictions, the estimates are introduced before the introduction of the budget. For instance, they might be introduced at this time and the budget might not be introduced for some months afterwards. I would say that might be possible some time in the future, but it certainly is impossible at this present time.

We propose this year to present certain individual estimates by having the hon. Minister present the same and table them with the same being placed upon the order paper. Consideration would then be given at the convenience of the House in the ordinary course.

The combined estimates, of course, will be presented as usual at the time of the presentation of the budget statement. The above procedure will help to facilitate the work of the House. There is no reason why a consideration of the estimates might not be dealt with in part during the session before Christmas.

There are some estimates that are ready, and there is no reason why they might not be considered if the opportunity arises. At the beginning of the week, I shall give the hon. members a list of the departments where estimates are prepared and could be presented as I have outlined, and we shall then arrange for calling these at times convenient.

Now, sir, I think that this is the method by which we can expedite the business of the House and we can give the hon. members, I think, more opportunity to consider these estimates as they come up.

That is not a great departure from what is done elsewhere. I have discussed the matter with the province to the east of us. It has been their method to introduce the estimates in total, say, at the November session, and they are taken up as time goes along, when the budget itself is considered under the committee of ways and means as well as in the committee of supply—which I think perhaps is a better way to put it.

The motion in relation to ways and means would deal with the manner and the method by which these estimates should be taken care of. However, sir, at the present time it is impossible to present the estimates in bulk. That has been proven. But there is no reason why we cannot introduce the estimates of half-a-dozen departments and view them at this time as we have the opportunity to deal with them.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like the opportunity to discuss with the House not only this immediate problem, which is obvious and one that is understandable and one that we will have to deal with impressively, but, I would, Mr. Speaker, point out that during the caucus meeting of our party this afternoon, it was brought to my attention that, constantly over the past several years, we have not followed to a specific conclusion any particular debate before starting in on another.

I refer to the concern, and maybe even a little bit of confusion, that has resulted when we failed to complete the Throne speech debate before we have introduced the budget debate.

Now, immediately we have the problem where a good many hon. members, and, I presume, hon. members on all sides, may be vitally concerned with this matter of unemployment and the motion on unemployment. It seems to me that if we are going to permit that debate to continue simultaneously with the Throne debate, then again confusion is going to result.

With the introduction of the estimates as such, I have no quarrel. I do not think we can have. I can see the hon. Prime Minister's problem and I think that for the good conduct of the House, these estimates should be introduced at an early time and be considered.

But, Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly that now is the time to bring real order into the varying debates, the principal debates of the Legislature, and I, personally, feel that we should establish a certain priority.

For example, in the early days of the session we all conceded that the question of unemployment was of great concern and of immediate public urgency and such-like. I noticed that same phraseology was used by all hon. members. If that be the case, maybe it would be wise and prudent to debate this thing until it is finalized and concluded, and then to start on the Throne debate and then, at some opportune time, introduce the estimates.

To permit 3 important debates to pursue simultaneously, I do not think is good and I do not think is efficient.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out that there is an understandable tendency after an important debate like unemployment has been introduced to then move into other areas of debate, for example the Throne speech, and forget about it for a considerable length of time. When it is recalled, much of the enthusiasm of the debate, much of the participation in the debate, has been lost. So I think that it is only a courtesy to permit all hon. members of the House to conclude their remarks.

For myself, I am very fortunate to have the opportunity to speak immediately on these matters and it is of no personal concern. But, I do speak for those hon. members on all sides who want to, and honestly want to, take part in debates that are important and of great public interest at the time that public interest is focused on this particular debate.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly about this matter. It is not my privilege—it is not the privilege of the Opposition—to direct affairs of this House. As the hon. Prime Minister said many times, the people have given him that particular authority. But I would appeal to his sense of not only fair play, but of efficiency and good business administration, to advise the House that not only real concern will be given this problem, but to undertake to the House that we will follow the procedure of many other legislative bodies, where a debate once started is pursued to finality before any other debate is inaugurated.

In seriousness, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any need for me to elaborate more than I have. It is not my intention to move any motion in this connection. It is not my intention to divide the House and such-like. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly about it and I do not know how I can put my argument any more forcibly than to say that it does occur to me that all hon. members of the House have an equal right over and above and aside from the leaders of the respective parties, to speak on all important matters at quick opportunity, and an opportunity approximate to the time when public attention is focused on this particular problem.

I suggest this to you, Mr. Speaker, and I would hope that in that suggestion you will have the sympathy and assistance of the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, sir, in response to what my hon. friend has said there are two or three different classes I might deal with in this matter. We have in recent years overlapped the Throne debate and the budget debate. Now, that was not always the case. We started that practice, I think, some 15 years ago. Afterwards, we abandoned it, but we returned to it for this reason: My hon. friends will understand that in operating the House, I try to see that all the time is taken up. I do not know of anything more frustrating, for instance, than having a few bills on a certain day and then being in the position that the House has to adjourn because, for instance, according to practice the hon. leader of the Opposition or his financial critic is the first person to debate the budget and you have perhaps a period of some 5 days in there which it is difficult to fill.

Now, I discussed that, and I think the hon. leader of the Opposition was quite in agreement that we could, by carrying on the Throne debate, fill in that period of time.

Now, I say to my hon. friend that I hope perhaps this will work out from what I have suggested this afternoon.

The Throne debate itself can be wound up much earlier and in these periods of slack time which you run into in operating the House—periods when it is convenient to have orders of business which you can call—we will have certain estimates on the order paper which we can take up.

I think that we can by that method, dispose of the Throne debate instead of carrying it over for the purpose I mentioned.

I would point out to my hon. friend, in connection with the employment resolution of yesterday, that hon. members will readily recognize the problem. This was a matter, we all agree, of urgent public necessity. My hon. friend, I think on Thursday last, moved the adjournment of the House in order that we might discuss this matter of urgent public importance. We all agreed. The problem was that a motion only gave each hon. member, 10 minutes to discuss that highly important matter. I said at that time, in order to expedite this, I would use as a vehicle the resolution introduced or standing on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Sutton).

Now, I would say to my hon. friend, of course we are going to be faced with this. Today, we proceed with the Throne debate in the ordinary course. This is the day when he speaks and I speak, and perhaps the hon. member for York South speaks, if we have the time.

Obviously, the hon. members of this House are not precluded from speaking on the Throne debate because there is a resolution there dealing with certain areas of the problem of development and unemployment. That would give my hon. friend from Kenora (Mr. Wren) the fullest of opportunity to develop the argument which I thought was out of order last night. We could proceed now and debate that—

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): We did not have time—

Hon. Mr. Frost: —at full length in the Throne debate. Now, I say to my hon. friend, it is difficult to avoid overlapping. I would point out, that by my hon. friend's procedure, which he himself proposed last week, if we had adjourned the House to discuss these matters of public importance, of course, these would have continued for 10-minute periods until such time as Mr. Speaker felt that the matter was disposed of, and then that would have ended it.

Now, under this method—the method that we used yesterday—there was I think a very bold discussion and there will be the opportunity now to proceed with the Throne debate. I am perfectly prepared to call the other motion—very glad to, indeed—and have the matter disposed of, but, I just point out that I do not think there is any real injustice done to any hon. member. As a matter of fact, there is more opportunity to speak in the procedure which we have adopted. But I will do my best to work these things out with my hon. friend, I can assure the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister could give us any indication as to which departments' estimates might be coming down in the fall portion?

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is difficult, but I think there are some coming down on Monday. I think that we have discussed some of these things. There are matters, for instance, that take a bit of time, that need to be discussed, that are small. For instance, these include the estimates of the provincial auditor, the Lieutenant-Governor, probably The Department of Insurance, The Department of Economics, perhaps The Department of Energy Resources, and possibly The Department of Planning and Development.

There are certain departments, obviously, such as Education and Municipal Affairs, that are going to be closely related to the budget itself. But, on the other hand, these other departments, I think, can be prepared, and they can be placed on the order paper. Then we can place them into the order of business.

But I will give you a full statement on Monday about that, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: First order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it affords me pleasure, as always, to speak to an important debate and this Throne speech is, of course, one of the important debates of this particular session.

I would take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to commend you for your conduct of the House. I repeat that very sincerely. I think that your wit and witticism on occasion has alleviated certain tensions in the House. It has been appreciated by all.

I would take this opportunity likewise to commend the government on its willingness to meet in a provincial conclave, as I understand it, with the other Premiers of the Dominion in a conference that will start tomorrow. I expect, and I am confident, that all hon. members of the House join with me in extending our felicitations to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and to those of his hon. colleagues who will accompany him to Quebec City.

This is an historic conference, a conference that, I am confident, will serve real purpose in the development of federal-provincial affairs.

I would take the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, at this time—and I might say at the outset that it is not my intention to dwell on many subjects this afternoon—to make brief reference to the federal-provincial conferences and the fiscal arrangements and agreements on which an attempt to finalize is being made at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I would admonish the hon. Prime Minister in one respect. It does seem to me that on the occasion of the conferences of last July and last October, I believe, a serious tactical error was committed by the government of the province of Ontario. I suggest that the impression created—at least in the press—was that the demand the province of Ontario made of the federal government was unrealistic in its immediate attainment and then it proceeded to side in with the federal government in respect to the matter of what is commonly called equalization. I will take the opportunity to express myself more fully in this respect.

Mr. Speaker, you will know, and all hon. members of this House—at least all older hon. members of the House—will know, that this has been the subject of much debate in the House over the period of the last year. The province of Ontario is not as such interested directly in equalization; certainly it does not receive any payment on account of equalization from Ottawa. It does contribute approximately one-half of the total amount that is distributed at the federal level.

Mr. Speaker, the impression I had was that the great interest of all the other Premiers and all the other representatives at the conference, whose concern was primarily in equalization, was to assure that equalization would not be frozen as of the present time. They wanted it to fluctuate with the economic development of the respective provinces and I think they made good argument. I think, in effect, they made the same arguments as our hon. Prime Minister made for assistance in the province—but that their demands varied with their provincial responsibilities, their responsibilities to hydro, education and the like.

Now, the freezing of that certainly put these provinces in a position where they were able to say to the federal government: "You have reneged—if you will—on the very principle of equalization. You are destroying the principle of equalization." I suggest that this government, at the time, intimated that it favoured a freezing of the equalization payments.

Sure, it was a monetary and immediate help to the province of Ontario, but, in the long view, what did it do? I suggest it solidified a good many of the other provinces in opposition to this point, and it weakened our hon. Prime Minister's bargaining position. I am confident of it. I think that he was in an ideal position —

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I did not say that at all—

Mr. Wintermeyer: The impression certainly was created that the other provinces opposed the principle of freezing equalization.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is just because some people wanted to think that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, then I am glad to hear that that was not the case.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I did not say anything.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Then I say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister should take this opportunity now and early to clarify his government's thinking in that respect, and then take the initiative along with the other provinces, an ideal initiative that he had in October and again in July, initiative that would have permitted, I am confident, the attainment of a formula something like 25-25-50, instead of 50-50-50.

I can appreciate his demand in theory. I can appreciate the fact that if it can be said that we have an equal right to tax in these fields, that does not follow that we have an equal right to the share of all the revenue from those fields. We have an equal right to exercise our jurisdiction, but I acknowledge, of course, that in recent years there has been a desire on the part of all governments to vacate the taxing privileges of the provinces in favour of the federal government and rebate in the amount of 9, 13, and 50 per cent, respectively, for income, corporate and succession duties.

When the hon. Prime Minister made his announcement that he would want and expect a 50-50-50 division, it seems to me that he was asking for something wholly unattainable. If he received it, obviously it would mean a fantastic increase in the federal budget.

But he offered an alternative. He suggested that formula or an amendment to The British North America Act.

Which would be taken? Of course, the amendment of the constitution would be taken. But then was the opportunity to gather about him all the Premiers who were willing, I understand, to support him in the demand for something in the nature of a realistic 25-25-50 formula that would have given to Ontario more money than has been requested in recent years, more than the $100 million that has been talked about.

That sort of thing, I think, could and would have been obtainable. That would have received the real support of the other Premiers.

It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. Prime Minister will enunciate his government's position in regard to equalization and point out that the other provinces are right in their demands of equalization—and they are right when they say they should not be frozen, but should be free to fluctuate with economic developments of the provinces—and then solicit their help in that area of the federal agreement that would be of immediate and direct interest and benefit to Ontario.

That is a higher formula than the current 9-13-50. If he asks for their help at the present time, I am sure he will get it in the neighbourhood of 25-25-50. I am very much concerned, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of what I have termed a tactical error, we are in a position now where we are not going to get a nickel. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Not going to get a nickel any time?

Mr. Wintermeyer: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if this government would use these immediate conferences—the conferences with the other provinces that will start tomorrow to enunciate certain principles—I am of the opinion that this 25-25-50 formula can be justified in principle.

I think it must be acknowledged by all who study this problem that, in fact, there are other responsibilities associated with the direct tax field than the payment of expenditures at the provincial and federal government levels.

For example, we talked of monetary and fiscal policy. That is the responsibility of the federal government. Much monetary and fiscal policy is associated with incoming corporation and succession duties. We know that and that the federal government is the area of responsibility.

There is another factor, the factor of equalization that I talked about, nothing more or less than subsidies to those provinces that are not as well off economically as we are.

Another factor that must be taken into consideration, the third factor, is the fact that the federal government uses these sources of revenue just as the provincial government does to pay for its normal expenditures.

I would say that all factors may well be approximate, and it would be well, therefore, to say to the federal government: One quarter of the potential productivity of these sources of revenue should be used for fiscal and monetary policy; one quarter should be used for equalization; one quarter should be used for payment of federal government expenditures, and one quarter for provincial government expenditures.

That would mean, in effect, that the provincial government had as much right in these fields, and derives as much benefit from these fields for responsibility and payment of the responsibility of strictly provincial activities, as the federal government.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that a 25-25-50 formula could be founded in principle at this time, for the type of thing that is attainable; the type of thing that could be sold to the other Premiers for a united front presented to Ottawa.

Certainly, the impression that I received was that there was no discord among the Premiers, but, at least, there was not the full united demand by all Premiers on equalization and on a specific formula.

As a result, I do not think the maximum pressure was brought to bear on the federal government. I feel that pressure must be brought to bear. I do not think the Throne speech, in relation to its statement that much progress is being made in this field, is adequate. I think it is obvious that no money has been attained thus far and that no money is available in the near future.

I have spoken often on this subject and many people have spoken on it, but I want to clarify the records specifically. I have never taken the position that more money should not be obtained. I think it should and what is required at this time is a theory of principle that can be supported by all the Premiers, by all the provinces, and that demand made on Ottawa can then be made in more forceful and dramatic terms than what has been made thus far.

I think Ottawa has been permitted to get away with this situation. I think it has been permitted to avoid the real responsibility that it has had. I do not think any real principle or fundamental argument has been made to Ottawa that, in fact, a 25-25-50 formula would be founded in good order, in principle, to the extent that we have as much right, as a province, to demand of those sources of revenue the payment of our expenditures as they have.

We will acknowledge that it has additional responsibilities in the area of fiscal policy and in the area of equalization and they, Mr. Speaker, should be taken care of.

I make these remarks now at a time, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Prime Minister will again have an opportunity to show the leadership that I think is demanded of the province of Ontario, in which, by virtue of his years of experience, he can give to the other Premiers. The hon. Premier of Quebec (Mr. Lesage), it is my understanding, has given him the honour of chairing these meetings. That is a distinct honour to himself and to Ontario, and I hope that the experience and the knowledge and the advice that he has in these matters will be used forthrightly to co-ordinate the efforts of all the provinces and all the Premiers in regard to this very important matter of federal-provincial fiscal policy.

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to turn to a different matter. I would like to take up the consideration of the so-called Eastview case. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the best place to start is at the very beginning.

We are dealing with a town in eastern Ontario, a municipality that is incorporated as a town, not as a city, with a population, I understand, of about 24,000 people. This community has doubled its population in the course of the last 10 years.

That particular town was in default of payment, in 1935 I believe it was, and it was put under trusteeship under the Act in existence and under the supervision of the Ontario municipal board. That trusteeship continued until 1947.

Now, subsequent to 1947, it was taken out of trusteeship with certain qualifications. I believe the matter of arrears of tax was still under supervision of the municipal board, but for all practical purposes, after 1947, the community was taken out of trusteeship. Then in 1958, a private bill—a bill that has been identified as bill No. 42—was introduced into this House.

Now, at this juncture, I would refresh the memory of hon. members. To do that, I am going to read from the Hansard of the day which was March 25, 1958. And I will read rather extensively from that Hansard to set the general background for my presentation. I quote:

Mr. G. F. Lavergne moves second reading of Bill No. 42, "An Act respecting the town of Eastview."

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would ask Mr. Speaker to direct the Clerk of the House to read the report from the chairman of the municipal board, and also a letter addressed to the members of the committee by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender).

Clerk of the House: In the matter of rule 75 of the legislative assembly of Ontario; and, in the matter of private bill No. 42, "An Act respecting the town of Eastview," in accordance with the provisions of rule 75 of the legislative assembly of Ontario, a copy of the above bill and the petition on which it is founded have been transmitted by the Clerk of the House and the board has accordingly, within the limited time available, caused an inquiry to be made into the allegations set out in the bill, and the financial affairs of the municipality insofar as they can be ascertained at the present time.

For such purpose the board has availed itself of the following sources of information:

(1) The annual reports of municipal statistics as issued by The Department of Municipal Affairs for the years 1952 to 1956 inclusive.

(2) The audit report of the town of Eastview and its local boards for the year ending December 31, 1956, as certified by the municipality's auditors, dated June 4, 1957.

(3) A preliminary statement of the town's revenue fund balance sheet as at December 31, 1957, and a preliminary statement of the revenues and expenditures of the municipality for the year 1957.

(4) A financial analysis of the affairs of the town for the years 1952 to 1956 inclusive, prepared by the audit branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs showing the variances between actual and budgeted revenues and expenditures for the years 1952 to 1956 inclusive, and listing the major items contributing to an excess of expenditures over annual budgets.

(5) A statement of municipal road expenditures incurred and subsidies paid for the years 1951 to 1956 inclusive.

(6) Detailed information and explanation supplied to the chairman of the board at a conference in his office on March 3, 1958 attended by the mayor, the town clerk, the assessor, a representative of the auditors and the town solicitor.

At that time a detailed statement of accumulated account deficits of the municipality for the years 1955, 1956 and 1957 was supplied by the town solicitor in the amount of $481,000, including accumulated discount on debentures sold during the 3-year period amounting to $32,000.

FINDINGS OF FACT:

1. As the town's auditors have not completed their financial audit for the year ending December 31, 1957, and in particular have not verified all of the items shown as current assets on the preliminary revenue balance sheet, the board's findings of fact are necessarily subject to correction after the final audit has been completed to the satisfaction of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

2. Subject to the above, the board finds that the actual accumulated deficit of the municipality as of December 31, 1957, amounted to $565,000. Included in this amount is the accumulated deficit of the high school board as of December 31, 1957 amounting to $26,000.

3. The board finds that the current position of the municipality as of December 31, 1957 was as follows:

Current liabilities overdue and unpaid, $669,779.10.

Current realizable assets, $104,281.94, for an overall deficit of $565,497.16.

4. The board finds that the accumulated current deficit has not been caused by inability, neglect or refusal of owners of land in the municipality to pay the taxes due thereon as set forth in the petition, and this was frankly admitted by the representatives of the municipality. The use of these words in the petition was apparently due to an error on the part of the solicitor for the municipality.

5. In the opinion of the board, the accumulation of the above current deficit of the town of Eastview has been due to a combination of the following causes:

(a) a failure on the part of the council in each of the past 5 years to prepare and adopt realistic estimates of revenues and expenditures, including any operating deficit for the previous year as required by section 311 of The Municipal Act;

(b) failure on the part of the council during the same 5 years to levy taxes sufficient to raise the net estimated expenditures and the principal and interest payments payable on the debt of the corporation falling due during the year as required by section 308 of The Municipal Act;

(c) failure on the part of the council and the municipal officials to limit current expenditures to the amount authorized in the annual budget or to provide for such excess expenditures by special levy;

(d) failure on the part of the council to levy for substantial deficits sustained on the sale of debentures as required by section 339(3) of The Municipal Act;

(e) failure on the part of the council to levy amounts sufficient for the payment of the county rates including the county's share of the additional levies made under section 51 of The Assessment Act.

6. The board finds on the available evidence and information that substantial current deficits have been accumulating within the past 4 years as follows:

December, 31, 1954	$ 72,800.00
December 31, 1955	92,355.00
December 31, 1956	253,650.00
December 31, 1957	505,497.00

7. The board finds also that no part of the accumulated current deficit can be attributed to the undertaking of capital expenditures not approved by the board and that all the debentures issued with such approval had been duly sold and the proceeds received prior to December 31, 1957.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE BOARD:

(1) In view of the facts disclosed by the board's inquiry the amount supposed to be raised by the sale of the proposed debentures is clearly insufficient to cover the true amount of the floating debt incurred by the municipality, unless the corporation is prepared to increase the amount to be provided in the 1958 tax levy, or is able to sell the debentures amounting to approximately $485,000 at a reasonable rate, instead of the amount set forth in the bill. The board therefore cannot recommend that the bill should be passed.

(2) If, notwithstanding the above recommendation, the Legislature deems it desirable that the bill be passed in an altered form, the board submits the following recommendations:

(a) the preamble of the bill should be amended so as to show accurately the correct amount of the floating indebtedness;

(b) section 1 of the bill should be amended to show accurately the true amount of the floating debt;

(c) section 6 of the bill should be amended to provide the provisions of sections 61, 67 and 68 of The Ontario Municipal Board Act shall not apply in respect of the debentures to be issued under the authority of the special Act, and to provide further that no by-law providing for the issue of debentures under the authority of the special Act shall be passed without the approval of The Department of Municipal Affairs;

(d) the board further recommends the Act be amended to provide that so long as any debentures authorized by the Act are outstanding and unpaid, The Department of Municipal Affairs shall have control and charge over the exercise by the municipality and every local board thereof, except the separate school board, of the matter set forth in paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), and (l) of section 33 of The Department of Municipal Affairs Act; and that subsection 1 of section 42 of the said Act, during the same period, shall be deemed to apply to the municipality.

Precedence for the issue of debentures to consolidate floating debt is to be found in the following Acts.

Then are listed a series of Acts. Now, likewise, the Clerk at that time filed a statement by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, dated March 18, 1958, which reads as follows:

Gentlemen. I have now had an opportunity to study the report and recommendations of the Ontario municipal board, in the matter of rule 75 of the legislative assembly of Ontario, and in the matter of private Bill 42, "An Act respecting the town of Eastview."

The recommendation of the board that the bill be amended to provide that so long as any debentures authorized by the Act are outstanding and unpaid, The Department of Municipal Affairs should have control and charge over the exercise by the municipality and every local board thereof, except the separate school board, of certain matters as set forth and noted in portions of section 33 of The Department of Municipal Affairs, and that subsection 1 of section 42 of the said Act should be deemed to apply, was made in consideration of the legislation in effect at this time.

However, it is proposed that at the appropriate time during the present session, to recommend to the House an amendment to The Department of Municipal Affairs Act, which will enable the department to render advice and assistance to the municipalities that can benefit therefrom, both with respect to their financial and other affairs. In this way, I believe the department can render the same assistance as though a municipality was placed under formal supervision, if the municipal authorities are desirous of having and accepting such advice.

It will still remain the right of the department, in the event that a municipality fails to co-operate, to apply to the municipal board that they bring the municipality into the provisions of part 3 of The Department of Municipal Affairs Act.

I would recommend to the committee, therefore, that no action be taken on the final recommendation of the board, that is, the Ontario municipal board, in this matter, in view of the further amendment which it is proposed to submit with respect to The Department of Municipal Affairs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the amendment that the hon. Minister made reference to, was, of course, an amendment to The Department of Municipal Affairs Act for the year 1958, and specifically, I believe that the pertinent portion of that amendment in 1958, "An Act to amend The Department of Municipal Affairs Act," reads as follows:

The Department of Municipal Affairs Act is amended by adding at the end thereof, of section 9, the following words: "The Department of Municipal Affairs shall have authority to study, report and advise upon the system of municipal institutions and the government and administration of municipal affairs, or upon the government and administration of municipal affairs in any municipalities or any municipality."

Now, Mr. Speaker, so much for the background. My intention at this time is just to set this case in context and in focus. I would interpret the background of this case to be simply this: This particular municipality had, on occasion, been in financial difficulties before the year 1958, as evidenced by the references in the Hansard of March 25. It was in difficulties in the depression years. It was taken out of trusteeship in 1947. In 1958, there were further difficulties, difficulties evidenced by the fact that that municipality failed to collect sufficient money each year to pay for its expenditures as required by The Municipal Act.

I do not want to be unnecessarily technical about this. Hon. members of this House will know as well as I know that a municipality is required by The Municipal Act to collect enough revenue each year to pay for its normal expenditures. It is permitted to borrow only for capital expenditures.

The municipality of the town of Eastview failed to do that in the several years preceeding 1958, and therefore it was required to come to the Legislature, to ask permission to pass or enact a special Act, a special bill not provided for by our normal rules and statutes, a bill that would permit them to do a special and extraordinary thing, to issue debentures and borrow money to pay for several years' accumulated deficit.

That was granted, but the conditions of the grant, and the conditions under which that Act was enacted under Legislature, are all-important, Mr. Speaker.

I think it was implicit in what was said, in what was undertaken, that firstly the Ontario municipal board was at disagreement with the hon. Minister. The Ontario municipal board was of the opinion that that particular municipality should have been put under trusteeship in 1958.

The hon. Minister was of the opinion that trusteeship might be tantamount to bankruptcy, and he felt that if he was given certain amendments to The Municipal Act and The Department of Municipal Affairs Act, he could assure the Legislature that those amendments would permit him implicitly to control the financial affairs of this municipality, to assure that the municipality would come out of its difficulties and that they would not recur.

The Legislature was in an understandable position. There was much criticism of this, I acknowledge. But, fundamentally, my recollection is that the Legislature took this position:

"Here is a de facto situation. Here is a situation where a municipality is out approximately $500,000. There is no place for it to get that money except by borrowing. There is no place for it to get it, except to issue debentures. We will grant that permission. We do not like it. We do not approve of it. But there is nothing else to do.

"But we will only grant it on this condition—on the understanding that the hon. Minister will make it the responsibility of his department to supervise this particular municipality."

He was quite cognizant of the position of the Ontario municipal board. He knew that this board, which has been set up for years to supervise financial affairs, did not like the situation and wanted to take the community under trusteeship.

But his recommendation—and I think that irrespective of the language that was used—his recommendation was simply this: "Give me the opportunity and I will assure that this will not happen again." And with that background, this Act, this bill No. 42, was enacted into this Legislature.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we moved forward. In the summer of 1960, approximately 90 people—90 ratepayers in the town of Eastview—applied under section 15 of The Department of Municipal Affairs Act to demand a provincial audit of the financial affairs of the community. The government, through the hon. Minister, did what it was entitled to do by law, it voluntarily appointed two auditors to investigate the financial affairs. In fact, it took the initiative after this request was made. And then, I believe, on November 17, the report of the auditors was made to the municipality and, subsequently, made public in this province.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention in this difficult undertaking to vilify anybody, to be unnecessarily personal. I want to be objective. I want to be forceful.

With that purpose in mind, I would ask your indulgence to read rather extensively from the report, a report which, I submit, is available and I am sure is in the hands of all hon. members.

The first reference which I want to make, Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the background that I have already read, is the profit report which applies to financial administration. It is set out on page 50 of the report of the auditors. And I will read directly from that portion of the report commencing at:

For the past 8 years, the financial administration of the town has been carried on in a most unbusinesslike manner. It has been poorly planned, poorly directed and for this every member of council must accept responsibility. Having received the approval of the Legislature to fund a deficit existing at December 31, 1957, the council had the unique opportunity and privilege of closing the book on the past and starting out with a clean sheet.

One would have expected that the council would have taken great pains to manage the town's affairs properly in 1958 and 1959, and implement the assurances given to the department by the mayor that the proper budgets would be prepared and adhered to in the future. This was not done.

The administration of the town since 1957 has been marked by the same failure to budget properly or to levy sufficient taxes, the same willingness to spend in excess of the amount provided in the budget and the same propensity to pile up bank loans far in excess of the amounts permitted by the statutes, thereby delaying accounting for their policy.

At the end of 1958 the town had a deficit of $70,000 and at the end of 1959 this had increased to $151,000. At December 31, 1959, the bank loans of $483,000 for revenue fund purposes not only exceeded statutory limitation of 70 per cent of the uncollected revenue, but even exceeded the total revenue fund by more than $118,000. Notwithstanding section 311 of The Municipal Act, the council made no provision for the 1958 deficit of $70,000 in the budget of 1959.

It is not evident why the council did not realize there was a deficit for 1958 at the time they were preparing the budget for 1959. According to their evidence under budget procedure, each member was given printed budget forms on which descriptions of the various revenue items and expenditures had been typed in the first column. The second column was for estimates for 1959, and in this column the council was to insert the amount which they decided to provide. In the third and fourth columns the amounts estimated for 1958 and the amounts actually expended for 1958 had been typed in to guide them in making their estimates for 1959.

The council had only to compare the total of the third and fourth columns to see that actual expenditures for 1958 had been far in excess of the estimates.

Before Bill 42 was passed in 1958 to fund Eastview's deficit by the issue of debentures, section 8 was inserted providing the debenture bylaw could not be passed without the approval of the department. It was understood then by the department that the town would forward voluntarily the proposed budget for 1958 for scrutiny by the department before submitting the debenture bylaw for approval.

However, the budget was adopted, the levy bylaw was passed, and the tax roll prepared all without prior reference to the department and before the department was asked to approve the debenture bylaw.

Before doing so, the department sent its representatives to Eastview, on May 1, 1958, to examine the budget as adopted. It was found to be cut too close and this was pointed out to the mayor, who evidently maintained they would not over-extend the amounts provided in the budget.

There was not much value in this assurance because the council proceeded to spend freely during the remaining 8 months of the year with the result that actual expenditures exceeded the budget by $71,000.

The major item contributing to this expenditure was street repair. The amount provided for in the budget for resurfacing, patching, and dragging was $28,000, whereas actual expenditures exceeded $71,000.

In 1959, total expenditures exceeded the amounts provided in the budget by approximately $130,000. Again the major item contributing to this expenditure was street repair. For the street repair programme—resurfacing, patching, dragging—the council provided $37,000 in its budget and then spent slightly more than $96,000.

In her evidence the treasurer stated she had warned against additional expenditures when the budget was already spent and they spent more money nevertheless.

The failure to budget properly and to take adequate levy each year, coupled with the council's continued overexpending resulted in repeated borrowing from the town bankers, which, in turn, resulted in a growing burden of interest charges. This indicated the council had learned little about financial administration from experience prior to 1958 or from the severe criticism given it during the discussion of the 1958 private bill.

Because of their significance in this matter, the provisions of section 341 of The Municipal Act with the exceptions of 5 to 8 inclusive are set out below:

"A council may by bylaw, either before or after the passing of the bylaw for imposing the rate for the current year, authorize the head and treasurer to borrow from time to time by way of promissory notes such sums as the council may deem necessary to meet, until the taxes are collected. The approved expenditures of the corporation for the year include the amounts required for sinking funds, principal and interest falling due within the year upon any debt of the corporation, school purposes, special rates and any board commission, board or body and other purposes for which the corporation is required by law to provide.

"If the council authorizes the borrowing or borrows any larger amount than is permitted under this section every member who knowingly votes therefor shall be disqualified from holding any municipal office for two years."

Although section 341 is one of the most important in The Municipal Act and should be familiar to all members of council, and particularly so to the finance committee, all claimed they knew nothing about it.

From the evidence, there is no doubt that the other members of council were content to shelve their responsibilities by relying on the mayor. It was stated by some that whatever the mayor said was taken for granted as being correct. As head of the council, the mayor, of course, had a special responsibility. However, the mayor also professed ignorance of the provisions of section 341 on the requirement of Ontario municipal board approval before borrowing in excess of 70 per cent and of the amendment to this section.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are set forth by way of background. It is my intention to make more and specific references to this report.

But at this juncture I would stop, Mr. Speaker, and point out to you the situation we have now after the report has been made public in the fall of 1960. It is simply this:

Between 1958 and 1960 this community continued to do exactly what it did prior to 1958. It continued to spend more money than it collected. It continued to fail to levy and to meet its obligations. It continued to violate section 341 of the Act.

And this indication that the community would continue to do as it did in 1958 was apparent—not in 1960—but in the very fall of 1958 when The Department of Municipal Affairs went into the community to investigate and found that their bylaw, they intended to pass and enact in the spring of 1958, provided for an insufficient sum. They had not met their undertaking to the department that they would present the bylaw for approval to The Department of Municipal Affairs before it was enacted. They proceeded in the same way as they had before.

What greater indicator was there that this community had not learned its lesson? And yet, between that time and the year 1960, these deficits continued in increasing amounts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that The Department of Municipal Affairs must bear the responsibility here. We believe in good government. We believe in constitutional government. We believe in a government that makes an hon. Minister responsible for the activities of his specific department. And the very thing that we did in this Legislature in the year 1958 was in effect to say to the government opposite and specifically to the hon. Minister:

"All right, we acknowledge an unfortunate thing. We have complained that The Department of Municipal Affairs and The Municipal Act are not sufficient to safeguard the interest of the local taxpayer. And here is an illustration of it. But we cannot do anything about it. They are $500,000 in debt and we must provide money for them.

"We will give you authority. We will pass this Act. We will permit you to borrow the money, but be sure it does not happen again and we will not expect this community to put itself to the inconvenience and to the humiliation of putting it in trusteeship. But we do hope that the Act you have requested and the amendment you have requested, Mr. Minister, will be enough for you to take whatever action necessary—the type of action that is comparable to trusteeship, the type of action that will assure the situation does not get worse."

And yet, it got immeasurably worse, Mr. Speaker, while I speak very forcefully, I speak very determinedly. I am not accusing the hon. Minister opposite of any personal culpability. I do not feel that way. It is not part of my system.

But I do say that we have a system of government that makes a man responsible for the policy and administration of a department, and when something goes wrong it is his responsibility that is at stake. And herein the department has failed this Legislature. It has failed the people of Ontario and the hon. Minister must accept that responsibility.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): May I say something before he finds me guilty, or is the hon. leader of the Opposition just going to come to that conclusion?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, there may be facts left out. I am not one who will prejudge and I will give the hon. Minister all the opportunity—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is exactly what the hon. leader of the Opposition is doing and what he has done.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I took great pains, great pains, Mr. Speaker, to do nothing more than quote from the report. Now it may be that the report is inconclusive. It may be that the hon. Minister has an explanation to make beyond the report. Surely he should have that opportunity. But I do not know that he should take the opportunity now and disrupt my presentation. I will gladly give him—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I will go no further except to say to the hon. leader of the Opposition, let him not find me guilty until he hears all the facts.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I will not do that. All I say now is that we are not in a court of law at this time. We are in a legislative body, an institution that has grown up with great historical background over a long period of time, and that has as one of its essential characteristics the responsibility of a departmental head for malfunctioning of a department.

Now that is all I am saying. I am simply saying that the evidence would not indicate that the hon. Minister did anything personally culpable. There is no evidence of it. All I see is lack of administration, lack of an undertaking to carry out his promise in 1958, lack of assurance that what we expected of him in 1958 would be done.

The only evidence I have is the report which says the same things that occurred before 1958 continued after 1958 in the same manner. The report itself says that. And that is my evidence, Mr. Speaker. I have none other.

But I would remind the hon. Minister that this is not a court of law. We are not trying him personally. We are trying our system. We are asking that the normal rule of a legislative body be applied, that he bear the responsibility of any malfeasance of the department, any failure of the department to do what was expected. The evidence would certainly indicate that not enough was done—whatever was done—to avoid the very thing that occurred before 1958 from recurring after 1958.

I feel strongly about this, because this is part of the pattern. We have had Belleville. We have had York township. We have had Arnprior and we have had this community. And always we have complained about the patchwork position of the department in regard to reform of municipal affairs. We need something more.

I fundamentally feel, Mr. Speaker, that the municipalities are not an independent economic group. They are the children, if you will, they are the agency of this legislative body. They are the agency of the provincial government. And we have an obligation, Mr. Speaker, to the taxpayers in each municipality to assure that the elected municipal representatives who administer the municipalities actually carry out their responsibilities. That is the responsibility of The Department of Municipal Affairs and that, without being vindictive about it, is the job of the hon. Minister—and he must stand or fall on the performance of his subordinates.

Mr. Speaker, may I continue now to several items and several matters that appeared in this report before the financial discussion to which I alluded a little while ago? The first matter to which I would make reference are the dealings in municipally-owned land in this community of Eastview. And there I would refer to and read from page 16 onward under the heading "Dealings in municipally-owned lands":

One important matter affecting the financial affairs of the municipality is the manner of dealing with land which may be acquired by the municipality under the provisions of the various statutes in that behalf. We therefore extended our inquiry into this field and ascertained that in the case of Eastview land had been acquired under 3 main headings. In the first place, under section 26 of The Planning Act; secondly, under tax arrears; and thirdly, street closings.

Now you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that under The Planning Act it is required to set aside—and I am speaking very informally now—I believe 5 per cent of each subdivision land for public purposes. Land would accumulate to the community in that way.

This report will deal with the disposition of such land. It will deal with the disposition of land that arose as a result of tax arrears and as a result of street closings.

Now the report is rather voluminous in this respect, but one indication, one common denominator that runs through this portion of the report, is the simple fact that at no time did the municipality have an independent appraisal made to ascertain what price the town should obtain for any particular parcel of land sold.

Mr. Speaker, what follows is simply this, an analysis of those parcels of land that have been sold over the last 10 years for less than the appraised value. In each instance the auditors have come to the conclusion that these lands were sold for substantially less than what the appraised value of the land would have been had an appraisal been made.

The first reference is made to one lady in the community. She bought her land in 1953; she paid $200. The report indicated that an appraisal of the land at that time would have suggested the land was worth about $1,000, or at least $500 to $600. The significance of this is that I believe the lady in question was related in some way to one of the municipal officials.

Mr. Speaker, that was in 1953. The same sort of thing happened with respect to a Mrs. Roberts, who was the wife, Mr. Speaker, of Mr. Roberts, now the reeve of the community. In her instance, she purchased a parcel of land for $375 which was found to be worth about $1,500.

And then a Mr. Kelly exchanged lands in 1952, parcels of land that varied substantially in their evaluation, a difference of upwards, I think, of something like $20,000. But those situations existed prior to 1958.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I wish to draw to your attention is that after our private bill in 1958, after bill No. 42, this thing continued. In August of 1959, one Mr. Brunet acquired a parcel of land for $1,000, a parcel which the evaluators determined was worth somewhere in the neighbourhood of $6,000.

I point this out because again a Mrs. LaBelle acquired a parcel of land—at least she entered into an agreement to acquire a parcel of land—for $1,000 that supposedly was worth $13,000 to $15,000. This transaction fortunately was not completed. It was a parcel of private subdivision, and The Department of Planning and Development did not approve the disposition the contractors made.

Regarding all these, it seems inappropriate to leave the discussion without pointing out, Mr. Speaker, that these parcels of land sold by the community were sold without appraisal. No appraisal was made. The

Surely it should have been cognizant of some of these things. Surely the department, having the experience before 1958 in the matter of trusteeship, should have exercised what the Ontario municipal board would have exercised, jurisdiction over this sort of thing. They should have been on the lookout more than they would be with other communities. The municipal board would have located these irregularities, would have located these shortcomings in administration. Why did the department not do the same with respect to these sales after 1958?

Mr. Speaker, that is not all. There is the matter of land sales that I have referred to. There is the matter of a particular company—a company that was incorporated, Garcharl Investments, a company that included people that were closely associated with the municipality, people who occupied important positions in the municipality, including the mayor. These people dealt in lands, in the investment of lands, according to the report.

Surely there should have been some of this information available to The Department of Municipal Affairs. Surely The Department of Municipal Affairs should have been suspicious of this situation. And yet this company, in conjunction with its subdivisional activities, was permitted the convenience of having the servicing of the subdivision—the lands, the roads, and such-like—financed for a period of time by the municipality before the company was required to repay the municipality for that particular work done on the subdivision.

Normally this is not the thing that is done—I am not saying that this is a great issue in itself—but it is indicative again of the lack of adherence to the rules and regulations of municipal conduct. And yet The Department of Municipal Affairs seemed to know nothing about it.

In the matter of fixed assessments, Mr. Speaker, we have an instance where one of the municipal officers, the proprietor of the Eastview hotel, I believe, had a fixed assessment for a long period of time, far less than the assessment that one would have expected. Normally fixed assessments must be approved by the provincial government. There was no approval here. The community lost money as the result of these fixed assessments.

A hotel normally is not entitled to a fixed assessment—that is the privilege of an industrial or manufacturing company, not a hotel—and yet The Department of Municipal Affairs knew nothing about it, and did not terminate this practice, which again is contrary to the rules of The Municipal Act and the rules set down for the conduct of municipal activity.

You have the instance, Mr. Speaker, at page 38 of the report, of contracts and rentals between people who were closely associated with the Garcharl company. Let me read, Mr. Speaker, part of this particular report which might emphasize it more effectively, under the heading "Contracts and rental agreements":

One of the matters of complaint of the petitioners for this inquiry was the large increase in the cost of garbage collections and disposal. It appears that prior to 1955 the town had operated its own garbage collection system. In some manner which remains rather obscure, council decided to contract with a contractor for this service and this came to the attention of Mr. Golland and, as a result, he offered his services.

Now, the same man had previously been in the business of installing pumps and service stations, and in connection with that business had dump trucks, a bulldozer and jeeps, which equipment could conceivably be used in garbage collection and disposal.

Early in 1955, a contract was entered into between the town and Golland. It seems clear that tenders were never called for this contract. We were not able to ascertain the basis upon which this particular contract was negotiated, although we used our best efforts to do so. This contract provided for the operation of a system of garbage collection by Golland for which he was to be paid the sum of $22,000 per year.

Then this rather strange provision appears in the contract: "This contract to be in force for a 5-year period, revisable every year." Even if it were possible to interpret this clause correctly, we do not believe it is within our jurisdiction to do so. We mention it here only for the purpose of pointing out that if, in fact, the contract is one extending beyond the current year, it would require the approval of the municipal board, under section 67 of The Ontario Municipal Board Act, which was never obtained.

After one year's operations Golland ascertained that his profit was small. And so he went to council and renegotiated the contract on the basis of 11 cents a family a week, an estimated 5,600 families. No tenders were called at this time, nor indeed on any of the contracts made with Golland. Again the same clause as to the 5-year revisable every year was inserted.

Now at the end of one year and in anticipation of the dump being moved, Golland went to council again and renegotiated the contract, and this at 15 cents per family on the basis of 5,900 families.

This man, Mr. Speaker, I would draw to your attention, is likewise a member of the investment company, the Garcharl Investment Company, to which I made reference earlier.

We have an instance here, Mr. Speaker, where contracts were made by the municipality without calling tenders, presumably to friends of members of council. This is not a healthy circumstance. This is the sort of thing that I would have hoped The Department of Municipal Affairs would have been on its toes about, would have been investigating, would have been concerned about. And yet nothing about this, until this audit had to be inaugurated—had to be brought about by the initiation of irate ratepayers—and came to public attention.

And then we have, Mr. Speaker, the instance where the council members were concerned about—in the year 1959, I believe—their remuneration.

You know as well as I, Mr. Speaker, that under an amendment of this body in 1959, councils were permitted to pay themselves in different fashion than heretofore. It was permitted that they pay themselves either by so much per meeting—which in the instance of Eastview was, I believe, $8 per meeting—or on an annual basis. Now in that community in the latter part of 1959, instead of passing a bylaw increasing their indemnification and conducting that business in a normal fashion, they passed a resolution which I would draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, on page 43, I believe, of this particular report.

The resolution moved and duly seconded that the treasurer be instructed to repay the members of council to the amount of $3,200 out of the fund for receiving distinguished guests as this amount was fully expended by various members on behalf of the municipality.

This, Mr. Speaker, in December of 1959—this approximately a year and a half after this Legislature anticipated that The Department of Municipal Affairs would exert the same type of control, influence and direction of financial affairs as though the municipality was under trusteeship.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I draw these things to your attention seriously. I feel herein we have a matter that must be a subject of serious debate.

I said earlier that it is not my intention to come into this House and prejudge the conscience of any man. I do not intend that, and I do not intend to do it in this instance with respect to anybody; the members of council, the members of government, or any other person.

But I do come here as the leader of the Opposition, and I do come here to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that in this instance we have a situation that is unpardonable from the municipal level.

I do not think under any stretch of the imagination we can permit the type of conduct that existed in that municipality to continue any length of time whatsoever. It is our responsibility to enact laws now and at this session which will preclude men of the temperament of the gentlemen who were in charge from continuing to operate any municipality.

I believe this very strongly. I must emphasize again, I am not prejudging these men. I am saying that if they do not have the competence to administer a municipality, then we are downgrading our concept of democracy by permitting them to continue, and we cannot leave that determination to the ratepayers. We are doing a disservice to the local ratepayers to permit them to assume the responsibility that we should assume at this level. That observation I make.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, one of my first recommendations is that this government give immediate consideration to the type of legislation that will assure that persons who are either incompetent or unable to manage the affairs of the community efficiently be required to resign and quit their posts as municipal officials. Unless we do that, we are doing a disservice to the municipal institutions in the province of Ontario. It is our responsibility to enact laws to govern them, and I recommend that immediately.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I come back to my first proposition. I do this with a certain amount of personal regret, but I do it in the realization that again good government in Ontario means something. It means simply that people who are responsible assume that responsibility. And I personally feel that every hon. member in this House, irrespective of the phraseology of the amendments in 1958, expected that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and even the hon. Prime Minister in his government at large, would do more for the municipality of Eastview by way of supervision of its financial affairs than was ever done before the year 1958.

I understood them to mean: "We will do the same thing as though this community was put under trusteeship, but we do not want it under trusteeship for the simple reason that it will embarrass the community and create the impression that the community is bankrupt and it is not bankrupt. But leave it to us and we will do something and will assure that these things do not continue."

But in spite of that assurance, Mr. Speaker, the opposite occurred. Things grew worse. We have a situation where a deficit now has accumulated just as it accumulated in the years prior to 1958. It accumulated in 1958, it accumulated in 1959, and I understand it has accumulated in 1960. We cannot permit that to continue. Section 341 of the Act says that any community or any municipality wherein that is permitted to happen with the knowledge of the municipal officers, those municipal officers are precluded from holding office for a period of two years.

Think of the seriousness that this Legislature at one time attributed to this type of activity, and yet The Department of Municipal Affairs either knew nothing about this continuing difficulty, or if it knew, it failed to act.

They are equally serious! If the department knew, it should have done something about it. If it did not know, the question is: Why did it not know?

This was not an instance where all was going well, where all had gone well for a long period of time. Here was an instance where we knew there was financial difficulty, where we knew this community was in certain financial restrictions. Yet, in the years 1958 and 1959, nothing took place by way of demonstration from The Department of Municipal Affairs that the department was cognizant of what was going on, or in fact that it took any steps to remedy the situation.

When this matter was publicized on November 17, I made this statement, and I repeat it now:

The Eastview report just released is one of the most critical reports of municipal and provincial administration that has been made public in a long while. The mismanagement of the affairs of the town of Eastview by the mayor and council and other public officials is reprehensible. It is inconceivable how these municipal officials can continue to be of public service.

The substance of the report does not deal with the responsibility of The Department of Municipal Affairs in this matter. I wish to point out that the financial crisis in Eastview did not begin in the year 1960 but instead began several years ago. In 1958, the town of Eastview asked the provincial Legislature to enact a private bill to authorize the town to borrow money to repay current expenses for which the town had not budgeted.

The Legislature, realizing that the town had done an illegal act, was reluctant to grant this permission. The Ontario municipal board, which normally advises and guides both the government and the Legislature in matters of this sort, advised that the Legislature should not enact the private bill. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs then undertook to the Legislature that his department under law would exercise its powers to supervise the activities of the town of Eastview so that the financial difficulty would not recur.

The Ontario municipal board advised that the town should be put under trusteeship. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs advised the Legislature that the powers of The Municipal Act were sufficient to permit The Department of Municipal Affairs to exercise control over the affairs tantamount to trusteeship.

As a result of the persuasion of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, the private bill was enacted in 1958.

One-and-a-half years later, a public inquiry demonstrated in the report which has now been made public that the mismanagement of the affairs of Eastview continued after 1958. There is no indication that the department intervened in the supervision of the affairs of Eastview as it had promised.

Here, again, as in Belleville, in York township, The Department of Municipal Affairs has not exercised the responsibility that is incumbent on it. In Eastview the department failed the Legislature, it failed to undertake the responsibility which the hon. Minister said it would undertake. It is difficult to escape the conclusion that the department acted contrary to its better judgment in 1958, in order to assist one of the Progressive-Conservative members of the government.

In the years 1958 and 1959, the department failed the Legislature and the people of Ontario when it neglected to supervise the affairs of the town of Eastview and permitted the financial difficulties which existed and were known several years ago to be compounded. The Department of Municipal Affairs must be charged with negligence in the strongest possible terms. The hon. Minister, as head of the department, must accept his constitutional responsibility for any mismanagement by the department. Today there is no alternative except that the hon. Minister acknowledge this responsibility and resign.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, I move—

Hon. Mr. Frost: He did not prejudge the case then?

Mr. Wintermeyer: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. leader of the Opposition did not prejudge? I am referring to the statement. I hope it clarifies things for me.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I would have expected the hon. Minister to reply before now. I would have expected the hon. Minister, in whose hands I am sure this report was for many days before its publication, to have made an explanation. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister would expect the people of this province to accept the report at face value, and, for the world of me, I cannot but repeat what I have said again. This is not a personally vindictive position on my part. It is simply, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister bears a constitutional responsibility to exercise authority. And I suggest that in this instance I cannot for the world of me—unless his explanation is that he knew about this, that he was in there—see how it can be demonstrated that the hon. Minister did what was expected.

He might say that he did not intend to do anything in 1958, except to leave it up to the resources of the municipality. I would have hoped that the hon. Minister would have expected, after 1958, to have people in there constantly.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I do not intend to interject, but at the appropriate time I shall make a full explanation which I think will satisfy even the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. F. R. Oliver, that the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, now before the House, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

But this House,

1. Regrets the government's failure to propose

(a) specific measures to provide work and income immediately for persons unemployed in Ontario, today, and

(b) specific measures to minimize the increase in unemployment which is predicted for the coming winter;

2. Regrets that the government has not recognized its responsibilities nor exercised its authority as a parent government in guarding the welfare of municipalities, as shown in Belleville, York township, Eastview, and others;

3. Regrets that the hon. Prime Minister's unrealistic demands at the recent federal-provincial conferences, and his failure to enlist the support of other Premiers in securing higher rates of rebate in the direct tax fields, cost Ontario an opportunity for additional, badly needed revenue;

4. Regrets the government's failure to cope with the many problems of serious concern to Ontario farmers;

5. Regrets the government's failure to introduce a comprehensive medical care insurance plan.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): After listening to that amendment to the motion, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I might almost feel inclined to throw up my hands. It reminds me of an old army friend of mine many years ago, who, beset with many difficulties in relation to discipline and other things, said, "I will the sponge throw up." He happened to be of our great sister race in this country.

However, sir, in order that I may get my bearings, and my breath, and see if there are any bright spots in the great pall of gloom which the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) has drawn, may I first of all extend my compliments to you. May I say, sir, that I agree with everything, my hon. friend has said about you, your abilities and your impartiality. I would say, sir, that you make a great Speaker of an honourable assembly which has a long record of service.

Also, sir, I would like to extend my compliments to the mover and seconder of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne.

First of all, might I say to the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme), who was drawn into making his contribution at the eleventh hour and the fifty-ninth minute, that he made a very fine address to this assembly.

To the seconder, sir, the hon. member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. Evans) may I say the same thing.

He is a young man from a distinguished family in the great riding of Simcoe Centre. His family goes back to the first days of that area, to the first days of the township of West Gwillimbury, of which I think it forms a part; at least it is in the neighbourhood. I may say, sir, that he made a very fine presentation to this House. I am sure that in future this young hon. member will continue to make contributions to this House, and be a worthy successor to the great George Johnston, who became "Mr. Simcoe Centre" himself.

There are many matters on which I could address myself in this great document, the Throne address, which presents a great and challenging programme to this province and to this House.

It is a programme, sir, that the hon. leader of the Opposition has seen fit to bypass entirely and to talk about subsidiary issues. I am not saying that the things he talked of were not of importance, but, may I say to my hon. friend that I feel in his presentation he has neglected the great opportunity of speaking about Ontario and her great possibilities and prospects.

In connection with the Eastview matter I propose, subject to certain comments that I want to make, that I leave this to my able friend, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) to deal with. But I would, sir, be glad if the official Opposition would really become oriented and would really know what course and what direction it is going to take.

As a matter of fact, the hon. leader of the Opposition now asks that we pass measures that regiment and control the municipalities. My hon. friend has departed from the cry of autonomy in which he and his hon. colleagues used to indulge, and now he calls for a policy of regimentation.

My recollection is that the hon. gentleman, who sits immediately behind him, not so very long ago referred to, and was complaining about, the operation of the municipal board and the operations of The Department of Municipal Affairs. He decried the fact that they were treating the municipalities like children.

Since Ontario has 1,000 municipalities we have had some inevitable difficulties arising from the great growth of this province, and I will mention that in a moment.

We now have the cry to turn from municipal autonomy; from the right of people and electors to run their own business, and municipalities to run their own affairs.

We now hear a demand advanced by the Opposition to turn back the clock, turn away from autonomy, turn away from these things that we have been trying to develop, and, because there are some difficult spots, to turn again to regimentation and strict control, treating the municipalities like children. That is the only way we can sum it up. As for the municipalities, and I say this generally, the sound way to deal with them is to give them responsibility. Give them all the help and advice we can and, in so doing, develop local autonomy and responsibility.

Down in Cornwall I spoke to a group of civic officials of the mayors' and reeves' association on that very subject, and I would be glad to send the hon. members opposite a copy of my address.

I am bound to say this, sir, that when you accept that principle, of course you are going to have some hard spots. But, I want to point this out to my hon. friends opposite. Take for instance the town of Eastview. Here is a community which had its beginnings as a little French-Canadian town on the banks of the Ottawa river; a little community of some 4,000 or 5,000 or 6,000 people. For generations, it has conducted its business without any significant changes taking place. All at once, it is struck with a great upsurge of Ontario development and that little community, in a short period of time, grew overnight from a population of almost 5,000 or 6,000 to something of the order of 20,000 or 25,000 people. We have this community with a great surge of other people coming in. The background of the community changes.

What have we got when we look at it? We find this. Here is a municipal organization. Look at Eastview in the past, the Eastview that has been known in that region for generations. These people ran into difficulty from an administrative standpoint; I am quite pleased to admit that.

On the other hand, I am bound to say this. I have read the report and I would say to the hon. Minister here that I think his department has done an excellent job. In fact, the hon. Minister should be commended for producing such a descriptive and an informative report rather than being abused and asked to resign over it. It would seem to me that there should be some compliment for such a report. However—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Give him the George medal.

Hon. Mr. Frost: As for the organization they have there, I gather from the report that the cost of operation is extremely low compared with communities of similar size. I think probably it was false economy not to set up an organization that is more in keeping with its growth and size. Still, the town's affairs are in good condition, according to the report.

Interjections by Opposition hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Both batches of the Opposition, the right and the left, might just remember that the jury of the people will be tapping them upon their shoulders shortly, in the form of the people of Eastview who might consider that it would be a great deal better if the hon. members would leave the matter to them, without making political speeches in this assembly.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would ask hon. members of the Opposition to restrain themselves. I think the people of Ontario are very sensible and the people of Eastview are pretty sensible people too.

Despite the errors of the past, despite the fact that they were in financial difficulty some 25 years ago and despite the difficulties of 1958 and 1959 and 1960, I still think that those fine people down there are capable of running their own affairs.

Later we will be dealing with the matter of municipal autonomy. I shall be mentioning more about the address to be given by my hon. friend, and shall deal with it at that time. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, I believe, will be quite capable of dealing with the matter when it is his opportunity to say something.

Mr. Speaker, I want to deal this afternoon with some matters, the main part of what I was going to say having been given over to the debates of yesterday afternoon. Nevertheless, I think, sir, that I can still confine myself to the great compass of the Throne address along with some other matters which I believe can be discussed in this House.

Sir, I would first of all like to say to the House on this, the 29th day of November, that I feel very different this afternoon than I did when the House dissolved last April. I may say that, in the meantime, I have, as leader of the government and the government party here, been reinforced by the endorsement of the people of this province.

During that time I have had two matters affecting, I think, quite frankly, the integrity of the government; and my own integrity because I placed myself on trial in putting those two matters before a Royal commission.

There have been reports to which I want to refer, not, however, as wholly as did my hon. friend in connection with the Eastview matter, but I would say to him, more relevantly.

At that time, a statement had been made in this House reflecting upon the government and its integrity. At the same time, the government had ordered two investigations under The Public Inquiries Act, and, as the House adjourned, people from outside spoke to me about the investigations and all of these charges.

Now, sir, I want to be quite frank with the House in stating that I did not take such statements and allegations lightly. These statements of last February, March and April were cutting, and they were hurtful, and they were intended to be so. I must say that their effect on me was as they were intended to be.

In my time, in public life, I have endeavoured, and I think I have succeeded, to uphold the dignity of public life, and that is what I propose to do. I must say that it is hurtful to me to see and hear those who are careless with the honour and the dignity of this or any other Parliament.

The appellation "honourable member" is more than a mere matter of form. The members of this House are honourable members and they are so elected. They are so regarded and they must be so regarded.

As a matter of fact, in the traditions of public life, this has been very jealously guarded. It has been a condition that if a member makes an allegation imputing dishonesty or dishonour against one of those sitting with him, he should be prepared to resign his seat in support of his allegation. That is the way British traditions have worked in this and all other Parliaments of the Commonwealth.

I recall clearly a very well-known case in this regard which I could refer to the House. In 1924, the member for Hastings, Mr. E. Gus Porter, made some charges against the then Minister of Labour at Ottawa, Mr. Murdoch. Some of my hon. friends opposite will remember quite well that it concerned withdrawal of certain funds from the home bank which was about to close its doors.

It was alleged that the Minister had knowledge of the imminent failure of that bank because of his connection with government, and accordingly Mr. Porter made these charges. He resigned his seat after making the charges and it should be pointed out that the people of his riding did not sustain him in the charges he made. He was defeated in the subsequent by-election.

All I can say is this, that what was done then was in the highest and best traditions of our parliamentary system.

I come here this afternoon, as I say, first of all supported by a verdict of the jury of the people in two great constituencies in this province: one in the north and one in the south, Temiskaming and Simcoe Centre. There the people gave this government endorsement and vindication.

I am not given to boasting over electoral victories. I have had my share of endorsements, to which the hon. member for Lanark referred. I have never in this assembly, or elsewhere, treated that endorsement with anything more than humility. But, I am bound to say that these vindications and these endorsements were indeed heartening and encouraging.

First of all, sir, after the fullest of hearings, the first Royal commission reported. His honour Judge Ian M. MacDonnell completely vindicated the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) and found on the evidence that he did nothing illegal, immoral or improper in buying the property in question. I must say that this complete vindication of an old friend and colleague, a Minister of this House, with whom I have sat for more than 17 years, was pleasing and heartening beyond words.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Subsequently, on November 1 last, the hon. Mr. Justice McGillivray made his very exhaustive findings in relation to charges relating to the purchase of lands in the city of Sarnia by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

In this case, his honour found that there was no substantiation of any allegation of impropriety, negligence or careless judgment on the part of Hydro or its officials. As I stated at the time, the people of Ontario had reason to view with satisfaction the standards of public service set and maintained in this province, both by its elected representatives and its public servants.

The standards are high and they are well maintained. Few indeed are the cases in the public life of this great province, in its many facets, in which there have been failure.

I had felt last session that both of these matters, sir, could be disposed of by committees of the House where these matters could be determined in accordance with British parliamentary practice and procedures.

Unfortunately, it appears—and I say this to the Opposition—that these matters involving the honour and integrity of individuals were going to be influenced by political consideration.

In other words, fair trial by the hon. members of this House is not going to be possible. That is a commentary on the Opposition sitting here today, and I think it is perhaps something they had better get down and think about.

It seems to me that the result of these inquiries is such that the House is well justified in considering, now, how desirable it is to get back to the atmosphere which ought to characterize a Parliament where the people of this province, in their wisdom, send honourable gentlemen to conduct their business.

Again, imputations of bribery, graft and dishonest motives and intentions and dishonest digression should only be made when a member making such charges is prepared to stake his own reputation and his own seat on the principles of the allegations he makes. That is Parliament—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say that I much deplore the methods which have been adopted by both of the Opposition parties. Now, having criticized us very forthrightly, I presume hon. members of the Opposition do not object to us criticizing them and their methods.

I deplore the methods which have been adopted by both of the Opposition parties in, as it were, making their parties and the hon. members thereof plaintiffs and prosecutors. This is an innovation which is new in my experience, and wholly undesirable.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What is the hon. Prime Minister doing here, then?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am not referring to the Opposition group maintaining a watching brief, such as referred to by the hon. leader of the Opposition last March. But when hon. members of this House put themselves in the position of being plaintiffs and prosecutors, this is wholly undesirable.

Now take the matter of the hon. Minister of Labour, a member of this House. The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) was appointed as counsel for the Liberal party. I have never heard of such proceedings. The CCF group was also represented by a counsel who is not a member of this House. The hon. member for York South appeared in person. All these people that I mentioned were prosecutors. These counsels and these hon. members made allegations and submissions against the hon. member for Lincoln, the Minister of Labour. If agreed to by the judge, these allegations would undoubtedly have meant that the hon. Minister would have had to retire from public life. This in my judgment is directly opposed to the principles of parliamentary life. An hon. member in this House who is counsel for the Liberal party and acts as a prosecutor is, of course, making charges for himself personally, and for every hon. member in this House—

Mr. MacDonald: Complete nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Frost: —I would say that this is completely undesirable, completely undesirable.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): I said the most complimentary things about him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say that this is a violation of the tradition—

Mr. Sopha: I made no charges and I do not know where the hon. Prime Minister got his information.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It seems to me that the Liberal party were condemning the hon. Minister and were arguing that he was guilty of things which could have caused his retirement from public life. This great party might well have made its case known to such an impartial counsel as Mr. C. F. H. Carson, known and famed for his impartiality and his eminence as a counsel and a lawyer.

My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, is bound to agree with what I say.

Mr. Sopha: May I rise, Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. State the point of privilege.

Mr. Sopha: My point of privilege is this, that the hon. Prime Minister, the leader of this House, has stated in the most general terms about me that I have made accusations against the hon. Minister of Labour. He states nothing specific, Mr. Speaker, that I said, and I say to this House, with the deepest sense of sureness, that I said the most complimentary things about the personal character of the hon. Minister of Labour at that hearing. And—

Interjection by hon. Mr. Frost.

Mr. Sopha: I said that the hon. Minister was in no way morally at fault in anything he had done, and the records, sir, will disclose those remarks of mine.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sir, the hon. member made those allegations and the learned judge found that they were unfounded and unsupportable. The hon. member who made those allegations was found to be wrong. I would say to my hon. friend that he should never be in the position of being a prosecuting counsel against a fellow member of this or any other Parliament.

Some hon. members: True, true.

Hon. Mr. Frost: If an hon. member of this House desires to make charges against the hon. Minister of Labour, he is, of course, entitled to do so and he should have counsel, but he should be prepared to accept all the obligations which go with one hon. member making a serious charge against another. This, I think, is fundamental. It is the duty of every hon. member of this assembly to protect the honour and the reputation of another, unless he deems it to be his duty to undertake the grave responsibility of making charges in the form which I mentioned.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Prime Minister is referring to charges that I made. I would ask him to name a charge that I made.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say that there is no need for the hon. member to follow the very course of the late E. Gus Porter in connection with the charges that he made: to sit and to make imputations and yet still call the members of this House honourable gentlemen.

Now, sir, in the matter relating to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission and the purchase of the Sarnia land, there is a somewhat different situation. Nevertheless, the hon. member for York South did make statements which as a member of this House and the leader of the government, I think I can fairly say reflected on me and not only upon me, but on the hon. members of this House, and upon my hon. colleagues personally.

How else could one interpret this statement made by the hon. member for York South on February 9, last, and I quote:

Now there is a question I would like to throw in here, Mr. Speaker. When the hon. Minister is speaking, I wonder if he might inform the House what Tory real estate group had this intermediate job in collecting the land for Hydro?

In the same address and in Hansard of February 9, page 240, he said this:

Now, I do not expect ever to get an answer from the government on this. When this kind of deal takes place on the eve of an election, what the people of this province are entitled to know is, how did the election chest of the Tory party benefit from this juicy deal?

Evidently, after having sat in this House for several years, the hon. member still misunderstands me, misunderstands my motives and misunderstands my point of view.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right! But when he says, "I do not expect ever to get an answer from the government on this"—

Mr. MacDonald: I did not get an answer, did I?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, all right. In the formation of the committee of this House, I determined to give the hon. member every opportunity to have this answer.

When I found that the hon. leaders of both branches of the Opposition were importing politics into a question where it was their clear and plain duty to try to uphold the honour and the dignity of this House, then I referred this matter to a Royal commission presided over by a great and learned judge, the hon. Mr. Justice McGillivray, to make sure that the hon. member for York South got the answer.

The charges were serious, I so regarded them. This is what the judge found. I read from page 128 of the records.

He says, after quoting the first part of this remark by the hon. member:

Notwithstanding these remarks, no evidence was adduced to implicate any Tory real estate group or Tory politician or Tory members of the Legislature, nor to connect any such with this transaction. There is nothing to indicate that Gray, Sigler, Ray or their associates had anything to do with the Progressive-Conservative party.

Mr. MacDonald's party was represented at the hearing by Mr. Brewin and Mr. Bryden, and it would be anticipated that were there bases for these remarks some evidence along these lines would have been forthcoming. There was none.

Those are the words of the learned judge who heard this case and conducted this investigation.

These matters are exhaustively dealt with in his honour's findings on page 128 and following, concerning the disclosure of any political connection in the Hydro and the Dimensional transaction. His lordship, after exhaustively going over the evidence, states:

I have no hesitancy in saying that these statements of Mr. MacDonald were completely unsubstantiated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the findings of an impartial hearing conducted by a judge—

Mr. MacDonald: Impartial!

Hon. Mr. Frost: It seems to me that one of the great lessons learned from these inquiries is the fact that we should get back to the tried and true requirements of British parliamentary procedure. I point out to the hon. members of this House that many of these allegations were repeated in paper form in the two by-elections which I have mentioned, in advertising which was disgraceful. Some of it no doubt emanated from the hon. organizer of the Liberal party who is absent from his seat this afternoon. I would like to—

Interjections by Opposition hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My only comment was that those advertisements had a fit place in the garbage can, and that is what the electors of the two ridings thought.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Frost: In referring to the inquiry concerning the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, may I point out that it is the duty of every hon. member of this House to make available, in cases such as this where grave allegations are made, information which is at hand. They should not sit opposite when these things are discussed in the House and look blank. These are discussions which can affect the well-being and the integrity and the honour of this House.

In the case of the Hydro inquiry, there were no specific allegations against hon. members of the House, although I did regard what was said as being a reflection upon myself and those who are associated with me and certainly more particularly upon the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay). There were also allegations as I have mentioned. For example: How much did the election chest of the Tory party benefit from this juicy deal?

I think this House is entitled to the co-operation of all hon. members and this was particularly necessary in relation to the committee set up to investigate this deal. I am talking, first of all, about the committee of this House which received virtually no co-operation from hon. members opposite. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) sat in this House last session and he listened to the allegations and the explanations that were made, but he never opened his mouth to give to this House information which he had readily available. I think the hon. Minister of Energy Resources would have been very much helped by a statement from him.

Interjections from Opposition hon. members.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, referring to the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister, I would like to know what I was supposed to have known.

Hon. Mr. Frost: On February 11, 1960 the hon. Minister of Energy Resources went into the matter exhaustively. On January 29, the resignation of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) from Can-Tex Ltd., was accepted by that company. He was called before the commission and in the report of the investigation, on page 3021, beginning at line 22, there is this excerpt:

Question: What happened to the minutes and the charter?

Answer: J. B. Trotter. They just sat in my office for months. Then after I was elected to the Legislature I was hearing talk around Queen's Park and this investigation came out. I realized Mr. Clark was connected in some way with the Sarnia investigation and I said, "There is too much political mileage if I have this charter, you had better come and pick it up." He came and picked it up and that is all that went on.

I am going to read what the judge says in a minute.

Now I would point out again that when this matter was brought out, the hon. member sat in the House when all these discussions took place and he never said a word. He sat there with a blank look on his face while this was all dug out. Surely it would have helped the House if the hon. member had made a little speech upon this matter when he had the opportunity last session in the month of January.

I say that there are things which are more important than political mileage.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that right? What are they?

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is what the hon. member operates on, but some of the rest of us at least have regard to the honour and dignity of this House. The hon. member's people only operate on the metre of political mileage.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Starting in where I left off about political mileage on which my hon. friends are great experts, you understand, may I say that this is also true for the member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) who was one of the counsel for the Liberal association of Ontario.

I will read what the judge said, and I am going to read it very carefully and hon. members can see for themselves that this is a finding of a great and learned judge:

No member of the government was indicated to have any connection with either Dimensional or the Hydro negotiations, the only two members of the Legislature being named throughout the inquiry being Liberal members.

It was from one of these, the hon. member for York Centre, that the Dimensional file, about which there was so much difficulty and which had been sought in vain, eventually came. He had it in his hands in a professional capacity for approximately two weeks. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think if I had been representing the great historical Liberal party in this province as counsel, I would have subpoenaed Messrs. Norton Penturn and Samuel Saltzman to produce the file, because the hon. member knew perfectly well that they had it. As a matter of fact, he had it in his own hands for two weeks before it was produced. Now I will speak—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the point of personal privilege I feel it only fair and honourable that if the hon. Prime Minister is reading portions of this report he read the whole portion of the report that refers to me.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am just about to do that. I have it written out here and I am going to read it to the hon. member.

Mr. Singer: Read the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I quote:

It was from one of these, Mr. Vernon Singer, that a Dimensional file about which there had been so much difficulty and which had been sought in vain, eventually came, he having had it in his hands in a professional capacity for approximately two weeks—

Mr. Singer: And the next two sentences.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, I will read on:—and it was Mr. Trotter, another Liberal member, who had been asked by Gray to become secretary-treasurer of Can-Tex Limited, a company owned by Clark to which Dimensional had paid the sum of $8,900.

It is not suggested that by so acting, Mr. Trotter committed any impropriety, but the payment to Can-Tex was one of the payments made by Dimensional which was attacked as being open to question, it being alleged that there was no way to indicate how Clark had used the money he received. Then Mr. McEachren, who represented the Indians, was the defeated Liberal candidate in Lambton county. It is in the evidence that he represented them competently and well. There was no impropriety in the actions of any of these men but there is no doubt that my path has been made smoother by the fact that they did not belong to the government party. Had they been, there could be no doubt about what inference I would have been asked to draw at this time.

In other words, it all depends on whose ox is gored. The hon. member for York Centre sits with a file which he has had in his possession for some time. The commissioners and others are looking for this and anxious to find it, and finally it passed in through the door of the committee—

Mr. Singer: The hon. Prime Minister will hear about that file.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why did the hon. member not tell the judge that? Why did he not tell the judge about these things?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out that we can only have one member speaking at a time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The statement that I have read is here and it is factual. The counsel for the great Liberal party might have spoken to the judge about this, he should have subpoenaed these people. If there are differences between a man's professional capacity and his duties to the great people of Ontario, who elected him, should not the latter take precedence? Surely when he sits in this assembly his duties are to the people of this province and the constituency which elected him.

I would say that the hon. member forgot all about the people. His lawyer friend from Parkdale forgot all about the people. They forgot all about the information they could have given to this House to clear this situation up.

I am reading the judge's findings. These are not my conclusions, they are the conclusions of the learned judge.

My only commentary in this is that the standards and requirements of membership in a British parliamentary institution such as this have very great obligations. These obligations are not met with the practice of smart politics. As a matter of fact, these things are not met with political mileage. They are met with the treatment of all those elected to this House as honourable members and the determination to protect the good name and the reputation of hon. members of this House regardless of the party to which they may belong.

It is my hope that with what has transpired since we last sat, both in the verdicts of the jury of the people and the verdicts of the reports of the Royal commissions, that there will be a determination to get back to the dignity and the honour associated with this proud Legislature, which is a development of our great parliamentary system.

Mr. Speaker, I have some other things to say but I have been interrupted, and, I think, the clock is about 3 or 4 minutes fast—at least according to my watch.

I would like to say this in connection with the Throne speech. The first 12 of its 16 pages are devoted to expansion and development, to the matter of employment and unemployment in both short and long views. I would say that we are not seized with the opportunities which the debate on that motion gave them. Again, I express my unlimited confidence in the future of my country and this province, of the people and their ability to adapt themselves to ever-changing positions and conditions.

I have only this opportunity, sir, to refer to what the hon. member opposite said about federal-provincial relations. We shall represent the cause of the people by whom we were elected, at the same time, being mindful of the problems of others. I think the great fault with the party of the hon. leader of the Opposition is this: For years they have been adjuncts of federal thinking. It is that fact which caused hon. members opposite, when we were fighting our great battle for the rights of Ontario in 1951 and 1955, to undermine our position and make it more difficult to get our rights and to get justice from the federal people. Hon. members opposite kowtowed to these people; we stand up and we fight for the rights of the people of Ontario.

I would say this about the hon. leader of the Opposition. The only complaint he raised about what I did in Ottawa was that I asked for too much. That is all. Now I ask the hon. members—he comes and he says: "He goes down to Ottawa and he asks for too much!"

Mr. Speaker, here is my position and, I think, it is perfectly plain. I know, it is 6 o'clock; I am going down to Quebec and, perhaps, you might give me a minute or two more to say this. I know that, perhaps, what I say is too much for the hon. members opposite but, nevertheless, I will try to make it as easy as I can.

The 50-50-50 I asked for is our constitutional right—my hon. friend will agree with that. All right, that is what I asked for—our constitutional right.

Why did I change my tactics? It was for this reason:

Five years ago I went down and made to friends of the hon. leader of the Opposition some very reasonable propositions, a proposition of 15-15-50. It is only right and proper that I should ask for what is due to us. You cannot subtract from our constitution. These things we are entitled to.

I did make it plain to the hon. members down there, and I made it plain to the other Premiers, that while I asked for our rights—nothing more nor nothing less than our rights—I was prepared to sit down and work out with them some methods of obtaining our goals.

Now, that can be very well done. Hon. Mr. Lesage and I, in general, have the same viewpoint in connection with these matters. I have, of course, told him that I was prepared to adopt, for a period of 5 years or something of that sort, a compromise formula which would give justice to our people in this province.

The hon. members opposite completely misunderstand what I said about equalization. As a matter of fact, I did not say anything about equalization at all. But I have always been taking a generous attitude toward the other provinces.

Equalization can be self-defeating. That is one of the faults inherent in the present formula. If the province of Ontario were to get its rights of 50-50-50, which is our constitutional due, and if British Columbia were to get that, the cost of equalization would be completely impossible. You have to have a standard of equalization which is fair and just. To that, I have no objection whatever.

There was a suggestion made at the conference that the provinces themselves sit down and discuss the matter of equalization. Now our province gets nothing in the form of equalization. I said I would be delighted to sit in, I would be delighted to be helpful, but that might not be acceptable to others and the matter dropped there. But I can assure the House I would be helpful.

Concerning the gathering on Thursday, this is a provincial conference, something that I have favoured for a great many years and as a matter of fact have endeavoured to bring about. But sometimes invitations from Ontario are not as acceptable as they are from some of the other provinces, and therefore I was elated when the hon. Premier of Quebec sought fit to extend the invitation.

I propose to do everything possible to make this conference a success. It was proposals made by ourselves that led to the technical and continuing committee, and I have felt for many years that it was wholly desirable for Premiers of this vast country, which now is becoming so much smaller because of means of transportation, to have the opportunity to sit down and compare views and discuss our problems irrespective of policy.

In a federal-provincial conference it has never made any difference to me as to the political complexion of the governments concerned and it does not now.

My feeling is that the various governments are elected by the people of the respective provinces. They are there to govern, and it is with them that we exchange views and help to arrive at arrangements and agreements, if we can, in the Canadian way for the overall betterment of our country.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am not such a bad fellow when I get among those people. I am not too badly regarded after all these years. Of course the hon. members opposite will say things in an endeavour to lower my bargaining ability, but I will just have to do the best I can to get along without them.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): May I ask my question now, Mr. Speaker? Would the hon. Prime Minister advise the House if as of this date title has been conveyed the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission for all of the land covered by the purchase agreement of March 11, 1959?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am not familiar with that matter at all. I can find out for the hon. member and would be very glad to, but I am not familiar with that.

Mr. Bryden: It is almost two years ago and they have not got the land yet.

Mr. MacDonald moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, may I say that we will proceed with the Throne debate on Thursday, and on Friday I think perhaps we might be able to call for a period of time the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas).

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.10 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome, as guests, the members of the Rotary club of Bracebridge and the students from Holy Family school, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. W. G. Noden, from the standing committee on standing orders, presents the committee's first report and moves its adoption.

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Of the Ottawa civil service recreation association praying that an Act may pass exempting certain of its lands from taxation.

Of the board of trustees of the Roman Catholic separate schools for the town of Port Colborne praying that an Act may pass authorizing debentures in the amount of $115,000 to consolidate a floating debt.

Of St. George's college for incorporation.

Of Montreal Trust Company praying that an Act may pass defining its authority and powers as an extraprovincial trust corporation to transact business in Ontario.

Of the board of trustees of the continuation school of the township of Pelee praying that an Act may pass authorizing it to operate a continuation school for grades 9 and 10 in the township; and for related purposes.

Of the Port Arthur YMCA-YWCA praying that an Act may pass exempting its lands from municipal taxation, except for local improvement rates.

Of the corporation of North Bay college praying that an Act may pass reincorporating it as the University of North Bay College; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of Eno-Scott and Bowne (Brazil) Limited praying that an Act may pass authorizing a change to Brazilian nationality by the corporation; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the town of Richmond Hill praying that an Act may pass ratifying an agreement with the TTC for motor bus service.

Of the corporation of Meadowvale botanical gardens praying that an Act may pass authorizing tax exemption on its lands, other than for local improvements.

Of the corporation of the town of Arnprior praying that an Act may pass authorizing debenture issues for certain local improvements; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Port Arthur praying that an Act may pass authorizing the corporation to convey certain lands in fee simple, free of encumbrances.

Of the corporation of the city of Sault Ste. Marie praying that an Act may pass establishing a pension plan for the employees of the corporation.

Of the corporation of the town of Renfrew praying that an Act may pass incorporating Renfrew Victoria hospital.

Of the corporation of the University of Waterloo praying that an Act may pass amending its Act of incorporation.

Of the corporation of Pickering college praying that an Act may pass removing the limitation on the value of land which may be acquired by the corporation in any year.

Of the board of trustees of the Royal Ottawa sanatorium praying that an Act may pass enlarging its authority to care for persons suffering from any disability, disease or illness.

Of the corporation of the town of Leaside praying that an Act may pass making special provision respecting local improvement rates on the lands owned by the corporation in plan M-736, Land Titles, Toronto.

Of the synod of Toronto and Kingston praying that an Act may pass exempting from municipal taxation the lands of Glen Mhor camp.

Of the corporation of Northeastern University praying that an Act may pass re-incorporating it as Northeastern University of Ontario; and for related purposes.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question I would like to address to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay).

In view of the fact that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario did, by writ number 8710, commence an action against Dimensional Investments Limited and the Imperial Bank of Canada, asking inter alia, against the defendant, Dimensional Investments Limited, for judgment ordering specific performance of an agreement of sale as amended, dated March 11, 1959, and made between the plaintiff and the defendant, Dimensional Investments Limited.

Has the hon. Minister of Energy Resources abandoned his previously stated opinion that, in view of the fact that specific performance would not be granted by the courts against Dimensional Investments Limited, by writ number 8710, and that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario had no right, after March 14, 1959, to expropriate the interest of Dimensional Investments Limited in the lands which were the subject of the said agreement from Dimensional Investments Limited?

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of the question, which I am happy to accept.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, may I point out that this is a very important day in the life of our hon. friend from Kent West (Mr. Parry). This is his fifty-first wedding anniversary.

I would like to add that he still claims to be quite capable.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for Kent West says a word or two, I should like to join in the felicitations extended to him. I have a scroll here, which I am going to have sent over to him. It is to Mr. and Mrs. George W. Parry, Chatham.

May I extend to you, on behalf of the government of the province of Ontario, heartiest congratulations on your fifty-first wedding anniversary, and the wish that you may both enjoy further anniversaries in good health and happiness.

I am going to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, of telling hon. members my favourite story in this connection.

A number of years ago I had the privilege of presenting this kind of scroll for the first time to a couple of my beloved constituents who will remain anonymous. I will use the names Mr. and Mrs. Jones. It was only after I made the presentation of the 60th wedding anniversary scroll that a neighbour—a very recent neighbour, who had been invited to the reception—found out what the occasion was about.

After the presentation, the neighbour came up to Mrs. Jones and in a voice of disbelief said, "My goodness. Sixty years with the same man."

Mrs. Jones turned around to her neighbour and said, "Not the same man. I have made him over 3 times since I married him." I do not know whether the hon. member has been made over at all. He comes from pretty good stock to begin with.

Mr. G. W. Parry (Kent West): To the hon. members of this House, my sincere thanks.

We have had a happy life and I will give the reason why. I have always had the last two words in our home. These are: "Yes dear."

Thank you.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Before the orders of the day, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner). Is it true that casual employees of The Department of Lands and Forests had their pay reduced, without prior notice, because of the holiday observed November 11, by the civil service commission?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I received a copy of this question a few minutes before the House opened this afternoon and the matter is rather involved. I will have an answer for him tomorrow, if he does not mind.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Before the orders of the day, may I draw to the attention of the House the fact that this is an historic occasion for a second reason. This is the thirty-fifth anniversary of the election, to this House, of the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver).

Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to comment on the long and successful contribution the hon. member has made to this House over the past 35 years. He has become an institution in this House, a respected institution.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to draw this fact to your attention. In this hon. member, we have a man who excelled in many respects. But, personally, he has been of great help to me in the responsibilities I have assumed over the past few years. He had the honour to lead my party for a long time and lead it very successfully. He has been a trusted advisor and friend, and I think he has been a friend to all hon. members of the House. I need do nothing more than to draw to your attention this historic occasion.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) would expect me to recognize this very pleasant and unique occasion, with some words on behalf of the government, in connection with the service of the hon. member referred to by the hon. leader of the Opposition. He occupies, with the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), the distinction of being the dean of this House.

I doubt whether anyone, apart from the hon. member for Brant, has had a continuous period in this Legislature as long as the hon. member for Grey South. In fact, this House would not somehow seem quite the same, if we did not see his fine physique, and personality seated in this House. He has been seated opposite throughout the period I have been here, and while I extend to him all felicitations for the future, it is not my desire that he should change his seat. I do, on behalf of the government, express our felicitations to the hon. member on this auspicious occasion.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to add a word on this happy occasion. It is a rather remarkable thing for some of us who are as young as I am, that we have to go back or can go back to the history books to learn of the beginnings of the political career of the hon. member for Grey South. At that time, I understand, he was known as the "boy orator" of Grey South. He certainly has developed into an institution.

This degree of longevity is a remarkable achievement in politics which is one of the most insecure of positions. I would like to join with the hon. Attorney-General, and hon. members of this House, in extending our congratulations to the hon. member for Grey South on this occasion.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the hon. leaders of the parties for the kind words they have extended to me. I would expect kind words from my own hon. leader. From the hon. leaders of the other two parties I might expect those kind words but I seldom receive them.

I am now starting, I think, my thirty-fifth year as a member of this House. When I came into the House 35 years ago, the political climate was almost as it is now. Those were hard days. Tough days. We had a ray of sunshine for some 9 or 10 years and then, for some unexplainable reason, lapsed into another period of—let us be generous and say—uncertainty.

I hope to live politically for another 2 or 3 years when I expect that this party will again assume the reins of power in government in this province.

There is much to be learned in Opposition. We get the opportunity and the time to analyze those who sit across from us and by the looks of the hon. members over there, they are ready for at least temporary retirement. I want to remain in public life long enough to make that retirement a certainty. So, as far as I am concerned, in spite of the kind words that have been said, I want to make it more or less permanent. Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, as Provincial Secretary, I regret that I do not have a scroll, suitably inscribed, to send over to the hon. member for Grey South. Had I known earlier, I would have seen to it that such a scroll be prepared. I can now take my time, because I may have some difficulty in finding the exact words that should go on such a public scroll, in view of the very high service we have commemorated here on two occasions.

The next one, perhaps, may not be important to many, but it is important to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) who today celebrated his forty-fourth birthday. For him I have a scroll: "continued health and happiness."

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend the Provincial Secretary said, it probably is not too important to the rest of the hon. members but I thought I would really be slipping by the time I got to be 44. I might just tell the House, however, that I have never felt better than I feel this week. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: First order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this Throne debate, I want first to extend congratulations to the new hon. Ministers of the cabinet.

I have known at least 2 of these 3 hon. Ministers for all the time that I have been in the Legislature. I know them to be men of considerable ability and I think it would be my hope, and the hope of all the House, that they will bring some strength to the cabinet—which has been in rather obvious need of it for quite some time.

However, Mr. Speaker, there is one aspect of these appointments to the cabinet that I would like to touch on briefly.

I acknowledge that appointments to the cabinet are the exclusive prerogative of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) but, since the cabinet is the executive of this Legislature, it is a matter of concern to the Legislature as a whole.

How far are we going to go on two scores—firstly, the expanding of the cabinet and, secondly, the appointment of Ministers without Portfolio?

There is a gentleman in this world who is dear to the hearts of the Tories, namely Parkinson, who has expounded a law. Having listened to him this past summer, I know that he would state that we have passed the point of efficiency in the size of the cabinet in the province of Ontario at the present time.

His figure, I think, was 21 and we have now reached 22.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): No, 20.5.

Mr. MacDonald: I will not embarrass the hon. Attorney-General by asking who the .5 is. However, Mr. Speaker, we have reached this 22 figure by the appointment of 3, or by the existence at the moment of 3 hon. Ministers without Portfolio.

The reason I am raising this is that I have never been exactly clear in my own mind as to the function of a Minister without Portfolio. My impression has been that this is the category into which men are put when they are on the way into the cabinet, or on the way out of the cabinet, and that the functions of a Minister without Portfolio are jobs that are assigned to him by the cabinet.

It seems to me that a more effective alternative would be the procedure now followed in the federal House and, I believe, in the British House of Commons. This is the appointing of parliamentary secretaries, particularly to those major portfolios in which the Minister could do with some assistance.

I am told that the hon. Prime Minister has publicly expressed a view against this. Unfortunately, I missed whatever he did say when it appeared in the press. But it would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that this might be a topic, if the select committee on government reorganization is reconstituted by this House, for that committee to search for a more effective administration of the government at the executive level.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my congratulations to the hon. mover (Mr. Gomme) and the hon. seconder (Mr. Evans) of the motion in reply to the speech from the Throne.

It is a great honour for men to be chosen by the government to move and second this historic debate and, with so many hon. members on the government side, the honour is all the greater if they happen to be chosen.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I cannot find myself in the same generous mood regarding context of the speeches of these two hon. members—and I raise this seriously.

I have been in this House now for 6 years, and I have yet to hear a speech by the mover and the seconder of the debate that would be in the category that I am told was once delivered by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Lyons) and others in this House. His speech was obviously and clearly his own product.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald: The speeches that we have been given during these 6 years have had all the earmarks of a stereotype that emerged from the "head office," downtown. Now, I know each time—

An hon. member: Where does this come from—which office?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if this challenge is not a fair and accurate one, and these speeches do not emerge from an office downtown, I think we shall look forward to a future occasion when the mover and the seconder might deliver a speech which is clearly a product of their own real effort.

We might escape from the painfully familiar stereotype that always expresses sentiment in favour of motherhood, in favour of God, in favour of Royalty and, above all of course, in favour of the Tory party.

Having started from those sublime heights, the speech descends very rapidly to the demands of the mover's and the seconder's local constituency. We have even had a request for traffic lights to be put in at such and such a corner back home.

Maybe I am hoping for too much, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that the mover and the seconder have an opportunity to deliver speeches which will be in keeping with the importance that the government attaches to the Throne speech.

Surely it is a very important speech—laying out the government's programme for the whole session.

This year, the whole of the Throne speech was devoted to unemployment, and to the government's programme for stepping up the economy of this province so that we can cope with this urgent problem.

Yet I think I am correct in saying that the hon. mover and the hon. seconder, if they mentioned this key issue of unemployment at all did so only in passing.

One thing they did mention, Mr. Speaker—and I do want to deal with it, embarrassing though it may be—and this is the matter of by-elections. The government won the by-elections. I congratulate them. One of the glorious things about democracy is that you go out, you fight at the hustings, and when the votes have been cast you extend your congratulations to the victor.

However, there are a couple of points I would like to dwell on briefly for the edification of the House.

With regard to the Temiskaming by-election, a statement was made by the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) predicting that, before the election was over, the government would make a promise to establish a retarded children's school in that constituency.

The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) from his office in Timmins issued a statement which was carried in the Northern Daily News on September 2. Let me read one paragraph from that statement labelling such charges as trash.

The hon. Minister at his office in Timmins said: "Prime Minister Frost and the Conservative government did not, and never would, try to bribe the voters in an election or a by-election."

There was a sanctimonious pronouncement if I ever heard one. However, Mr. Speaker, let us follow the course of events.

A day before the votes were going to be cast the second or third hon. cabinet Minister who had suddenly become preoccupied with this issue of a retarded children's school, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) visited New Liskeard. I shall not read the news account, but just the heading on the story. This was the day before the election.

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): He had better read it all.

Mr. MacDonald: It reads:

NEW LISKEARD SITE FOR PROPOSED KIDDIES' SCHOOL BEST IN THE NORTH, ONTARIO PUBLIC WORKS MINISTER SAID.

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, they did not get to the point of a specific promise, but the hon. Minister came up and took a look at this site. He said it was the best one in the north. Now, I will agree with the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests. This was not a bribe. It was only half a bribe. He would not just say it right out.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: However, let us get to a whole bribe because in the course of that by-election, the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney), who is one of the best-known engineers in this province, took it upon himself to assume the responsibilities and the duties of The Department of Highways. He appeared for one of his many blustering efforts in Temiskaming and announced that the government was going to move this famous bypass, which has been a subject of local discussion for quite some time, from a site that had been chosen some distance back up in the tri-town area, and on which considerable money had been spent and on which there was a lot of local rumbling of dissatisfaction that it should have been closer to the towns.

So the hon. Minister of Mines comes rushing in, complete with all his equipment as an engineer, and takes a look at the situation and announces that the bypass will be moved closer as the tri-town people want it. The electors of Temiskaming took this promise at its face value as coming from people who never attempt to bribe the electorate.

The election is over and, yesterday morning, I picked up the Toronto Globe and Mail to read a dispatch from New Liskeard dated November 29, the first paragraph of which reads as follows:

Despite a promise made by the government before the recent Temiskaming by-election to consider an alternative route, the proposed tri-town bypass will follow the route originally suggested by The Department of Highways, it was indicated today.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Terrible, terrible.

Mr. MacDonald: It was not a bribe, of course. This government does not deal in these kind of things. In fact, these are only two of many issues on which the people of Temiskaming were seriously misled by this government. I wonder what they are thinking now that it is all over?

The second comment that I want to make is that I made some predictions during that by-election with which I do not want to be confronted because they are now being denied by the fact.

However, there are one or two predictions which I did make, and I am willing to repeat them right in this House. One was that if the government was successful in having two members elected, it would construe those elections as condoning all that has gone on by way of maladministration in this government. This is precisely what has been done.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I rise to a point of order. I ask that the hon. member withdraw such a statement. There is not an atom of truth in it.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Why should he withdraw it?

Mr. MacDonald: The second comment that I made, Mr. Speaker, was that two more Progressive-Conservative members added to the serried ranks of the government backbenches down here would not produce a ripple on the pond at Queen's Park. There would be moments of gloating which we got from the hon. mover and the hon. seconder of the speech. So the hon. Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Could I ask my hon. friend, is that what he told the electors on the eve of the election? No wonder they defeated his candidate, if it is!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the next time the hon. Attorney-General gets up, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) take those tacks off his seat which are disturbing him. Just do not bounce up and down. Mr. Speaker, I stated that it would not cause a ripple if these members came down here. I want to say, perhaps by way of condolence to the hon. member for Simcoe Centre, that these words were proven all too true. He was chosen to be the seconder of the motion of address to the speech from the Throne.

Yet, while he was delivering his maiden speech, I happened to look across about two-thirds of the way through the speech and discovered that of the 22 hon. cabinet Ministers only 5 were sitting in their seats.

This is how interested the government is in one of the new hon. members.

Now, one of the hon. gentlemen who was out of the House—and perhaps he will bob up once again—was the hon. Attorney-General. He was not interested in this one more addition even to the point of listening to him.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I was within the precincts of this House throughout. I was in the wings when I was not in my seat.

Mr. MacDonald: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Attorney-General's conscience bothers him a lot. He has got to get up and salve it publicly. But, I still reiterate that when this new hon. member was making his maiden speech, only 5 of the greatly expanded cabinet of 22 took the trouble to listen to him.

It must be a little disillusioning for the hon. member for Simcoe Centre, but he will learn that this is the kind of treatment he gets as one little pebble on the great Tory beach.

The CCF was disappointed in these by-elections. I am very frank about that. We had our usual soul-searching sessions afterwards, and we came to our conclusions as to what we did wrong that we could have done better. Then we decided that we would apply the lessons we had learned, and we applied them in a couple of by-elections that were coming in conjunction with the great New Party developments less than one month afterwards.

From that busy, downtown office, which produces these stereotyped speeches, it is likely that some rather significant figures have been distributed to the Progressive-Conservative hon. members, so I would just like to draw this to their attention, for their perusal and contemplation when they spend long, weary evenings down in the Royal York hotel.

The results of these two by-elections in the province of Ontario, one of them in Peterborough and one in Niagara Falls, revealed that the New Party got 19,800 votes while 1,000 votes back were the Liberals with 18,800 votes, and 1,200 votes back were the Tories with 18,600 votes.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if we move from the results themselves to the trend, there is even greater significance. The results of those two votes, as compared with the comparable votes in the two ridings in the last federal election, reveal that the Tory party dropped 14,000, the Liberal party dropped 2,500 and the New Party increased by 15,000.

Mr. Reaume: Two times nothing is nothing.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members of the House do a lot of twitting about the New Party, such as: "It has not got a name. It is not born yet." But I can assure this House it is a most vigorous creature for not yet being born and if they wish to continue to ignore its existence I invite them to live with their illusions, because this is a very significant development on the Canadian scene. I just want to bring, as a witness regarding how significant it is, a man for whose political astuteness I have the most profound respect—the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario.

A year or two ago, an Australian professor visited Canada. In fact, he spent many months moving across Canada. As a result, he wrote a book which came out about two or three months ago. In this book, there was a chapter on the political trend. He made this observation with regard to the political trend in Canada. I am quoting his reference to the New Party development:

This remained, for me, the outstanding development in internal political organization during my stay in Canada, with highly significant possible long-range effects on Canada's external as well as internal problems.

Then he ended his chapter, Mr. Speaker, with a quote from the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): The hon. member said this a year ago.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not say it a year ago. The book came out only 3 months ago. I have not the prescience of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Has the hon. member never quoted this before?

Mr. MacDonald: What the hon. Prime Minister said was this:

Mind you, I think you are right in suggesting that the next 25 years in Canada will see the emergence of an increasingly stratified conflict between a Conservative-Liberal or a Liberal-Conservative party of the right and some sort of socialist party of the left.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: What does that prove?

Mr. MacDonald: It proves that the hon. Prime Minister has his ear to the ground as usual, and knows what the undercurrents are in the political development of the province of Ontario. He acknowledges that the New Party is going to be a fixture on this scene, and opposing it, as a major political fixture on the Canadian scene, will be a Conservative-Liberal or a Liberal-Conservative party of the right.

I am sure that, when the hon. Prime Minister listened to the results from Peterborough, he must have regarded them as being confirmation of his usual correct assessment of the undercurrent in Ontario politics.

Mr. Speaker, I want to move to another point that the hon. mover and the hon. seconder dealt with in the course of their speeches. I am not going to deal with it in the terms that they raised it, but rather in the terms of the overall policy that the government is engaged in at the present time. That is the fiscal arrangement with the government at Ottawa.

Ontario has a strong case in its negotiations with Ottawa in the new fiscal agreements, for this reason: 75 cents of the Canadian tax dollar ends up in Ottawa, and, while 15 cents of that 75 cents is rebated to the provinces in fiscal agreements, it still means that the province and the municipal governments are operating on only about 40 cents of the tax dollar, and 60 cents of it remains in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, as long as such major budgetary items as education and highways, which—as we are very much aware in this House constitute over $400 million of a budget of over $600 million—are left so exclusively to the responsibility of the lower levels of government, then I think the provinces are entitled to a larger cut of the tax dollar so that they will have it for their own needs and to share with the municipalities.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I feel confident that all hon. members of all parties in this House would be solidly in support of the hon. Prime Minister in a strong representation of Ontario's needs at Ottawa. But I am bound to add that the hon. Prime Minister spoiled our strong case by a gross exaggeration, so that the net effect was to weaken it.

In fact, he played right into the hands of the federal negotiators, so that the federal hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fleming) was able to construe his demands as adding up to something like $2 billion and, therefore, being so exaggerated as to be ridiculous.

However, Mr. Speaker, equally disturbing is what appears to be the official line of the Frost government, parroted faithfully by all spokesmen of the party now, including the hon. mover and the hon. seconder of the Throne debate. We have a situation developing in Ontario which is reminiscent of the Hepburn feud with Ottawa when he was our provincial Prime Minister, and it promises to be just as destructive to the welfare of Ontario and Canada as it was back in the Hepburn days.

For example, speaking in Timmins back on November 2, our present hon. Prime Minister stated that the province had not asked for a nickel too much. That is a ridiculous statement, and the hon. Prime Minister knows it.

Above everything else, his actions speak louder than his words, for I venture to suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that when he got into the private sessions of the conference he got down off his propaganda podium, and he argued for a much more reasonable and attainable settlement.

But what is even more disturbing than that, Mr. Speaker, is a variation on the provincial Tory line at the present time, and that is to set one province against another in this country.

When he was up in Timmins, the hon. Prime Minister said:

What makes it so maddening when we go to Ottawa is that all the other provinces want to get a bite of our money.

Now this is a rather false theory, that once money has been raised and goes into the treasury of the nation, it still remains the money of the people who happen to be taxed on the same basis all across the country. If the government wants to fight this issue, let them fight it out with Ottawa, the government which they did so much to elect.

As a matter of fact, I would judge, in light of that love feast they held at the October meetings of the Ontario Progressive-Conservative association down in the Royal York hotel, that they are willing to re-elect them once again—if the people of Canada can be misled into it.

Do not let the province of Ontario foment a cold war among the Canadian provinces, for that is exactly what they are engaged in at the present moment—or have been at least up until the conference which is taking place in Quebec City today.

This government is rapidly developing a capacity for creating a cold war atmosphere among the provinces of Canada—the Canadian national family—worthy of Moscow's efforts at the international level.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Canada's basic unity and the future welfare of this nation is too precious to be undermined by this kind of petty provincialism and political feuding.

Ontario's conduct at the moment has all the earmarks of a real tragedy in the history of this nation. Because, at a time after the long Duplessis regime, when the province of Quebec has shown a willingness to rejoin Confederation, this government is attempting to outdo Duplessis and frustrate the fulfilment of Confederation in the twentieth century.

If I am wrong in my assessment of what has been the pronouncement of the government hon. spokesman for the last two or three months, if I am proven wrong by what happens in Quebec, I shall be the happiest person in this country, because I am convinced that the tack that the government has taken in recent months is not in the interest of this nation and therefore, ultimately, is not going to be in the interest of the province of Ontario, because the province of Ontario cannot escape from being a very important part of this nation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to another item which, for some reason or other, missed mention altogether in the speech from the Throne.

The Throne speech, as I said a few moments ago, dwells at great length on the problem of unemployment and what this government proposes to do to come to grips with that problem. I shall not discuss any further the inadequacies or the omissions in that programme; we have already done so in a debate and we will have further opportunity to debate it. But, for agriculture, the only reference is to the establishment of a market development branch in The Department of Agriculture. And there was a significant omission of the major battle over farm marketing in which this government is involved, and which is going on in the province at the present time.

Last spring, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that this House witnessed one of the bitterest debates in years—on Bill No. 86, in which the government destroyed the basis of producer-controlled marketing in this province, as we had understood it.

They replaced it by a state-controlled marketing, through which the democratically organized and operated marketing boards can, if the government so decides, be stripped of their powers up to and including being put under trusteeship and replaced by a so-called independent board of the government's own choosing.

This was one of the most disturbing assumptions of arbitrary power by a government that this province has ever seen. We said so in the Opposition when we were debating that bill, and there has been nothing since to suggest that we were wrong.

There was no mystery as to why the government passed this bill. They passed it for precisely the same reason that hon. J. R. Smallwood passed his bill—because he had political objections to a certain economic organization in Newfoundland and he was determined to smash it. This government took these powers unto themselves because they were determined to beat the hog producers' association into submission.

Since last spring, Mr. Speaker, there have been 3 significant developments that I want to touch on briefly now.

The first one was that, last summer, there were protracted negotiations between the hog producers on the Ontario farm products marketing board, following the storm that was raised by the Price-Waterhouse report and the government action based on that report.

As a result of these negotiations, the government restored the 40-cent service fee and set up two committees with the hog producers to study the sales methods and transportation problems, two of the areas of controversy in the present scheme. A newspaper account spoke of a better feeling having been established between the provincial marketing board and the hog producers.

The second significant development took place on October 29, when the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) held a press conference, significantly timed for the first morning of the Ontario federation of agriculture annual convention.

In that press conference the hon. Minister virtually declared war once again. He used a lot of tough language.

For example, he declared that hog producer directors had, and I am quoting here, "repeatedly broken faith with the Ontario farm products marketing board." He added to the cold war atmosphere with such statements as, and I am quoting again, "the board has been pushed around and double-crossed" and "the board has gone the last mile."

I do not know to what extent this is known to hon. members of the House, but on the very day that the hon. Minister gave this press conference, the Ontario farm products marketing board arbitrarily withdrew from the two committees which had been set up in the summer with the hog producers to investigate sales methods and transportation problems. The hon. Minister told the press conference, in effect, that the government was going to move arbitrarily to continue using these sales methods, no matter what the hog producers thought about it.

In other words, the big stick of Bill No. 86 was about to be wielded.

But then the hon. Minister went even further. While protesting they were not wielding the big stick, he stated that: "As a last resort, the government may set up an independent marketing board to handle the sale of hogs."

Now here, Mr. Speaker, is forewarning from the hon. Minister in control that the government is about to move in using the ultimate arbitrary power which its majority granted in this House last spring. The government is actually contemplating action to take over from the producers the marketing scheme which has been built over the last 15 years, and to replace it with a so-called "independent board."

Mr. Speaker, you can bet your bottom dollar that if appointees to such a so-called "independent board" will be faithful servants of the government and its views—which means the big packers' views—the doors will be open once again for taking control of the market away from the producers and handing it back to the big packers.

But there is a third and even more significant development. Throughout the 15 years in which the hog producers have been trying to establish an effective marketing scheme, the big packers have never really accepted it. For example, back in 1951 the packers abruptly refused to negotiate any longer a minimum price, which had been the procedure in the first 6 years of the marketing scheme. When the hog producers sought to settle the issue through an arbitration board, which was their right under the Act, the packers refused to appoint a man, in open defiance of the law, and this government accepted that defiance.

Now, when the hon. Minister talks about breaches of faith on the part of the hog producers, I invite him to go back and consider that chapter of the story—in which this government was guilty not only of a breach of faith, but of toleration of a breach of the law by the big packers. However, that was but one chapter.

For years afterwards the packers attempted to frustrate the hog producers, attempting to secure control of marketing of their product by under-the-table payments to truckers, to make certain that the hogs would be brought direct to the packing plants, forcing the hog producers to set up assembly points through which they would secure control of their product. Out of that flowed endless instances of court procedures to try to resolve the exercise of these powers.

In more recent years, the packers have persistently sought changes in the sales methods of the hog marketing board, designed for one purpose, that they might regain control of the market which the producers had taken unto themselves legally through the marketing legislation given by this government.

And on all of these occasions, Mr. Speaker, when the chips were down in the battle, the government has taken a stand on the side of the big packers. Little wonder that among the hog producers across the province of Ontario today, "PC" has come to stand not for Progressive-Conservative, but "packers' chums."

Faced with this relentless battle from the big packers, aided and abetted by this government, the hog producers have taken another step. They have taken out a charter as interim directors for the time being on behalf of all of the new producers in the province of Ontario, a charter for what is known as the farmers' allied meat enterprises co-operative, now more familiarly known as FAME. They are presently engaged on a bond drive to raise between $1 million and $2 million for head offices and cold storage facilities in Toronto. Then they propose to move to the establishment of a chain of co-operative slaughtering plants.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Is my hon. friend quoting there? Is he aware of that situation?

Mr. MacDonald: I am aware of that situation and I will come to that situation—moving to the establishment of a chain of co-operative slaughtering houses across the province.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a most far-reaching and creditable example of self-help on the part of the agricultural producers to wrest control of their own destiny from the big packers who have exploited them for years. Remember the famous comment of J. S. MacLean, made when he was giving testimony to the prices committee before the federal House of Commons in 1948. Said Mr. MacLean:

We pay the producers as little as possible and we charge the consumers as much as we can get away with. That is business.

And that is the kind of people that the hog producers have had to contend with.

What is the government's view on this? Mr. Speaker, the government's view on this was rather clearly revealed by the hon. Prime Minister last spring. When we were debating in this House in the estimates of The Department of Agriculture and one of the hon. members from the Liberal benches was speaking, he made this comment:

"In last Friday's paper we read that the Ontario hog producers are contemplating setting up their own slaughtering methods."

His speech was interrupted by the hon.

Prime Minister, who asked these two questions: "What does the hon. member think of that? Does he think it is a good idea?"

To which the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes) replied: "I think it is a pretty good idea."

And the hon. Prime Minister replied: "Nothing sillier than that was ever advanced by anybody."

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): He did not say that. Did he say that?

Mr. MacDonald: "Nothing sillier than that was ever advanced by anybody." Yes, the hon. Prime Minister said it. Then the debate went on, and some few pages later—as a matter of fact that quote is found on page 1286 of Hansard of March 15—and on page 1296, the hon. Prime Minister added this further comment, just so there could be no doubt as to what his view was with regard to this development. He added:

In discussing that problem and trying to work it out, I would say that I have come to the conclusion that it is completely and totally unsound from the standpoint of the producers, and I would say that I have the very best authority to support me on this.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, FAME is completely and totally unsound from the point of view of the producers. We have this from the word of the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario.

Yet I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the fact that this development has received the enthusiastic public support of Dr. H. H. Hannam, president of the Canadian federation of agriculture, and of Dr. Alec Laidlaw, secretary of the co-operative union of Canada. The advisory committee to FAME has a distinguished list of farm leaders on it, including the general manager of the co-operative union of Ontario and two past presidents of the Ontario federation of agriculture.

In other words, this government apparently has decided to do battle, they have declared war once again. I want to venture the prediction, Mr. Speaker, that this time they are going to get the war they sought. I say this because there is shaping up the biggest struggle for power ever seen in rural Ontario, involving the industries that have traditionally lived off rural Ontario.

On one side there is a growing range of farm organizations and leaders supporting the meat producers of the province, who are engaged in this effort to build a co-operative organization, which is a very creditable example of self-help. And on the other side, Mr. Speaker, you have the packers and their "chums," the Tory government at Queen's Park.

This government, Mr. Speaker, may try to use the dictatorial powers of Bill No. 86, but there are signs that the people of the province of Ontario are not going to take it without a fight.

Now, within the last 24 hours there has been another development which, as far as I know, has not yet got into the press. I do not want to discuss this at any great length because the situation is in the process of evolving. I think until it has been more clarified than at the present time, we in this Legislature had best withhold our comment. The development is simply this. This co-operative, chartered by this government some 2 or 3 months ago, is engaged in a series of meetings—as a matter of fact, I think they have something like 12, 15 and 20 meetings every night this week promoting the bond debenture issue across the province of Ontario—involving, I am told, something like 500 farmers who are acting as salesmen for the co-operative. As of yesterday the Ontario securities commission has moved in, has issued an order that they are in fact not acting as a co-operative, that they must cease their bond debenture promotion, that they must be brought under the Ontario securities commission, and must be subject to all of its regulations which will result in something like $100,000 in licence fees for the 500 salesmen they have out among their fellow-producers across the province of Ontario and other expenses which I am told will amount to something like $100,000.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Roberts.

Mr. MacDonald: I shall be finished in 3 or 4 minutes regarding the facts of this case, then he can comment.

Now, the argument, Mr. Speaker, that is advanced in the report, the decision of the Ontario securities commissioner—a copy of which I procured from his office myself this morning—is that until FAME is actually in operation it is not acting as a co-operative and therefore has not got assets and therefore cannot proceed to sell debentures, because it has not got the assets upon which these debentures can be based.

I am not going to dispute that point, Mr. Speaker. There is fairly serious division in the co-operative movement as to whether or not this is a valid interpretation and exercise of the powers of the Ontario securities commission. It is up to the co-operative movement, the co-operative union of Ontario and others, to take what action they deem fit. Under the regulations they can appeal this decision to the commission as a whole and subsequently, I think I am correct, to the Ontario supreme court.

However, Mr. Speaker, what I am raising now, I am raising with my remarks directed to the hon. Minister of Agriculture particularly. If the hon. Attorney-General wants to interject, I have no objection.

If the Ontario securities commissioner is right in his assessment of his powers here, he can issue this order to preclude the promotion of debenture sale until FAME has actually got into operation, that is one point.

But there is another point which the people involved, and who are presently out across the province engaged in this campaign, were entitled to have made crystal clear. And that is that if they reverted, so I understand, as was considered by the board of directors of the hog producers' association—who were authorized by a membership of 300 in the month of September at an annual meeting to proceed with this whole venture—they would be willing to switch, if the Ontario securities commissioner said so, from a bond debenture issue to the selling of share capital—the procedure on which co-operatives have been established traditionally. Surely it was within the competence of the Ontario securities commissioner to have indicated that this was the case so that if they wanted they could switch from their debenture sale promotion to a share capital sale and put their plants into actual operation to create assets upon which bonds could be sold in the future.

But this has not been done, Mr. Speaker. What I am a little curious about is whether we are once again moving into the kind of experience the hog producers have had for the last 8 to 10 years; that is, of this government running interference for the big packers and of being partly responsible—not wholly, but partly responsible—for an endless line of test cases in the courts which have frustrated the hog producers in their efforts to establish an effective marketing scheme.

Here we have a repetition of this story, right in the midst of a very creditable effort involving thousands of producers across this province and literally scores of meetings. Some 3 months after the charter had been issued and some weeks at least after the literature upon which this campaign is based has been available, finally the Ontario securities commissioner acts—and let me emphasize this point—because of pressure from Bay Street. I am not blaming the commissioner, because he acted because of pressure from Bay Street. And I want to suggest to this House there is no doubt in the wide world where the pressure has come from. It has come from the solicitors of the packing companies and their friends down on Bay Street.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member's 4 minutes are just about up. That is the way he usually does things, all sorts of distortion before one can get to the meat of it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there is no distortion in what I have said.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would like the opportunity of explaining just what happened. Now the hon. member said 3 or 4 minutes, and I hope he is pretty close to being through.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. Attorney-General going to interrupt in violation of the rules?

Mr. Speaker, all I want to say further on this matter for the moment is this. It seems to me it is the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, within whose jurisdiction comes the development and the encouragement of co-operatives in the province of Ontario, that his department take action and not appear to be sitting idly by while these legal technicalities are being used to frustrate this effort on the part of not only the hog producers, but a growing range of producers of other meat products in the province of Ontario. I have seen nothing that the government has done. I have seen nothing that The Department of Agriculture has done.

I am gravely suspicious because I remember 2 or 3 years ago when a delegation went to visit the hon. Minister in regard to the Ontario hog producers. They came back, and all of them were willing to swear that the hon. Minister had stated that he had hopes that the hog producers' association would hang itself before the vote that was taken on July 25—the plebiscite some 2 or 3 years ago. So we have had very conclusive evidence as to what the sentiment of this government is with regard to the hog producers' association.

I think this House is entitled, and furthermore the agricultural community of the province of Ontario—which is deeply interested in this—is entitled, to assurances from the hon. Minister of Agriculture that he is going to move, and not sit idle, to make certain that a group of people who are seeking to establish a co-operative are not going to be frustrated in their efforts.

Now, when the situation is clarified beyond that, we will have another opportunity to debate this in the House and I shall say more. If the hon. Attorney-General wants to comment, I will be glad to give him the floor.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think it is important at this stage, in view of the statements of the hon. member, that this matter be put in its proper perspective in front of the House.

In the first place, the securities commission is governed by The Securities Act which applies to all people dealing with shares of securities of companies or corporations. When complaints are received in the case of a corporation that is allegedly selling shares, or shares of a corporation are being sold, that has not been registered, filed in the proper manner—the prospectus filed in the proper manner, the necessary certificate of qualification and so forth received by the commission—it is the duty of the commission to look into that situation and to find out what the facts are.

In this particular case, the company referred to was incorporated under part 5 of The Companies Act, which is the co-operative part and has definite restrictive requirements in relation to operating as a co-operative. Under the combined effect of section 19(2)(i) and section 41(a) of The Securities Act, securities issued by corporations operated on a co-operative basis, as defined by that part, are exempt from the provisions of The Securities Act.

But those sort of securities are securities in the nature of ordinary shares all of the same value in relation to the assets and in relation to the members who become members of the co-operative and are kept right within that family, and are not out as a public issue. In this particular case, without qualifying or without going to the securities commission to determine their position, the company made a public offering of unsecured debentures, seeking to raise at least $1 million.

I am told that actually about $15,000 worth of these bonds are presently in the hands of the public. I am referring now to the findings of the commissioner himself, which came down just yesterday, November 30. I might say that complaints came into my office just recently, and the minute they came into my office they were handed over to the proper officers to deliver to the securities commission.

Any suggestion that there was pressure from Bay Street, or from this interest or that interest, in relation to doing something about this co-operative that normally should not be done, is just a lot of balderdash. The hon. member is completely out of order in making such a statement in this House. That is one of the reasons why I want—

Mr. Bryden: Will the hon. Attorney-General name who they came from, then?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: On the floor of this House right now?

Mr. Bryden: Will the hon. Attorney-General name where they came from?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Yes, I will. Usually the position is that my hon. friend is trying to push for action against the sale of shares. In this case apparently he is trying to do all that he can to—

Mr. Bryden: I am on the farmers' side.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is what he is trying to do at the moment—

Mr. Bryden: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Now let me proceed. Due to the lack of information in a brochure used in connection with this offering, complaints were received from members of the public who are neither members nor shareholders of the issuing company. The commission then proceeded to investigate, in order to ascertain whether the issuing company was being operated on a co-operative basis within the meaning of the statutory exemptions already noted.

No common shares had been issued, except directors' qualifying shares, nor is there any evidence that the company has any members.

It appears the only form of financing presently contemplated is through the sale of unsecured debentures to the public generally. When sufficient funds are raised to construct a packing plant, or packing plants, the operation could be placed on a co-operative basis by producers in the locality of a packing plant becoming associated with the debentures through membership as shareholders.

In short, the public was being invited to provide the preliminary financing to create a co-operative system, without the right to participate in the profits, which is the basic idea behind co-operative companies and the incentive, no doubt, which has contributed to their success.

In face of the evidence disclosed, the company was afforded an opportunity to make representation.

I am reading right from the report and I quote:

Mr. C. W. McGuinness, the president, first attended and then requested an adjournment in order to be represented by counsel. In the course of submissions made by counsel, nothing new was developed to alter the simple fact that the company was seeking initial financing outside the framework of a co-operative organization to enable it to ultimately become a co-operative company subject to the requirements of part 5 of The Corporations Act, 153.

On the strength of these facts, which are really not disputed, a ruling is made that the subject company is not at present being operated on a co-operative basis, and a formal order has been issued giving effect to the ruling, and depriving the company the use of the statutory exemptions upon which it was relying.

That is the position at the present time.

The hon. member for York South has referred to the right to appeal which, of course, exists. He has also referred to alternative methods.

If the solicitors, and the financial people who are their advisors, can go to the commission with a proper scheme and a proper set-up, or get themselves within part 5, then they do not have to go to the commission. They can operate.

But would the hon. member, or any other hon. member in this House, suggest for a minute that it is not the duty of the commission to treat all these things alike and deal with them on their merit?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Attorney-General started out with a very florid comment, which his later comments did not substantiate. He has not said anything that I did not say.

I said I agreed that when the case was put to the commissioner that he had to rule on it, and my assessment of it is that the decision with regard to the bond issue—before they had got their plants into operation, and before they had sold share capital—has some validity in it.

I am not disputing it, and I did not dispute it before, but the net effect is that in the midst of their drive, a legal monkey wrench has been thrown into the works. And I personally cannot see yet, Mr. Speaker, why the Ontario securities commissioner could not have made it explicit to these people that if they cannot sell debentures because they have not got assets upon which to sell those debentures, they can sell share capital, in keeping with the established procedure, in establishment of a co-operative. However, he did not say that. So, at the moment, the whole situation is uncertain.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is not the duty of the commissioner to, nor dare he, start to set out plans of that sort for people. But this company has a very good firm of solicitors, and they are quite capable of working out a plan, I am sure. And if they do, why, they will be able to—

Mr. MacDonald: Let us leave the case here with the reiteration of my plea to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that the co-operative come under his jurisdiction. And I hope that he would believe that a co-operative built even by people like the hog producers, for whom he has developed animosity, would still be a worthy project; and that he would do everything within his power to clear away these difficulties so that they can proceed with the building of their co-operative, which may well become one of the historic co-operatives in the province of Ontario.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): I have no animosity against any living soul and never have had.

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I want to turn to another matter—two major items of unfinished business before this House on which the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition have already commented at some length.

I would assume from the hon. Prime Minister's comments, that in his view, it is really finished business.

The government is in control of the situation and I suppose, for better or for worse, that may well be the case. But at least some of us who have been interested in it have the right to make some comments.

I am referring to the two Royal commissions which I will describe, for purposes of simplicity, the Macdonell Royal commission—which looked into the so-called Daley farm aspects of the Niagara parks commission—and, secondly, the McGillivray commission—which looked into Hydro's Sarnia land deal.

I want to discuss these two Royal commissions against the background of a very interesting panel discussion which took place on the CBC last February 28. It was a panel in which the topic under discussion was public morality.

On the panel they had two people; one was Professor John Saywell of the department of history, University of Toronto, the other was a Toronto lawyer named Malcolm Robb, a man whom I understand acknowledges himself to be a supporter of the Progressive-Conservative party.

In the course of their discussion at one point, the moderator turned to Professor Saywell and said this:

Well, the great panacea in this country seems to be Royal commissions. What have you to say about Royal commissions, John Saywell?

Professor Saywell replied, and I quote the first sentence:

Royal commissions very seldom seem to find out anything that is in sharp contradiction to what the people who have appointed the commission have already decided ought to be found out.

The discussion went on. At one point, they were giving some thought to whether or not it would be a feasible proposition in Canada to have established a panel of judges to which the government could turn if they needed somebody to head an investigation into maladministration.

In the course of discussing how they might set up this panel, Professor Saywell said:

Could you not get some sort of body in Canada which was above politics—or as Goldwyn Smith says, is there no such thing as being above politics?

Mr. Robb replied:

You perhaps could get such a body above politics but first of all, as you say, when a judge becomes a judge, for all practical purposes he ceases to be a politician. However, if you are going to have an impartial commissioner, it becomes an almost certainty that you will never see him appointed on a matter in which a government appointing him is generally concerned that something will be brought out in its disfavour.

Mr. Speaker, here were two disinterested individuals; one is a professor of Canadian history, familiar with the experience of Canadian history. The second one is a lawyer familiar with the legal processes and what goes on at Royal commissions. Their discussion was in general terms, without reference to any specific cases. Their conclusion was, as far as Mr. Robb was concerned, if I may quote it in summation, that if a commissioner was known to be genuinely impartial, he would never be appointed. By inference, Mr. Robb, in fact, was saying that a commissioner is appointed because he is known to be partial to the government which appointed him.

Against this background of quotations, those which I shall take as my text, I now propose to take a look at these two Royal commission reports. The first one, the Macdonell commission, has to do with the Daley farm.

I think it is very useful that we should recall the immediate origin of this Royal commission. This issue was raised before the last session of the House, and subsequently by myself in the House, and as a result the government took action. They sent that portion of the issue dealing with the operations of Niagara parks commission, as a whole, to the public accounts committee; they sent the Daley farm aspect of the issue to the committee on privileges and elections—by motion, last February, of the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Labour.

When this issue was being discussed before the public accounts committee, which is chaired by the new hon. Minister without Portfolio from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), we sought to have an investigation of that aspect of the Niagara parks commission operations which permitted, for example, certain of its personnel to work on private property, including the Daley farm, and that aspect of the Niagara parks commission's operations which resulted in them purchasing produce from the Daley farm.

We were ruled out; this was beyond the terms of reference of the public accounts committee.

We were told that it had to be considered by the committee on privileges and elections.

So when we get before the committee on privileges and elections, we tried to discuss not only the purchase of the farm and all the details with regard to the purchase, but we also tried to have an investigation into the operation of the Daley farm.

We were ruled out and were told that the terms of reference did not permit this.

However, interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, after we had discussed it, both Opposition parties—the Liberals as well as the CCF—agreed in the report that while there was no evidence of collusion between the hon. Minister of Labour and Mr. Schmon from whom he bought the farm and who, in turn, some 3 years before, had bought it from the Niagara parks commission, it was still indiscreet of the hon. Minister to purchase property which had previously been part of the parks commission under his chairmanship. Unless this conclusion were included in the report, the Opposition hon. members were not going to go along with the report.

The meeting which resulted in that report being produced, concluded on a certain day after 12 o'clock noon. The House met less than 2 hours later, and the hon. Prime Minister rose in this House and said that he had had an opportunity to see the report and that he did not like it. What he was determined to have was complete exoneration of the charge of indiscretion on the part of the hon. Minister.

He therefore, Mr. Speaker, implemented the law of Killaloe—his own pronouncement. He denied the right of this House to receive a report from its own committee. In fact, the House has never yet received that report.

This came from an hon. gentleman who told us a couple of days ago that he had great respect for the traditions of Parliament. That committee has never yet reported to this Legislature. The hon. Prime Minister rose in the House and significantly, within two hours of the time the committee had finished its operations, announced the appointment of the Royal commission, naming the commissioner, Judge Ian Macdonell.

Having determined that he was going to get a whitewash of this issue and eliminate the charge that there was any ministerial indiscretion, the hon. Prime Minister chose his commissioner well and nobody was surprised that he got the exoneration he sought, because, when the report came out, this is what the Royal commissioner said:

A private deal made after negotiations 3 years later, at a substantial increase in price, could not be regarded—

And I ask you to consider this, Mr. Speaker—as even having the appearance of a conflict of interests on the part of Mr. Daley.

This was the conclusion the Royal commissioner came to despite the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Labour came into possession of land that had been park land under his own chairmanship, 3 years earlier—despite the fact that the sale by the Niagara parks commission to Mr. Schmon was illegal and had to be validated 7 years later by a special order-in-council; despite the fact that the sale was irregular in that it had been made without calling for public tenders and without any effort at getting independent appraisals; despite the fact that the Daley purchase from Mr. Schmon had been anything but an arm's length deal—for in completing it the hon. Minister had no lawyer to protect his interests, and he relied completely on Mr. Rollason the vendor's agent, who even went so far as to pay the hon. Minister's land tax for him; and finally, despite the fact that Mr. Rollason, while a fellow-member of the Niagara parks commission, played a key role in both the original sale from the Niagara parks commission, and later in the sale from Mr. Schmon to the hon. Minister.

In spite of all that, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister chose his commissioner so well that the commissioner reported that there was not even an appearance of conflict.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): What does the hon. member mean by that statement?

Mr. MacDonald: I mean what Malcolm Robb said—that he chose a commissioner whom he knew would bring in the kind of report that he wanted. What Malcolm Robb and Professor Saywell said was the record of history of Royal commissions in this country. Now, go back and dispute their judgment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Judge Macdonell is entitled to his personal views on this issue. But when personal views are so seriously in conflict with the facts, some of which I have just spelled out here, others are going to be entitled to their views and the public will have to make up its own mind.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): They made it up in two by-elections.

Mr. MacDonald: No, they did not. Mr. Speaker, may I deal with this interjection from the top bench over here? I have as much confidence in the judiciary as has the hon. member. But, Mr. Speaker, when a judge gets down off the bench into the political arena, he is a judge no longer. And, secondly, even if I take it out of that context, if a judge does not do a competent job on the bench, the judge is no sacrosanct person.

If hon. members do not think this contention is valid, I would remind them of an instance about a year ago.

A distinguished criminal lawyer called Arthur Maloney, upon reading the judgment of a certain magistrate in this city, and which he considered to be a gross injustice, was quoted in the paper as saying he was going to make representations to The Attorney-General's Department to have the magistrate removed from the bench.

It just showed how much respect he had for that magistrate—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Because the commissioner does not agree with the hon. member is no reason why we have to hear the whole case.

Mr. MacDonald: He does not agree with the facts. He ignores the facts—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It seems to me that the hon. member is delivering the MacDonald commission now; not the Macdonell commission.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the most disappointing feature of Judge Macdonell's report is that he notes cases of questionable administration, then proceeds to make excuses for them. In fact, his honour leans over so far backwards to bring in a report favourable to the government that he even fell into an open contradiction.

In reference to the Schmon purchase from the Niagara parks commission on page 13 of the report, he states this; and I am quoting:

On the evidence before me, I cannot escape the conclusion that the sale was an advantageous one, that a fair price was obtained and that the law was complied with.

Three pages later, page 16, he concludes his summary and this is what he said:

Again to summarize, I find this transaction was also a desirable, advantageous one for the commission, although no independent appraisals were obtained. It was, however, illegal or at least irregular, at the time it was carried out, as it was not approved by an order-in-council.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how can it be claimed with reference to one and the same transaction that "the law was complied with" when it is "illegal or at least irregular"? That is the kind of a puzzle that you and I as laymen will have to sort out after the judge has made his pronouncement.

But regularly throughout the report—this is not the end of it—Judge Macdonell notes serious irregularities. Then, he proceeds immediately to make excuses for them. For example; after noting the illegality of the original purchase and the sale to Schmon, he said this:

But in view of the validating order-in-council this aspect would now appear to be academic.

Later on it goes even further:

I do not think however that any serious blame could be attached to any member of the commission and in particular the chairman, a layman, for overlooking this technicality. No doubt they assumed a procedure which has been followed in the past was correct, and relied upon the officials and counsel for the commission. I have no doubt that if an order-in-council had been asked for, it would have been passed as a matter of course.

Now, this kind of reasoning, Mr. Speaker, is alarming to say the least. Ignorance of the law is no excuse on the part of even a layman. But ignorance of the law, under which the commission was operating, on the part of the paid legal counsel of the commission, is surely intolerable. Moreover, since when is failure to live up to a law a "mere technicality"?

This is the kind of observation we have come to expect from public officials when caught in a breach of the law, rather than a Royal commissioner investigating a breach. Finally, what relevance is there in the assertion that an order-in-council would have been immediately forthcoming if it had been asked for? The law demanded and stated—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member is again getting into a field which is very misleading. I would ask him to try to state just what did happen.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Attorney-General will have an opportunity to make that speech later.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member is just misleading the House. That is all he is doing. The facts are quite different from that, quite different.

Mr. MacDonald: I am giving the facts.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Those are not the facts.

Mr. MacDonald: Those are facts. They are right from the report. Mr. Speaker, would you please have the hon. Attorney-General sit down?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I should know more about the facts than the hon. member does. I happened to be in the position where they were given to me.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is generally accepted in the House that members can express their opinions. They can express their suspicions. They can request their colleagues to do certain things, or desist from doing other things. I would now ask the Attorney-General to be seated.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, Mr. Speaker, what relevance is there in the assertion that an order-in-council would have been immediately forthcoming if it had been asked for? The law demanded and stated clearly that it should be asked for, but it was not.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It was asked for.

Mr. MacDonald: It was not, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Attorney-General is talking in ignorance. The order-in-council was obtained 7 years later.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the hon. member would sit down for a few moments—

Mr. MacDonald: No. I am not going to sit down and let the hon. Attorney-General obstruct my presentation. I am not afraid of the truth. Go back and read the report. Perhaps, if the hon. Attorney-General knew something of what he was talking about, he would not be wasting so many words. He is jumping around like a bantam rooster with its head cut off.

Mr. Speaker, that surely is a point which the judge should have made emphatically, instead of lightly dismissing the oversight. However, how does his honour know that it would have been immediately forthcoming? Does the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council automatically provide orders-in-council to authorize sales even when there has been no advertisement, no tenders called, no independent appraisals made to protect the public interest?

If so, then the government would be guilty of loose administrative practices, as the report found the commission to be. Clearly, it would have been much better for the judge to have stuck to a presentation of the facts. Rather than wandering off into speculative opinions, perhaps he could have put them more clearly without the confusion of commentary and the hon. Attorney-General could have grasped them.

I give another example, Mr. Speaker: In commenting on the Niagara parks commission procedures in the sale, Judge Macdonell stated this:

It is, however, trite to say that a public body in selling land should generally advertise the land for sale and at least call for tenders. It is also useful to obtain independent valuations or list properties with regular real estate brokers. I think it is now conceded by all that at least some of these steps should have been taken even though in all probability they would not have affected the result.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be "trite" to say a public body should adopt one or other of these recognized procedures for protecting the public interest in selling land. But the fact of the matter is that all too many public bodies, including the Niagara parks commission, are not doing so. And this is the reason why we are getting into a lot of difficulty.

Usually, the excuse given is that no more money would have been secured in any case. But how can you tell whether any more money would have been secured unless you call tenders?

Here again, the Royal commissioner is making excuses instead of asserting in ringing tones what the recognized procedures should be and that they should be followed. All of which emphasizes the most disappointing aspect of this report. Judge Macdonell had an opportunity to do for a public body, such as the Niagara parks commission, what Judge Sweet did for municipalities: namely, to restate in vigorous and unmistakable terms some of the long-established but often breached rules of public administration.

In doing so, his report would have been a guiding light to those sitting on such bodies, to the government and to the public, helping to lead us back to a strict adherence to the acknowledged principles of public administration. Instead, Judge Macdonell chose to write a report which, insofar as the evidence would permit, made excuses for these violations and irregularities and rationalized the conduct of those involved.

One is forced, Mr. Speaker, to the conclusion that some public inquiries are established to clean up the situation, while others are established to cover it up insofar as the evidence will permit.

But even more shocking, Mr. Speaker, than Judge Macdonell's report is the comment of the hon. Prime Minister on the report. He immediately concluded from this political whitewash, and I am quoting now the hon. Prime Minister:

It is a complete vindication of Mr. Daley and the Niagara parks commission.

In contradiction of that statement, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the hon. Attorney-General who, obviously, has not read the report, the report made and implied the following criticisms of the Niagara parks commission:

First, with respect to the original purchase of the land from Broderick and its subsequent sale to Schmon, this is what it said:

It was illegal or at least irregular at the time it took place because no order-in-council was sought as the governing Act requires.

Second, with regard to the sales procedure:

It is trite to say that a public body in selling land should generally advertise the land for sale or at least call for tenders. It is usual to obtain independent valuations or list properties with a regular real estate broker.

None of these precautions were taken. And in testimony, some of the Niagara parks commissioners indicated clearly that they still will not believe that it is necessary.

I will give the hon. Minister of Labour credit. This is one lesson he learned, for he said they would never sell even a blade of grass without a tender from this point forward.

Third, the evidence is undisputed on the point that there was no recorded minute indicating the Niagara parks commission decision to sell the Broderick farm as "surplus." This was done by general agreement with no recorded minute in the book to authorize it.

Fourth, though Mr. Rollason, one of the commissioners, had been a real estate agent for Mr. Schmon since 1930, and had informed him of the availability of the Broderick farm, and though this same commissioner took part in the Niagara parks commission's discussions which led to the sale, Judge Macdonell states, and I am quoting:

Apparently no mention was made by him of his relationship with Mr. Schmon.

And his honour adds:

Unfortunately, Mr. Rollason is not alive to defend himself, but I think clearly his connection with Schmon should have been disclosed at the meeting.

In short, Mr. Speaker, the evidence indicates and the report, in part at least, documents that the Niagara parks commission operated as a little family compact, ignoring many of the standard rules and procedures in public administration. Indeed, the hon. Minister of Labour testified that, after the election of 1943, Prime Minister George Drew appointed him chairman of the Niagara parks commission and told him to go ahead and pick his commissioners. Mr. Speaker, he picked a circle of his own friends who have been operating as a family compact ever since.

The honesty of these men is not in question. But if honest men ignore the law and violate the acknowledged rules of conduct for those in positions of public trust, then dishonest men may pursue their ways with greater assurance that they can do it with impunity. And, surely, that is rather a fundamental fact that, apparently, a judge could not even recognize.

Furthermore, when Royal commissions minimize and Prime Ministers ignore such loose administrative practices, they add to the basic problem of developing a public determination to rectify the situation.

The hon. Prime Minister's self-satisfied reaction becomes even more astounding in view of the fact that during the hearings of the public accounts committee and later the committee on privileges and elections, during a legislative debate in fixing the terms of reference for the Royal commission, and again in personal correspondence that I had with him in the concluding days of the Royal commission hearing, the hon. Prime Minister absolutely refused to permit a full investigation of this issue.

Mr. Speaker, the question at issue is not simply, and it never was, that there was an appearance of merely conflict between the hon. Minister's private interests and public responsibilities. Rather, Mr. Speaker, it is a question that the appearance of potential conflict of interest had become a reality, through the use of Niagara parks commission full-time personnel on the Daley farm and the sale of Daley farm produce to the Niagara parks commission.

With reference to widening of the terms of reference in the investigation, Judge Macdonell made this significant comment at the hearings:

It might be a good idea if it were done here and now, but I have not been asked to.

The hon. Prime Minister deliberately fixed and maintained limited terms of reference so as to preclude the investigation of the very phase of the matter which would have proven conclusively not only the indiscretion, but the genuine conflict of interest, involved in the Daley farm.

I would like to remind this House that when the Royal commission was set up last April 11, as may be found on page 2584 of Hansard, the hon. member for Woodbine and I, after two vain efforts in committees of this Legislature to get an investigation of this park which would have proven conclusively the allegation, and when I raised it once again with the hon. Prime Minister and reiterated it repeatedly through some 2.5 pages of Hansard, the hon. Prime Minister made this comment, and I quote from Hansard, page 2584:

Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to look at that. As a matter of fact I have not given that consideration. It seemed to me that such a thing as that was really so nonsensical that it did not require the determination of either the House or the judge. But if it is a matter of serious import I am quite prepared to discuss it with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

That the hon. Prime Minister said it was nonsensical to suggest that we should investigate the reality of a conflict of interests, for the hon. Minister of Labour to use full-time personnel on his farm and selling produce of his farm to the Niagara parks commission — points which the CCF counsel sought to have brought before the Royal commission and was ready to bring witnesses to document—shows how determined he was not to broaden the terms of reference.

In fact, he wrote me a letter. I had written to him after the judge made the comment that it would be wise to look into it now, but he — the judge — had not been asked to. I got a reply dated May 23, from Lindsay. I want to quote a couple of paragraphs just to show how utterly incredible is the specious argument of the hon. Prime Minister in refusing to come to grips with this issue, and refusing a full investigation.

This is the relevant portion:

In my opinion, and I think that of all reasonable persons, it would be a travesty to inject into this important inquiry matters completely extraneous to the fundamental points to be considered.

Mr. Speaker, the fundamental point was the conflict of interests in the conduct of the hon. Minister of Labour, not only in buying the farm but also in the subsequent operation of the farm. Yet this is an "extraneous matter," said the hon. Prime Minister!

I commend to you a careful study of the reading of that statement which you have apparently not made,

he wrote sarcastically. I continue to read:

The whole purport of the same is that if the reference concerning the land transaction was not adequate, it would be made so. There is not the slightest suggestion that it is not completely adequate. I point out that the Minister, the House and the public are entitled to the determination of the charges you have made in connection with these land matters, without the injection of things which would not have the slightest thing to do with the matter under investigation.

That is really, Mr. Speaker, the most barefaced kind of evasion of a point all in a determined effort not to come to grips with the issue that should have been investigated. But he goes further; I am quoting again:

I point out that the matters to which you now refer would have been very properly the subject of an inquiry on the part of the public accounts committee, which was dealing with all things relating to the commission's methods of business, and the public accounts committee refused to investigate it.

Well, Mr. Speaker, both the public accounts committee and the committee on privileges and elections chose, rightly or wrongly, to refuse to investigate the whole issue. The hon. Prime Minister refused to extend the terms of reference in the House when the commission was set up; he refused because the hon. Prime Minister, I suspect, was fearful that if a full investigation were held, the charge that was made would have been documented so solidly that the judge would be bound to indicate that in his report.

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to digress for one moment to deal with another interesting aspect of this matter, and that is the role of the Liberals in this particular investigation.

When this matter was investigated by the committee of privileges and elections, a decision was made in which both of the Opposition parties insisted that, while there was no evidence of collusion, it was indiscreet for the hon. Minister to have bought land that was previously part of the parks commission under his chairmanship.

And when the hon. Prime Minister concluded a comment which I quoted a few moments ago, he said—as found on page 2584 of Hansard—that:

If it is a matter of serious import, I am quite prepared to discuss the matter with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

I have never yet figured out why the hon. leader of the Opposition did not take advantage of that invitation from the hon. Prime Minister, to get a full investigation, which would have vindicated the stand that he and the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) took, on the committee of privileges and elections.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Did the hon. member expect me to succeed where he failed?

Mr. MacDonald: He did not even attempt it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: How does the hon. member know that?

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell him. When we got down to the investigation, counsel for the Liberal party, the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) indicated that he had been instructed—I will not presume to guess from where—not to seek a broadening of the terms of reference. So, wittingly or unwittingly, I can never figure out on which basis the Liberals operate sometimes, they succeeded once again in working along with this government to preclude a full investigation to have proven the charges that have been made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I turn to that second Royal commission. I want to discuss it briefly, within the context of Professor Saywell's and Malcolm Robb's comments on the "impartiality" of a Royal commission.

I do not propose to discuss the contents of this report in detail. I will leave that to the hon. member for Woodbine who, I suggest, knows more about it than any other hon. member in this House.

For the moment, my chief concern is once again the hon. Prime Minister's statement made upon release of the report, and I am quoting the hon. Prime Minister:

The people of Ontario can have every reason for satisfaction in the standards of public life in this province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, no objective person could have followed those hearings without the deepest misgivings with regard to the standards of phases of our public life. Here we had a company, Dimensional Investments, dealing with millions of dollars, yet operating in the most slipshod and irregular fashion, violating The Corporations Act in its regulations almost at every turn.

Here we had a great public commission depositing $1.25 million of the people's money in escrow in a bank, thereby providing more than the downpayment for Dimensional even before the promotional company had completed the deal with the Crown acting for the Indians—indeed, enabling them to complete the deal.

Here we have the top officers of the property division of Hydro being the recipients of favours from men with whom they had done business and whom they had reason to expect were anxious to do further business with Hydro.

Here we had, Mr. Speaker, a conspiracy—to use the flat charge of the Liberal counsel, a distinguished jurist and lawyer, Mr. Kellock. Who was in the conspiracy and exactly what was its ultimate purpose certainly is not known now and we shall never know, for the glare of publicity wrecked the plans of the conspirators before they had completed it.

Here they have a company, Can-Tex by name, which was resurrected after being inoperative, obviously for the purpose of being the payoff company. Its secretary, James B. Trotter, was recommended by A. J. B. Gray. Payments were made by the secretary on the instructions of Mr. W. C. Clark, who was not an officer nor apparently a shareholder, but was one of those involved in the Dimensional deal from the outset.

On at least one occasion, the secretary paid Mr. Clark a large sum on Mr. Clark's own request, but only after clearing it with A. J. B. Gray. Clearly, the secretary of Can-Tex had permitted himself to become the innocent tool of the conspirators. When he found out that it was a hot political issue, he resigned.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, when I charged that there was a juicy deal involved, including contributions to the Tory election chest, nobody can or has yet proven that this is not the case and that statement applies to Judge McGillivray in his report.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): The hon. member has not proved anything on that.

Mr. MacDonald: You are right, but you have not proven that it is not, nor has the judge. I will give you a way to prove it. I issue to you once again an invitation that I have issued many times. That is, just let the Tory party, instead of saying that they do not get contributions from Dimensional, or the bank or the highway contractors, open up its election accounts to the public audit so the public will know. Until the hon. member is willing to do that, he will just have to sit and be quiet, because we will continue to suggest to the public for its enlightenment, where the Tory party is getting its funds.

Mr. E. Sandercock (Hastings West): Where is the hon. member getting his?

Mr. MacDonald: It is public knowledge. Through a public account audited and available to everybody who wants to look at it.

The judge was obviously reluctant to investigate the case fully. This is a point, Mr.

Speaker, that I think we should as a House note carefully. The judge was reluctant to investigate the Sarnia land deal fully.

On one occasion, a stated case had to be taken to the court of appeal of Ontario where the decision of the commissioner not to receive evidence was overruled even by his own regular colleagues on the bench.

In fact, he had to be threatened a second time with taking the stated case before the court of appeals before he would proceed with another phase of the investigation, which, eventually, turned up evidence on the existence of the payoff company, Can-Tex.

Finally, after only the most persistent efforts on the part of the Opposition party's counsel, whose presence at the hearing was deplored by the hon. Prime Minister as unprecedented and irregular, did the commissioner unearth some of the conspiracy.

Mr. Speaker, just as an aside, may I say that if the Opposition party had not had counsel at the hearings we would have had an even bigger whitewash.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Send it to the Legislature.

Mr. MacDonald: Moreover, that part of the conspiracy revealed that A. J. B. Gray had a signed agreement to receive $215,000 in addition to another agreement for a commission of $60,000. For whom was this, may I ask hon. members of this Legislature? Does anyone for a moment think that all this money was for Mr. Gray himself, for his rather vague and rather limited contribution to the whole venture?

How much of that money, once it had been paid, was going to find its way to Can-Tex for unspecified individuals or political parties? I cannot say. Judge McGillivray cannot say. The hon. Prime Minister cannot say. The case is not proven, because the conspiracy was nipped in the bud, Mr. Speaker, because of the glare of the publicity shed upon the operations of Dimensional from the time I raised this issue in the election.

Mr. Speaker, A. J. B. Gray first denied the existence of any agreement. So, when the agreement finally came before the commission, the senior Metro officer revealed himself to have committed perjury in the most blatant fashion.

But the judge merely described Mr. Gray's evidence in his report as "lacking in candour." Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is the understatement of the century.

Now if in view of all this sorry mess, the hon. Prime Minister can assert, for his own propaganda and political purposes, that Ontario has every reason for satisfaction in its standards of public life, then all I can say is that I firmly disagree.

In view of the highly political nature of these reports, the proposal of the hon. Prime Minister that I should resign because my charges are supposedly without validity is patently obvious as a propaganda move. I have no intention of resigning.

When I stood for re-election in York South in the last election, my role in exposing the whole pipe-line scandal, which had brought 3 cabinet resignations, was well known. Despite the personal intervention of the hon. Prime Minister, my majority was greatly increased—just as the intervention of the hon. Prime Minister was rebuffed by the electors in the two ridings where he sought to have two cabinet ministers re-elected.

This is the mandate that I am operating on, and no cheap political challenge from the hon. Prime Minister or anybody else for me to resign is going to deter me in attempting to have the government live up to some of the basic principles of public life and see that others coming under their jurisdiction do so too.

Which brings me to the final phase of my remarks—concerning those who come under the jurisdiction of this province—the municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, in the last year we have had 4 reports following investigations presented to this House. Reports have been made concerning the situation in Belleville and York township, in Arnprior and Eastview.

Now some people have argued, Mr. Speaker, that it is unfair to pick on these particular municipalities and to expose them to the glare of publicity and the embarrassment and the expense and everything else that comes with this kind of an investigation.

Now I think there is some validity in this contention. I have heard it many times out in my own township, York township. There is some validity in it for this reason: It is widely asserted by editorial writers and others that some of the things that were unearthed in the investigations in these particular municipalities are going on in other municipalities, in greater or less degree. In other words, the disease is not confined to any one particular place.

I do not think a conclusion should be drawn from that that there should not have been investigations in these particular areas despite the embarrassment it has created. I do not think it condones what was revealed. But I think, Mr. Speaker, it surely does place a very serious obligation upon us as members of this Legislature to consider what should be done so that this disease can be contained—indeed that it might even be cured.

The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is this. There is a consistency in the pattern of the reports following these various investigations. In Belleville, for example, the whole trouble emerged from some say well intentioned efforts to finance a world hockey team through the back door of city hall. The only thing wrong is that they were violating regulations and laws in the process and they got themselves into difficulties. But it was a failure to live up to the law and the regulations.

In York township, Judge Sweet makes this comment in summation; that there were "flagrant and continued infractions of bylaws."

In Arnprior, the commissioners made this comment:

"A whole mêlée of illegalities and irregularities."

Now as for Eastview, Mr. Speaker, the situation defies description.

When I was reading through my copy of the Eastview report I made a practice, for my own later guidance, of writing illegal or irregular on the side of the page each time something of that nature turned up. The report is just punctuated with notations. There is hardly a page on which there is not the recording of some illegality or irregularity.

Mr. Speaker, I think we have to be realistic here. I am not going to attempt today to deal with what I think we have to come to grips with later—perhaps in the estimates of the hon. Minister if he does not bring in amendments to The Municipal Act—that is specific changes in The Municipal Act, that are required. But in giving consideration to this, without getting into the details, I think we had better be realistic. No doubt, in municipalities which are operated by people who offer their public service, but are amateurs as public servants, mistakes will always be made. They learn only after they get into office, so there are going to be some unwitting violations of the law out of ignorance of the law.

These are not the most serious problems. It becomes serious if the unwitting violations of the law become compounded by sloppy administration—the kind of thing we found at Eastview.

There are other kinds of violations which this House must look at carefully. These are violations that arise from the fact that the laws get out of date, because of changing conditions in the society in which we were living. A bylaw may have been in the statute books in the municipalities or on the statutes of the province of Ontario for so long that it needs to be brought up to date. Until it is, the people who are administering the affairs are going to be in partial or complete violation of that bylaw.

A lesson that emerges from this is that we have to institute some sort of procedure for regular review of bylaws in municipalities and, of course, in this House.

Sometime, I trust we will get around to a serious revision of The Municipal Act, which is about as out of date as a hoop skirt.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is a third kind of violation, and this is our real problem—violation of the law which is wilful and deliberate. For example, in the instance of York township, Judge Sweet says with regard to the reeve's purchase of property upon which he subsequently built his home that this was calculated and deliberate. He went to the solicitor of the township and asked whether he could buy the property and the solicitor said no. So then he purchased it through a nominee whom he had buy it for him as the first step.

Judge Sweet goes on to point to deliberate actions in land sales. This quotation is significant for other reasons that are obvious:

Whether or not the township received an adequate price for the land is not of the greatest importance in the matter. Whether or not there was a financial loss to the municipality is not the fact which is of the greatest significance in this situation. What is of the greatest importance and significance, and what is deplorable, is that there appears to have been an attempt to avoid the law. That attempt appears to have been studied and planned.

If we turn to Arnprior, we have revealed in the reports that the council deliberately asked the municipal board for authorization to sell debentures for certain public works when they knew that they must seek that approval before they had done these public works and when, in fact, the public works had been completed some months before they made their application to the municipal board.

In this instance, beyond any shadow of doubt, there was a deliberate deceiving of the municipal board.

What is the result? Certain of the citizens took action in court and had the decisions of the municipal board quashed. Related to this is another little episode in the Arnprior report of which I think the House should take notice, because I think this is the background of some decisions that we must make. Let me read a paragraph from page 16 of the report:

It also appears from our inquiry that at the time Messrs. Mulvihill and Greene were solicitors for the company, they were also solicitors for at least some of the purchasers of homes from the company, and we have been provided with a copy of their certificate as to the title in respect to the purchase made by Sargeant James McCormick. It seems to us that we are not concerned too greatly with the propriety of the actions of these solicitors in this respect, as it has very little, if any, relationship to the affairs of the municipality. It is properly a matter for the law society, if any individual wishes to complain to that law society or if the law society wishes to act on its own motion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that quotation does not provide the full story, namely that Mulvihill and Greene were the solicitors for the subdivision company that created all this difficulty. One of them was sitting on the council when the other made the initial representations to the council to get the agreement for this subdivision. Before the agreement was completed both of them were sitting in the council.

In their private capacity as solicitors, they drew up the agreement. In their public capacity as councillors, they voted on the agreement. There was one conflict of interest.

But that was not bad enough. Before the whole deal was over, these same two solicitors were acting not only for the subdivision company, but they were acting for prospective home owners who were going to buy houses from the subdivision company. And in the course of concluding the agreements for the home owners, they did not inform the home owners of their full financial obligations, namely, the fact that the subdivision company was going to be relieved of its obligation to pay for the sewers and the streets and that they, the home owners, were going to have to shoulder the cost as a local improvement.

As the commissioners state, Mr. Speaker, it is properly a matter for the law society if any individual wishes to complain to that law society, or if the society wishes to act on its own motion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask this question. I have no idea, and I shall look forward with interest in this House to anybody who has an idea, as to how we are going to stop this kind of thing if people who deliberately violate the law can do it with impunity, or if people deliberately violate their professional ethics and do it with impunity.

What puzzles me is that when this government has investigated and received, in a report, the reminder that it is the right of any individual or the law society on its own motion to have acted in the instance of Mulvihill and Greene, I am just a little bit curious as to why some action has not taken place.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is my understanding—and I get this secondhand—that those gentlemen were before the law society committee and that they were completely exonerated before it.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): That is correct. Now I suppose the whole law society is wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have two comments to make on this. If they were before the law society, I think it would have been only right and proper—since they had been brought under a shadow in this report—there should have been some publicity to indicate that the shadow had lifted. I certainly do not recall any publicity with regard to the law society's consideration of it.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think I can say now positively that is the case because my friend the deputy is in the wings and he has indicated to me that what I said is correct.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the other comment that I want to make, and I shall leave it there for the moment, is that if the commissioner's report is accurate, not only did these lawyers have a conflict of interest in being the private solicitors for the subdivision company and voting on it as councillors, but they subsequently acted as solicitors for both the subdivision company and the people buying homes.

I just cannot understand how they were exonerated, because these facts are set forth by the commissioners, and these facts constitute a serious conflict of interests to the point of a violation of their professional ethics.

May I ask the hon. Attorney-General, is there a written report as to the reasons of the law society, and is it available?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I cannot answer at the moment about any written report. But I can say that, as Mr. Tolman is a member, and on the information which he has indicated to me, these people were definitely before the committee and were exonerated.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, all I would say is that, having brought these people under a cloud by a government report which, presumably, is now inaccurate, I think it is the obligation of this government to clear the names of those men by a public explanation in this House.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the hon. Minister from that area were here, the hon. member would get it on the floor of the House right now; but he is not. He knows the story pretty well.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I now get to, in general terms, the answer to this problem. How are we going to come to grips with it? How are we going to solve it?

We cannot make the excuse that the violation was committed with good intentions—as, for example, in the violation of rules and regulations to finance a world championship hockey team in Belleville. Some people down in Belleville argue, and I think even the hon. Attorney-General came close to arguing this on one occasion—that it was a great achievement and that Belleville, perhaps, got more publicity for the money spent on the team than if they had spent this money on public relations.

But, if the conclusion is drawn that it is all right to violate laws because the intent and the result are good, surely this is a rather dangerous proposition.

I think I can illustrate the kind of problem we have, and the sorting out in our thinking that has to take place, by a specific case that I noted in a Canadian Press dispatch of August 31. It is datelined Sherbrooke, Quebec, and it reads as follows:

Mr. Justice William Mitchell of the Quebec superior court today ordered Joseph Loubier, mayor of Compton township, removed from office and barred from holding office for 5 years for the violation of The Court Practices Act. Justice Mitchell made the ruling after the mayor was convicted of accepting $50 as interest on the $1,000 he loaned to his own municipality.

I think this is a good illustration, Mr. Speaker. It is a good case to take a look at, because I suspect the reaction of the average person is: What is wrong with a mayor loaning $1,000 to his own municipality? Was it not even commendable?

Mr. Speaker, the only thing wrong with it is that it is illegal, and this is our problem.

If government, including this one, if muniicipalities, make an excuse for the violation of the law because the violation is achieving something which is commendable, I suggest that we are opening the door to very serious trouble.

I will not only suggest it; I will state it in terms which I think are noble.

Faced with the conclusive evidence of irregularities in York township, Judge Sweet asserted, in ringing terms:

The disregard by a law-making body for its own laws can only be expected ultimately to result in general disrespect for the law.

And his honour went on:

Illegality is an evil thing; it spreads and it contaminates. Where there is an evil illegality in the administration of a municipality, the public welfare is indeed imperilled.

What a striking contrast to listen to the hon. Prime Minister get up and make excuses for the revealed illegalities and irregularities of the Niagara parks commission, and Eastview, instead of proclaiming the law in those urging terms.

Mr. Speaker, these are not just noble words that Judge Sweet has written. They are a clarion call to return to some of the first principles of public life. And one of the main obstacles in getting back to some of these first principles is this government and its attitude.

I have suggested, if we are going to be able to stop this kind of thing, that penalties must be fixed for people who wilfully violate the law. If they are going to violate the law and get away with it, they will continue their violation. They will have an open invitation to continue it.

This brings us, Mr. Speaker, to the problem involved and that is the whole attitude of this government. I think it is well for us to take cognizance of the fact that everybody—and when I say everybody I am speaking of the normal range of editorial spokesmen—is very shocked at the attitude of this government towards this matter; everybody, I should say, except the Tories in the party machine.

Here is a quotation from the Toronto Telegram of May 7, 1960, the first paragraph of which reads as follows:

The inertia of the Ontario government towards the York township scandal is almost as monumental as Judge Sweet's report on it.

I have here a quotation from the Toronto Daily Star of September 20, 1960, which refers to another aspect of the question. It says this with obvious validity:

Yet good government in Ontario municipalities should not have to depend on such capricious and convoluted legal exercises. It should not be necessary for a group of citizens to undertake expensive and lengthy court action with uncertain prospects of success to secure the removal of a municipal official whose flagrant misconduct has been clear beyond doubt in a report brought down by this government.

But I can go to an even safer paper to quote to this government, and that is the Toronto Globe and Mail. In their issue of May 24, 1960, they make this comment:

The provincial government is supposed to supervise and guide municipal government and it has wide powers for this purpose.

Where were all those authorities with all their supervisory powers and duties when York township began to slide into chaos? Why did they not discover what was going on years ago?

And then the Globe and Mail concludes with this final observation:

This prompts a disturbing thought. If Queen's Park did not know and did not care about York township, what does it know or care about any other municipality?

However, Mr. Speaker, if hon. members want to have what seems to me the most impressive proof of this government's willy-nilly approach to this problem, may I remind the House of a debate on April 6, 1960, when we were discussing the question of the Belleville inquiry? The hon. Minister had indicated that he sent two letters to Belleville, drawing attention to the fact that they were not living up to the rules and regulations.

He did not even get an answer to his second letter; they ignored it.

What was the hon. Minister's reaction? Rather pathetically, he got up in the House and said: "But I ask in all fairness, having warned them twice, what are we supposed to do?"

Is it not just a little bit ludicrous? These were provincial laws that are being violated.

Here is our problem. The hon. leader of the Opposition has called upon the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs to resign. I have not called on the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs in this instance to resign. And I have not done so for a specific and, I think, valid reason. For the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is obviously implementing government policy. When a Minister is guilty of incompetence and neglect in the administration within his own department, as I believe the hon. Minister of Labour was at the time of the Hogg's Hollow disaster last spring, I think it is legitimate to say that this Minister should resign. But the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs was clearly operating in accordance with the laid-down policy of this government.

If there was any doubt, the hon. Prime Minister cleared it up a little bit earlier in this debate when he reiterated his whole approach. But we have known it for some months now, because the hon. Prime Minister spoke in Cornwall last summer. There he enunciated a theory. It is a theory behind which this government is now taking refuge, namely, the autonomy of the municipalities.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I, like everyone else, would like to see the greatest possible degree of autonomy on the part of the municipalities. But let us face reality. Municipalities are creatures of the province. We add to their powers and we take away from their powers every time this Legislature sits. Their budgets come under the supervision, the veto and the direction of this government, all the time.

In face of that reality I think it is once again a little ludicrous to suggest that municipalities are autonomous to the point that the government cannot intervene when they have clear-cut violations of their own laws as well as municipal bylaws. If this government were consistent, as the hon. Prime Minister demanded the Liberals should be, why did they block fluoridation in certain municipalities after they had secured a favourable plebiscite?

How autonomous were they when this government had finished? "You cannot do it," the government decreed. The big stick was wielded at Queen's Park. "You may have a democratic decision on behalf of your voters back home, where you are masters. But oh no, your voters are not the people who are running the show. We are running the show from Queen's Park."

This was the action of this government in violating municipal autonomy in another context. Yet now they take refuge behind this plea for municipal autonomy.

Mr. Speaker, in this context the plea for provincial autonomy is an invitation for a continued violation of the law. It will result in continued violation of the laws, because of another theory which was advanced by the hon. Prime Minister a couple of days ago in this House. He advanced the theory that if the law is violated, but those who violate it are subsequently endorsed by the people at an election, then presumably the violation of the law is condoned, and we do not need to worry about it any more.

This was the implication of the fantastic argument the hon. Prime Minister presented in this House the day before yesterday. Now it is not new. In the last election the hon. Prime Minister went across the province of Ontario saying: These certain nasty people had charged his government with a highway scandal back in 1954, but there was no highway scandal. Why? Because the Tories were re-elected back in 1955.

That wiped out the highway scandal, even though there had been convictions and certain corporations were fined $10,000 or $15,000. In addition, a lot of little people were put in jail for 6 months.

Now we have this sort of an argument again, because, in the statement of the hon. Prime Minister in the House earlier this week he expressed the hope between the lines, so to speak, that the mayor of Eastview would be re-elected next Monday and then the whole problem would be solved.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that, on the contrary, if the mayor of Eastview is re-elected next Monday, our problem is all the greater in this Legislature. For we shall have not only a mayor of Eastview, but, as a member of this Legislature, a man whose administrative record is replete with calculated violations of the law. The approach of the hon. Prime Minister is if he is re-elected then these violations have been condoned and excused by the people.

That is why I said that the approach of this government is an open invitation to the perpetuation and the widening of the scope of those violations. Consider what the report reveals, Mr. Speaker.

First, that land sales were made without appraisals or tenders, many of them to members of a little family compact of relatives and friends of the councillors and officials of the town. Secondly, that the mayor was a sleeping partner in a firm called Garcharls, securing favours from the town and personally authorizing services to be installed by the town for the company without the council's approval.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Is the hon. member making a charge? Surely he can give them notice before he makes it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the ignorance of the hon. Attorney-General as to what is in these reports is colossal, it is monumental. For his information I am quoting from page 32 of the report.

Third, securing an illegal pay boost under the guise of payments out of a distinguished visitors' fund. This, Mr. Speaker, with the mayor drawing $1,600 of the $3,200 allotment—and he drew it in a cheque the day before the council even authorized it.

Fourth, the mayor persuading the auditor to juggle the revenue figures for 1955 and 1956 so as to make a better revenue picture for the year 1955; to be found on page 47.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member, by reading this, is making a charge against a fellow hon. member of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am quoting from the report which was tabled. How fatuous can the hon. Attorney-General get?

Next, the protection and the retention of an incompetent treasurer despite repeated protests from the auditor—to be found on pages 67 and 68.

Sixth, the mayor's instruction to the treasurer to issue a cheque to the separate school board in excess of the amount to which it was entitled. This is after the treasurer had indicated that it was in excess—he said, go ahead and issue the cheque. Pages 68 and 69.

Seventh, insurance payments authorized by the mayor months in advance of their due date—on page 54.

Eighth, council relying on the mayor who knowingly authorized bank borrowings beyond legal limit. And on page 58 we find testimony from the treasurer herself to the effect that the mayor knew they were beyond the legal limit.

And finally, Mr. Speaker—and this I invite for the examination of the hon. Attorney-General—the testimony of William Bolton, departmental auditor, that the mayor and treasurer had sought to have him not report shortages of funds if the money were secretly replaced, to be found in the transcript—it is not contained in the report, for reasons that do not appear to me to be valid—on page 712 for July 22.

Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that when the hon. Attorney-General looks into it he examine section 408(2) of the criminal code as to whether or not this action did not constitute a conspiracy under common law to deceive a government department.

Now in face of all this, Mr. Speaker, the mayor is quoted in the press as saying that the report is "not that bad after all."

And the hon. Prime Minister has already told the House, in effect, that if the mayor is re-elected the problem is resolved, because the people will have spoken.

There is an old cynical thesis that violation of the law is excusable if you do not get caught, and this government has now given it a new and more cynical twist. Violations of the law are excusable, in fact they are even wiped out, if you can just win the next election.

The moral foundations, Mr. Speaker, upon which democracy is built—that mutual trust between the citizen and the elected representative based on respect for the law—have been seriously undermined by the revelations in these municipal scandals. These reports belie the parrot-like repetition of the claim by the hon. Prime Minister that the standards of public life are high and beyond criticism.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker—and this is the saddest aspect of the whole thing which I add more in sorrow than in anger—I see little prospect of correcting the situation unless and until the government is willing to tackle the situation vigorously, instead of evading its responsibilities; unless and until the government forsakes the law of Killaloe, enunciated by the hon. Prime Minister in this House during the last session, namely, that the head of a government, whether it be provincial or municipal, can twist the traditional principles upon which our public life is built or alter the laws to suit his own interests and convenience.

This government has refused to clear up scandals in its own midst. At least I will have to give it credit for consistency; because now it is refusing to clean up scandals which have been revealed in some of its creatures, the municipalities.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. R. Gisborn—I know this will please hon. members—that the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor now before the House be amended:

(a) By adding to clause 4 thereof the following words: “and the fact that it has actually added to those problems by wielding the big stick of its arbitrary powers under Bill No. 86 of 1960,” so that the clause as amended will read as follows:

“(4) Regrets the government’s failure to cope with the many problems of serious concern to Ontario farmers, and the fact that it has actually added to those problems by wielding the big stick of its arbitrary powers under Bill No. 86 of 1960”;

(b) By adding to clause 5 thereof the following words: “operated by a government agency,” so that the clause as amended will read as follows:

“(5) Regrets the government’s failure to introduce a comprehensive medical care insurance plan operated by a government agency”;

(c) By adding thereto the following clauses:

“(6) Regrets the government’s bland complacency in the present unemployment crisis, as demonstrated by its failure to announce any intention to submit to this House supplementary estimates to meet such urgent needs as immediate large-scale public housing and stimulation of consumer purchasing through increased unemployment and welfare benefits; and

“(7) Regrets the government’s failure to present comprehensive and co-ordinated plans of economic and social development so as to ensure a continuous and steady rate of growth and prevent unemployment crises in the future.”

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, with respect to business for tomorrow as was indicated by the hon. Prime Minister a few days ago, it is the intention of the government for a period in the morning after 10.30 to deal with business in the private members’ field, and notice of motion No. 2 in the name of Mr. T. D. Thomas will be called and the House can proceed there for a time, and then, perhaps, there will be some bills advanced and the Throne debate.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1960

10.30 O'CLOCK, A.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petition was brought up, laid on the table, read and received:

Of the corporation of the city of Toronto asking for an addition to the bill, validating the action of the returning officers for the municipal elections, for the years 1961 and 1962, made necessary by the death of a candidate for the office of controller.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports by committees.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the interim report of the select committee appointed to examine the administrative and executive problems of government.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to speak on this report at this time other than to say that a copy of the report will be on the desk of each hon. member in a few moments. It will be released to the press in a short statement by way of press release and will be available shortly. Of course it will be debated in due course when called. I would move, Mr. Speaker, that it be placed on the order paper for further consideration.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Before the orders of the day, I would remind the House that I was asked a question yesterday by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter). The question was: Is it true that casual employees of The Department of Lands and Forests had their pay reduced without prior notice by the civil service commission because of the holiday observed November 11?

The answer, Mr. Speaker is: All employees who are on full-time jobs are now being paid on a monthly rate, and will of course receive payment for holidays. Seasonal or intermittent employees on an hourly or daily rate are paid only for the time they work. They are not paid for holidays, but on termination of employment receive vacation pay calculated at 2 per cent of their earnings over their period of employment.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): I wonder if the hon. Minister would permit a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Certainly.

Mr. Trotter: I understand that you have been paying, up until recently, the casual help for such holidays as November 11. What I find difficult to understand is that suddenly this money was stopped.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Speaker, the only suggestion I can make to the hon. member is that if he would give me an actual incident, I would be pleased to look into it.

Mr. Trotter: As early as I can, Mr. Speaker, I will.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I can only repeat what I said a moment ago; that seasonal or intermittent employees are not paid for statutory holidays. I think it is quite obvious they cannot be. If the hon. member has an actual instance involving people on our payroll, I will be glad to look into it and give him more information.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can. Instead of using names in public I will attend privately and explain.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I think it may be more convenient if the hon. member would see me privately. I am sure we can discuss it and give him the information he desires.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to you, sir, but first I would like to apologize to you for not giving you notice of the question. I wondered if you could tell us when the journal of proceedings of the last session of the Legislature is likely to be completed and presented to the hon. members?

Mr. Speaker: I am informed as soon as they come from the printer. The printing was delayed by the printing of the revised statutes.

Mr. Thomas: Thank you.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. Attorney-General arising out of a document I received in this morning's mail. I was able to communicate with the hon. Attorney-General just before the House opened.

I think there will be no problem as far as the hon. Attorney-General is concerned in the answer. This document comes from Mr. J. P. Nelligan, counsel for the citizens' league in Eastview. Among many other things, the document states that a request has been made to the hon. Attorney-General's department to carry out such police investigations and to lay such charges as the situation warrants with regard to the shortage of funds in Eastview.

Has the hon. Attorney-General taken any action on this request or does he intend to?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, a letter was received from the firm of MacIlwraith and MacIlwraith and I believe that Mr. Nelligan is a member of that firm. It was seen by me yesterday and is getting the attention that all letters that come to me would get and action, if any is indicated, will be taken.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Before the orders of the day, I would direct a question to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass), notice of which has been given to him.

I will read the question. I am advised that a meeting was held at the Pigeon River hotel at Pigeon River, Ontario, on Tuesday, November 22, attended by 7 officials of the Ontario Department of Highways, 5 officials of the state of Minnesota Highways Department and certain officials of the government of Canada and the government of the United States.

From that meeting, it is reported that it is the intention of the governments concerned to construct a new bridge at Pigeon River, together with the building of a new right-of-way on either side of the international border. My question is in 3 parts:

1. Is it the intention of this government to participate in this programme during the year 1961?

2. If and when the joint project is undertaken, what provision will be made to protect the interests of Ontario persons holding non-government properties?

3. Is it the intention of the hon. Minister to expropriate necessary lands on the Ontario side of the border for (1) highway right-of-way; (2) Ontario park, commercial and residential purposes?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I might say with respect to the first question, the answer is yes.

With respect to the second question, the provision which will be made to protect the interests of Ontario persons holding non-government properties at the present area of the bridge will be similar to that taken by this government and this department in other parts of Ontario to ensure that the right interests of citizens of this province are dealt with in a fair manner financially and in every other way. I cannot at the moment, Mr. Speaker, tell the hon. member what the manner of dealing with this problem in this particular case would be, because to do that might prejudice the rights of those with whom we have to deal.

With respect to question 3, the first part of it, the answer is yes; to the second part, the answer is that negotiations presently are underway between The Department of Highways and The Department of Lands and Forests to see if we could not have some park lands in that area. If so, I am sure it will be done by expropriation. There is no intention to expropriate for commercial or residential purposes.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted a supplementary question?

Is the hon. Minister aware that a solicitor by the name of Mr. Johnson, who has an office—there may be others elsewhere—in Grand Marais in Minnesota, has for several years—I have a list if the hon. Minister would like to have it—been purchasing lands on the Ontario side of the border in anticipation of the Minnesota authorities concluding an agreement. The purchase of this land was made very cheaply indeed. I have all the prices available and, if even normal prices are paid without expropriation, this man stands to reap a fortune on sale of land for highways, parks or for residential purposes.

Is the hon. Minister aware that this has been going on?

Hon. Mr. Cass: Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware of the situation outlined by the hon. member for Kenora. It is a very unsatisfactory situation insofar as this government and The Department of Highways are concerned. But I can assure the hon. member that the price which will be paid by the department to the man by the name of Johnson referred to by him for property required by us will be that set by the proper arbitration courts or courts of law in this province. If he is entitled to a profit in the view of those tribunals, he will receive it. Otherwise, he will be receiving what is a fair price.

I might also say, Mr. Speaker, that the same Mr. Johnson has also acquired large tracts of land on the American side where this bridge will go, and the people in the Minnesota State Department are having similar difficulties, but, I believe, are dealing with it in a manner somewhat similar to that adopted by us.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to bring the attention of the House to an honour which has come to Oxford and to Ontario and Canada as a whole. I read from the London Free Press a headline:

AREA BULL CHAMPION AT CHICAGO

An animal owned by Rosedale farm and Mr. Stewart, of Thamesville, was declared grand champion Holstein bull at the 61st international dairy show in Chicago yesterday.

An hon. member: Very good.

Mr. Innes: I want to congratulate the owners of that particular animal in bringing that honour to Ontario.

An hon. member: That is a lot of bull.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

RESOLUTION RE CONSUMERS' BUREAU

Clerk of the House: Notice of motion No. 2, made by Mr. T. D. Thomas:

RESOLUTION:

That the Legislature recommends that the government give consideration to the establishment of a consumers' bureau that will co-operate with existing consumer organizations and research agencies; provide field information services to assist in the development of consumer organizations; conduct research into and make public independent, expert information on the quality of products placed on the market in Ontario; have authority to investigate advertising practices and, where necessary, prevent fraudulent and misleading advertising; exert constant pressure for the enforcement of federal laws governing food and drugs; and conduct continuing research into price spreads and recommend appropriate action to reduce unreasonable spread.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in presenting this resolution for discussion and debate, I would like to say I believe a consumers' bureau is absolutely necessary if our people are to be protected from some of the sharp practices of today, particularly in the form of advertising.

Many persons today are being hoodwinked, cajoled and encouraged to buy products they cannot afford because of price reductions which supposedly make goods available for sale at bargain prices.

Every item, Mr. Speaker, from the second-hand automobile to the cheapest watch is guaranteed. But, if anything goes wrong, if the buyer is dissatisfied, or if the product has been wrongly advertised, the only recourse is to the law. Many persons have no wish, and certainly not the means, to do this. Therefore, these overadvertised and fictitiously underpriced products are still allowed to be sold over the counter.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the reputable merchant is disturbed because of the fictitious advertising today and would readily co-operate with an agency such as a consumers' bureau. The consumer today is confused by slogans and packaging displays in the great chain stores.

Also, I think such a bureau is necessary to protect the primary producer and the ultimate consumer. On all sides we hear complaints from the producers. They are at the mercy of the distributors, the packing houses and large chain stores. The agencies, of course, buy their products in the cheapest market and sell and distribute them at a price which they dictate.

The late J. S. McLean of Canada Packers put it bluntly when he stated that their policy is to buy as cheaply as they can from the farmers and sell to the consumers for the highest price they can get.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, it is to gouge out of the consuming public all the traffic will bear.

During the past two years, sir, Mr. Pierre Berton of the Toronto Daily Star has unearthed evidence of most disreputable practices of fraud and misrepresentation in the sale of real estate, electrical appliances and a host of other things. The practice of selling correspondence courses, free trial dancing lessons, and water softeners is certainly fooling many people. It is most unfortunate that few people read the fine print in the terms of agreement.

Recent congressional investigations in the United States show that fraud is widespread in the massive $2.5 billion drug business with the help of the mass media of television. This may have some effect on the Canadian industry. Most diet, weight-reducing preparations are branded by the American medical association as, and I quote, "One of the biggest medical frauds of the age."

One can continue for some length regarding the illegal practices of the disreputable merchant. In this era of the acquisition of the quick dollar, there are some in the distributing business who are not concerned with ethics, but only in getting rich quick. I am sure the many merchants and distributors who are interested in giving our people a square deal would welcome the establishment of a consumers' bureau to investigate and to give protection not only to the consumer, but also to the reputable people engaged in the distributing agencies.

I want to bring to the attention of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), the operation of one agency working in Oshawa and vicinity. They are selling electrical devices for fire detection to be installed in private homes. Their prices seem to be so fantastic it hardly seems possible that the public could be hoodwinked by their sales methods. But on top of this, they are using the names of reputable people in the public life of our province. I would like to quote from a letter I received from a lady only yesterday who had purchased such an alarm system from this Toronto agency. The hon. Attorney-General may have this letter when I have finished my quotation.

The letter reads:

Their tactics of selling are very misleading. They use every trick in the bag to persuade you to buy. They claim it is backed 100 per cent by the better business bureau and all fire marshals in Ontario.

They are using the name of a highly esteemed and respected citizen of the city which I represent, Col. R. S. McLaughlin, saying he has given his approval of it. They use the names of other respected gentlemen in the province of Ontario: the hon. Attorney-General, Mr. Kelso Roberts, Rt. hon. Vincent Massey, many doctors and "friends"—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I take it my hon. friend will see that I have that material on my desk—

Mr. Thomas: —I mentioned that I would let the hon. Minister have it.

The agency says that a bylaw exists in most municipalities which makes it compulsory to install this device in all new homes, and it is included in the mortgage. Many statistics are given as to how many lives are lost in fires because people have not been warned in time. Misrepresentation and undue influence and fraud exist very plainly. People are being victimized everywhere and I am mainly concerned with people who definitely cannot afford but are railroaded into this very dubious business because their signatures have been affixed to a contract they did not really want.

For example: The salesman was in one home from 3 o'clock in the afternoon till 9 o'clock one evening and again until 2.30 o'clock in the morning. These people have so much in the home already they cannot cope with it. Yet their resistance was broken down by constant pressure from the salesman to sign an agreement which they did not understand and commit themselves to future payments to his company which they could ill afford. I will ask the hon. Attorney-General to investigate this matter. I submit this resolution for the consideration of the House. It is one I think beneficial and helpful in protecting people in Ontario from the many fraudulent claims made today by certain enterprises.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Oshawa a seconder on this motion? Is it the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald)?

Mr. Thomas: Yes.

Mr. I. Haskett (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, on reading this resolution, one wonders what its purpose is and just what would be the results if it were implemented.

A casual reading might find one in qualified agreement with part of it, but with a more careful reading, I think we would find ourselves in unqualified disagreement with much of it.

Down through the ages, the cry caveat emptor has echoed through the market place. It is not money that is the trouble. It is, I think, as the good book says, that love of money is the root of evil. Down through the centuries, laws have been enacted to curb the greed for gold and yet we have those who will endeavour to short change their neighbours, to overreach in trade, to give less than an honest day's work or try to find loopholes in the law by which its purposes may be circumvented.

Consumers' organizations, business and government, are all interested in working for the reduction of misrepresentation in advertising and unfair trade practices. But the task is a continuous one, involved and difficult.

Consumers' organizations, toward which the resolution seems chiefly directed, do fill a useful purpose, and the government of this province recognizes that and makes a grant to the Canadian association of consumers. The information branch of The Department of Agriculture puts out a great deal of useful information for the benefit of consumers.

At the Ontario agricultural college the research programme, costing perhaps as much as $2 million a year, is working continually to improve crops, farm produce and food products for the ultimate benefit of the consumer—and I suppose the women's institute often functions as a consumers' organization.

Surely some of the work of the $700,000-a-year programme of the Ontario research foundation goes out to the end benefit of the consumer in this province. A great deal of consumer information is put out by the federal government and their Department of Agriculture consumers' branch, Department of Fisheries, and Department of National Health and Welfare.

I mention these in passing, that we may realize the substantial amount of help the governments are giving in these useful and practical ways to help, to educate and to protect the consumer.

But as I read this resolution and realize its full implications, sir, I find that it has as many outreaches as an octopus—and some more dangerous.

Abridging the resolution if I may, sir, it calls for the government giving consideration to the establishment of a consumers' bureau. That would be the main performance section of the resolution. But also there are a number of secondary performances, for example the bureau would conduct research into and publish independent expert information on the quality of the product placed on the market in Ontario. That, I suggest, is a pretty tall order!

The consumers' union of the United States is the largest and most influential agency of this kind in the field. Its monthly publication, Consumers' Report is read by probably 2 million families. It is an independent, non-profit organization, organized under the membership corporation law of the state of New York. It is completely free of connection with any commercial interest.

It is mentioning an increasing number of Canadian products. It tests relatively few products. I think, in an ordinary monthly issue, there may be 10 or a dozen articles at most—only a grain of sand on the seashore in comparison with the overall picture. Its tests are, in many respects, superficial and inconclusive. I suggest, sir, that they could not be otherwise, and yet its test laboratory operates at a cost probably in excess of $1 million a year.

Can the hon. members of this House contemplate the astronomical cost of carrying out that operative portion of this resolution, where a consumers' bureau would conduct research into and publish independent, expert information on the quality of the products placed on the market in Ontario? What kind of standards could be established? What programme of thorough and useful tests could be followed?

Let us take a simple appliance like a washing machine that we will find in every home. I do not refer to one of these "new-fangled" automatics; just the ordinary, old-time washer with a rotating or oscillating dolly and a pair of wringer rollers. Now what kind of test would you make on that? Would you test its safety, its efficiency in extracting dirt or its gentleness in handling the articles of wash that are passed through it, its smooth and quiet operation, or its durability and long life? Would you test its beauty of line and finish or its purely functional design?

No two manufacturers produce a washer from the same specifications, so how could they be compared or tested against one set of standards?

Mr. Thomas: How about hairnets?

Mr. Haskett: I can come to that.

Thorough and complete testing would take too long and cost too much. If only one machine from a factory were tested it could be a one-in-a-hundred lemon. On the other hand, it could be a one-in-a-hundred super product, and what assurance would the people have that the test was dependable and reliable?

Spot checking would be impractical, and yet it would make the test only somewhat less unreliable.

It would be impossible to test the entire output, sir. And, finally even if the tests were thorough and worthwhile, the expert report would be too long to be read and too technical to be understood except by a few. In that connection may I point out, sir, that what I have termed superficial tests of Consumers' Reports come out in relatively conventional and simple language—yet they have for their readers, these 2 million families, a following that is about 75 per cent college trained. Probably not one person in 100,000 will read Consumers' Reports when he is about to buy—

Mr. Thomas: Maybe they cannot afford to buy it.

Mr. Haskett: Fifty cents a month! Probably not one in 100,000 would bother to read Consumers' Reports that may be purchased for 50 cents when he is about to buy a $3,000 car. Does anyone suppose for a moment that our people would bother to read a government publication before purchasing a can opener or a hairnet or a pair of shoes or a fishing rod?

Mr. Thomas: Do they not read any government publications now? If they do not we had better throw them out.

Mr. Haskett: I suggest, sir, that the practical aspect is that only very few people take advantage of what we now have available in this popular form, even when making an expensive purchase, and that inordinate waste would result if we went to anything like the expense of testing all the products on the market in Ontario.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Do not say all the products. Just products.

Mr. Haskett: For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the proposal to conduct research tests and issue expert reports on the products placed on the market in Ontario is impractical and unworkable. Furthermore, I suggest, sir, that the safeguards that have been taken by and have been built around the consumers' union of the United States and its publication, Consumers' Reports, emphasize the care that must be taken in issuing even these unofficial ratings—I draw attention to the frightening abuses that might creep in if such bureaucratic power were vested in a government agency. Why, a mistaken reading of a test gauge or a poorly-worded or slanted report could ruin a business and throw hundreds of people out of work—

Mr. Bryden: But nobody reads them, the hon. member said.

Mr. Haskett: —and make a ghost town of a community that has been built up around an industry that has provided the people with an honestly made article at an honest price.

The wielding of such power by the state is not compatible with our society, and too many would regard it as smacking of nothing short of Gestapo methods.

The next proposal of the resolution, sir—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. member had better look for bogies under the bed when he goes home at night.

Mr. Haskett: I will do just that, sir—

Mr. MacDonald: You will?

Mr. Haskett: I notice that my hon. friend, in speaking to his own resolution, dealt chiefly with the next portion that I shall speak of, the proposal that the consumers' bureau would investigate advertising practices and prohibit fraudulent and misleading advertising. With that, sir, even the spirit of that, I think we find ourselves in general agreement. Back over the years, I have had some connection with an organization called the chamber of commerce and I have a file indicating the extent of the work that our business community has been doing in this very direction.

The task of policing misleading and fraudulent advertising is one of the greatest headaches of business and the honest and legitimate business man. All across this country boards of trade and chambers of commerce representing the business community on the local, provincial and national levels, and the retail merchants' associations have been following this problem and constantly fighting these malpractices.

I find here in my file a heading "insidious advertising by swindlers," and this is significant because my hon. friend mentioned this very phase. The hon. member described material dealing with the abuses of comparative prices, and I find here a publication put out by the better business bureau on that very issue. We in the chamber of commerce followed this subject with great interest and welcomed the amendment that was made in the last session of Parliament in Ottawa to The Combines Act (Canada) 1960, chapter 45, when action was taken to curb the abuse of comparative prices.

I will read from chapter 45, section 33C(1):

Every one who, for the purpose of promoting the sale or use of an article, makes any materially misleading representation to the public, by any means whatsoever, concerning the price at which such or like articles have been, are, or will be, ordinarily sold, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

That was welcomed by the business community of this country and I am sure my hon. friend from Oshawa will agree with that, too.

The business community knows that consumers' loyalty cannot be bought, that it has to be earned, and toward that end we have worked continuously. Even in this last 1960-1961 statement of policy and resolutions of the Ontario chamber, I find a resolution dealing with the control of deceptive sales.

So I put before this House, sir, this view: That in working to curb these malpractices in business, we have the support of the business community that, across this country, we will find, represents the best element in the cross-section of life in any of our towns and cities.

But it seems clear, sir, that this old question of the matter of control of deceptive advertising could not be adequately handled by the consumers' bureau as suggested; it falls within the compass of the criminal code. I am sure that the hon. member, on reconsidering the wording of his resolution, will agree that it is best left, and must be allowed to remain, where it is.

There is one further proposal in the resolution, sir, the one following that with which I have just dealt, and like it—and as the hon. sponsor clearly recognizes—it too falls within the federal jurisdiction. It calls for the bureau to exert constant pressure for the enforcement of the federal laws governing food and drugs. Both The Food and Drug Act and The Patent and Proprietary Medicines Act fall under the administration of the federal Department of National Health and Welfare. I think that we have reason to feel—and with gratitude—that the government over the years has done a splendid job, in this area, in maintaining high standards and in protecting the public.

I have spoken on this subject, sir, at some length, for it is an important one. I point to the real interest that business has in honest dealing and in ensuring that the consumer gets a fair deal. This includes the work the business community is doing toward the elimination of unfair practices, and how it operates to track down the dishonest and the fly-by-night agent.

I would point out to you, sir, that the better business bureau implores people to investigate before they invest, asking them to report all occasions of sharp practices and seeks to catch up with these disreputable traders that invade our towns and cities with their questionable business transactions.

The better business bureau is offering these services free to the consumer. It is organized, operated and paid for by the business community of this country, the leaders of business as we know them in our towns and cities.

The government is especially concerned with, and always conscious of, the welfare of the ordinary citizen and the consumer. Year by year it steps up its services as it seeks to make available and to provide, in fullest measure, the good things of life to all the people of Ontario.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest to the hon. member for Ottawa South and to the very detailed and thorough report that he made with respect to this resolution. I should say that there were some points that—

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker! On a point of order may I interrupt for one moment. We had a list this morning from the Whip of the government party and this was the order of the debate: Thomas, Haskett, Bryden and Auld. Now I wonder if that has been changed; we were not aware of it.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): The hon. member is insulting us! That is fine!

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, hon. members were consulted. I discussed this problem with their Whip yesterday, and the Whip advised me that they were not taking part in this debate.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Oh, now! Mr. Speaker, I did not!

Mr. Cowling: Now, the hon. leader of the Opposition does not think we would go ahead without talking to him—

Mr. Wintermeyer: I said I would inquire to see how many speakers we had. But I was not consulted again.

Mr. Cowling: We were simply waiting to hear the list of names. There is no problem here, but not having a list of names, why, this was the lineup. It is just as simple as that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I must take exception to the phraseology of the hon. member for High Park, Mr. Speaker. To my knowledge, in conjunction with the Throne speech our Whip made several efforts to be in touch with the hon. member. He was not here during the normal period of time in the morning. They were required to wait until the afternoon to settle it. Regarding the type of statement that has been made here this morning, Mr. Speaker, I demand the hon. member retract that type of suggestion, because it suggests we are not interested in this. We have had a man working on this subject, and are prepared to go ahead with the presentation for our side of the House. The inference that we are disinterested or do not want to take part is just fallacious. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is right that that impression be created, and I would ask the hon. member to withdraw that suggestion.

Now if, as a result of some failure to communicate between the Whips, the particular lineup has been arranged, we are quite prepared to go ahead with that lineup. But we do insist that we have an opportunity to permit as many members from this side of the House as want to speak on this subject to speak on it.

Mr. Bryden: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I could solve this problem. I think we all know the rules of the House, that the Speaker recognizes the person who will have the right to speak. Certainly there is no intention to curtail this debate except within the time limit that is available, and I say we should leave the matter to the Speaker to recognize whoever he sees fit.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Speaker, there is no inference that the Opposition was not interested in the situation. I had not received a name, and we were going ahead on this tentative basis. So if the hon. leader of the Opposition felt that I was indicating that they were disinterested, that was simply not the case. I did not have a name.

Mr. Wintermeyer: He did not say that.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, we have no intention of opposing the hon. member for Dovercourt. All we are asking is, let us have a little orderliness about the whole thing. If we have agreed to this order of the debate, let us continue.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, may I first thank the hon. member for Oshawa for the permission he now gives me to take the floor? I should say, sir, the Liberal party as a whole, each of us, would like to speak on this, and I feel privileged to speak myself on this occasion.

The Liberal party has always been concerned with the interests of the consumer. We are for this resolution in many ways because we have been advocating this—my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) has been advocating this, and if hon. members look across the country, even as far as to the west—

An hon. member: To Ross Thatcher?

Mr. Thompson: —Further even than Ross Thatcher. Hon. members will see in British Columbia that the Liberal party has been advocating some type of consumers' bureau. When I stood up before, I suggested, from the remarks of the previous hon. government speaker, that there were a couple of his points to discuss—and I am sure they will be further gone into by other hon. members from this party. He pointed out very clearly the variety of voluntary organizations that are in this field. It seemed to me by implication he was showing us the need for some co-ordination and for some help by government to these voluntary organizations. I was surprised, sir, at his lack of faith in government pamphlets. He certainly is not in co-operation with the rest of the government because, sir, if there is one thing this government has faith in, it is in introducing volumes and volumes of the most expensive kind of pamphlets and magazines.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Those are propaganda!

Mr. Thompson: Yes, that is quite true, and I think that in the federal House, as well, we have seen where another Progressive-Conservative leader, the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker), is suggesting that he also is going to rely on a great number of government pamphlets to try to sell his way to the Canadian people.

With respect to the resolution for a consumers' bureau, I would suggest, sir, that the most effective way possible for a consumers' bureau establishment is on the federal level. I suggest this because of several reasons.

The federal government, after all, is responsible and has the control over much that is suggested for this consumers' bureau. The federal government has the responsibility for post office regulations against fraud. The federal government has responsibility for The Broadcasting Act. The federal government has the responsibility for The Food and Drug Act.

Therefore, I suggest that in many ways it is difficult for a provincial government to take action with respect to guarding the consumer. After all, if you do have fraudulent practices and shoddy goods which are produced in one province and consumed in another, it is fairly difficult for one provincial government to take action. It should really be on the federal level.

However, in point of fact I do not think there has been enough done on the federal level with respect to guarding the consumers' interest. It seems to me that governments at all levels are much more likely to be responsive to pressures from such groups as producers and also from large advertising agencies and companies, and that the consumer, on the whole, is either not recognized or has only a small amount of organization, without much funds and without much research. Therefore, the consumer cannot go into as much detail and cannot have the same pressure on a federal government or on any provincial government as the powerful organizations of producers and advertisers.

With respect to advertising in general, I would like to say that on the federal level it seems to me that the board of broadcast governors should be looking into this field more. They are not. As we know, they are concerned with other matters and, therefore, the area of advertising is pretty well left to itself. We find, in my opinion, the board of broadcast governors, with respect to investigating advertising on its media, is extremely understaffed and is not carrying out this control efficiently.

The advertising lobby, in my opinion, is large and powerful and has the advantage not only of money, but also of being able to have the influence of the mass media field to support it. And I think that governments, as a whole, have been reluctant to take measures which might antagonize these powerful groups.

I would emphasize again that on the whole we are very much behind this resolution, for we, ourselves, have been advocating a resolution such as this. We feel that the consumer is not being given enough consideration with respect to price spreads. We feel that the advertising industry must be concerned about fraudulent advertising practices.

I would like to point out the influence that the advertising industry has on the price of products. As we know, in Canada, it is about a $500 million industry and, therefore, it can wage much more influence on government than the voluntary organizations which are trying to represent the consumer.

Obviously they must have some concern about fraudulent advertising.

With respect to the influence that they have on the cost of products, I would like, first of all, to show the expenditures in advertising in Canada. In 1946, advertising expenditures were $134 million, and in 1959 were $587 million. This was an increase, sir, of 338 per cent.

Now, what was the situation in the United States? In the United States, the increase in advertising expenditures went up only 230 per cent. Advertising expenditures, as a percentage of the gross national product in 1946, was 1.13 per cent and in 1959 it was 1.68 per cent.

If we look at the situation in the United States, the advertising expenditures were 2.31 per cent of the gross national product in 1959.

This indicates to us the direction that is going to take place in Canada with respect to the influence on the cost of products by advertising companies. Naturally, therefore, we want to ensure that fraudulent advertising does not have any opportunity to play a role in Canada.

Let me take the example of some industries in the United States on the influence of the cost in advertising. Among the large food and beverage producers and among the large manufacturers of soaps and cleaners, advertising as a percentage of sales usually exceeds 5 per cent, and in some cases is as high as 12 per cent.

Now, sir, I would like to make recommendations about this, but first I would like to look at what is being done and suggested in the United States.

In the United States, of course, they have been urging some kind of a department of consumers, and we see, for example, a number of bills were produced during the 1960 session in the United States, not all of which were passed. We know that there was the department of consumers bill and I would like to refer to some of the purposes of this department. I am referring to Mr. Halpern, who spoke on August 18, 1960, in the Eighty-sixth Congress. He was urging that there should be a consumers' Act, suggesting these purposes for a consumers' department:

1. It would be presenting the consumer viewpoint in the formation of policies of the government.

2. It would be representing the economic interests of consumers of the United States in proceedings before courts and before regulatory agencies of the United States.

3. It would be conducting annually a national consumers' conference in order to obtain information, recommendations and suggestions necessary for the department's function.

4. It would be receiving, assembling, evaluating, acting upon, and disseminating information helpful to consumers of the United States in performing their economic function more efficiently.

5. It would permit this consumers' department to intervene in proceedings before regulatory agencies, other than when an alleged violation is involved, as a party to represent the interest of consumers.

I could go on with respect to the objectives of the consumers' department in the United States, but we can see across Canada and across the United States there is a growing concern to have the consumers' point of view represented. We can see there is a concern that fraudulent advertising can have an effect on the consumer market.

I would just like to refer to an article which was printed yesterday in the Toronto Daily Star. It was an article by Rabbi Rosenberg in which he says:

The public no longer buys commodities, it is virtually seduced by them. Packaging sells the products—you cannot tell a book, but you surely can sell one, by its cover—and the lustier the better!

That was a statement in the Daily Star last night.

We know the concern we have for the pressures that are on the consumer to buy a variety of products that he really does not need. I refer to Vance Packard, who has recently written a book called The Waste Makers and I quote an extract:

Most of us who are thoughtful citizens are aware that we in the United States are going through a revolution in a way of life. We are trying to perceive where this revolution is carrying us. For two years I have been attempting to assess evidences of the changes and their implications and contemplating what we can do about them. The result is my book, The Waste Makers.

In my view, the pressures of a new concept of consumerism are forcing commercialization of almost every aspect of American life. Ever-mounting productivity is inspiring marketers to devise strategies that impel us to discard products soon after we buy them, so that we will buy new models. A new philosophy of waste is taking hold. It is forecasting a dangerous decline in the nation's supply of resources, a change of national character and a disquieting change in the style of life.

I suggest a number of remedies. One of the most obvious and urgent is a great expansion in the influence of consumer oriented organizations, such as the consumers' union.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question? It was just—

Mr. Thompson: I wonder if the hon. Minister will wait until I am through?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was just on that book. I wonder if the hon. member has investigated whether there were any high-pressure methods used by the publisher to sell that book?

Mr. Bryden: Very likely, very likely.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Did they use high pressure?

Mr. Thompson: I have not investigated if there was high pressure with respect to it. I do not know if the hon. member has read the book, but I suggest he should. If he reads the book, he would realize that he does not—

Mr. Chapple: The advertisements were quite large and very high-pressure type.

Mr. Thompson: I mentioned that Vance Packard suggested one way to check this great influence by advertising, in particular to check fraudulent advertising, is through a consumers' union. Now he is referring to the organization in the United States which is the biggest and probably the most influential of voluntary organizations with respect to the consumers.

I want to give one example of what the consumers' union in the United States did this summer. In their publication, Consumers' Reports, they announced the effect of the consumers' union technicians and consultants in which they had tested 44 models by 24 manufacturers. These were models of rotary lawn mowers, and these products probably accounted for 85 per cent of power mower sales in the country.

What was the verdict with respect to this? None was clearly acceptable; 31 were excessively hazardous; 13 were given a grudging conditional acceptance. And notwithstanding this, there were 3 million of these power mowers sold in a year. I would also point out that there were 240,000 of these power mowers sold in Canada in 1960.

Surely there is an obligation with respect to a product such as a dangerous power mower. It is an obligation on the part of some group, and I would say on the part of the government, to point out and check this kind of sale for the benefit of the consumer.

I do not have the same pessimism that my hon. friend before me had that nobody is going to read anything published. I think that the government should stop promptly the kind of dangerous sales that do take place. We should be watching this and certainly watching the advertising with respect to it.

I would say that we really have an obligation to look at the whole field of advertising, not solely fraudulent advertising.

I shall quote from Arthur Schlesinger Jr., in a book called The Big Decision, Private Indulgence or National Power. He also is emphasizing the need for some kind of curb on advertising. He said that private interests have priority over public interests and everyone is making a fast buck, and that this is supposed to ensure the common good. The public sector, and this includes everything from foods to missiles—he was referring to the United States—takes second place, while consumer goods heap up in our attics and basements. Our advertising system knocks itself out trying to create new wants which will require more land, more private goods and services, while more and more of our resources are absorbed in the “style racket” and designed obsolescence, the consumers’ spending merry-go-round:

The public framework of propriety in which everything else rests is overstrained by population growth and undercut by neglect. Our cities rot away, our suburbs grow more chaotic, our teachers more underpaid, our roads more dangerous, our national parks more unkempt, our air and our streams more polluted, our law enforcement more harrowed and unsatisfactory, a sixth of the nation lingers in scandalous poverty.

I should say that he is referring to the United States, but I think, in many respects, he could be referring to the province of Ontario with these accusations.

He goes on to point out examples of how the public good is sacrificed to private indulgence in more subtle ways. The point he is making is that because of fraudulent advertising and the great emphasis on advertising, the consumer is being seduced to buy things which are unnecessary and there has been an emphasis on the trivialities rather than on the real needs of our society.

I would suggest, sir, that a consumers’ bureau is extremely essential for the government to consider seriously. I would also suggest that they should be looking through this consumers’ bureau at the advertising system with particular emphasis on fraudulent advertising.

I would like to raise this suggestion for consideration. Today, advertising is considered as a business expense and it is deductible before the calculation of corporation taxes. Hence, with approximately a 50 per cent corporation tax deduction, the real cost to the corporation is only 50 per cent. I would suggest that when we review what this whole area of advertising does to urge people to buy obsolescent material, that the government—and it should be the federal government—should look at the advertising field and at the deductible aspect of it. I think the government should consider whether advertising should not be excluded as a deductible expense to a company. I think if this was done, then the advertisers themselves would look much more closely at their own shop and try to clean it up. There is fraudulent advertising today. I think that if advertisers check for themselves, we would get away from the need of government intervention in this area.

I would also suggest that there are other areas in which a consumers’ bureau could be effective, and I would like to emphasize these. These are areas for study by a consumers’ bureau:

I think it should be studying the methods which the consumer may employ to minimize the impact of inflation on consumer purchasing power and the value of fixed savings and income.

I think it should be looking at the consumer problem, with consumer credit, including instalment buying credit.

I think it should be looking at the effect on consumers of our agricultural programme of farm price supports which are influencing the cost of food.

I think it should be looking at the effectiveness of anti-trust regulations to protect the consumers against overcharging and restricted selection of goods by restraint of trade or monopolistic practices.

I think it should be looking at the impact of sales, excise and other taxes on the consumers’ ability to buy a selection of goods.

I think it should be looking at the trade and tariff policies, if they affect the prices and supplies of imported goods.

I think that this bureau should be looking into research on consumer problems, should be looking at the influence of branded and non-branded products on the price, quality and availability of consumer goods.

I think that this bureau—I know that this is done in Ottawa—should be looking at its responsibilities to certify the quality of products. It should—and I want again to emphasize this particularly—check the authenticity of advertising.

The bureau should be hearing consumer representations on services; the bureau should arrange consumer conferences to discover complaints and publicize the needs and desires; it should check on warranties and service contracts. I suggest there is a great area in Ontario for guaranteeing the right of the consumer.

On the whole, sir, I would say that I and my party go along with this resolution because we, sir, for a long time, have been emphasizing the need to look into the question of the consumers' rights.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I believe this is one of the most important proposals to come before this Legislature this session. I do not think it will get as much attention as some other proposals emanating from the other side of the House, but it is, nevertheless, equally important as almost any that I can think of.

I must say that I was a little bit disappointed with the reaction of the hon. member for Ottawa South. A couple, perhaps 3 years ago, when a proposal of this kind was discussed briefly in this House, my recollection—from having read Hansard—is that the government showed a slight disposition to regard the proposal with some favour. I do not know if the hon. member for Ottawa South now represents the views of the government, but it would appear that, if so, they have drifted back into their old complacent attitude.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): This is a private member debate, you know.

Mr. Bryden: Well, perhaps if the government is in favour of this resolution the hon. Attorney-General will indicate it and it will save a lot of time. I will not say another word if he says he is prepared to proceed with this proposal.

Mr. Chapple: Going to sit right on top of the fence!

Mr. Bryden: However, I suppose that one must accept as inevitable the reaction of the hon. member for Ottawa South. After all, it is a relatively new idea that is proposed in this resolution and I suppose it is inevitable that Tories will always oppose new ideas.

Later, as public opinion develops and it becomes less than a new idea, then, no doubt, they will swing behind it and say they thought of it in the first place.

The plain fact, Mr. Speaker, is that the consumer is the forgotten man in North American civilization. Since we are all consumers, I suppose one could say that we are all forgotten men in that important aspect in our lives. But I think we should bear in mind that the disability bears most heavily on the small man, especially the small man with a family, since he can least afford to be taken for a ride.

The consumer today in this North American civilization—and the situation is getting worse all the time—is fair game for every huckster and gimmick man who comes along. I am not talking merely about the fly-by-night operators who are plainly crooked, I am talking about our whole business environment in which constant efforts are being made to induce the consumer to act against his own best interests. The consumer is easily victimized because it is very difficult to organize for his own protection.

Reference has been made earlier in this debate to various types of consumers' organizations that exist, such as the Canadian association of consumers, which I believe is a very worthwhile organization doing some good work. But let us face it. It is a very small organization, very inadequately financed. Actually, an organization that properly represented consumers would be an organization of all the people of the country because everybody is a consumer.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government has a special role to play in this field. What organization is there in this country that represents all the people? The government, and the government alone, is the only organization that can represent all the people. Therefore, it has a special responsibility in this field.

Now we are told that the play of free competition offers the consumer protection. But the plain fact, Mr. Speaker, is that free competition long ago ceased to exist in this country in any significant degree, in the sense in which that concept was developed in classical economics in which the basic idea was competition in price. The theory was that if you had a large number of suppliers operating in the market, the interaction of their competition would be to bring the price down to a level sufficient to cover the price of production and a reasonable margin for the person who took the risk and went to the trouble of providing the commodity.

There is very little price competition in Canada today, however, even in areas where there are a large number of producers in the field, and there are a great many areas where there are not very many producers in the field. Even taking the areas such as retail distribution where there are a large number in the field, there is very little price competition. The kind of competition we have is competition in services, in advertising, and in promotional practices generally. Some of these services and even some of the advertising, I will concede, may be of benefit to the consumer, but most of it is plain sucker-bait.

The consumer is helpless in this promotional maelstrom because he lacks information. The hon. member for Ottawa South made a great song and dance about the difficulty experts would have in testing the qualities of products. He greatly exaggerated the case. Scientists are a little more ingenious than he gives them credit for, but it is true there are difficulties in testing almost any product that comes on the market today, because these products are complex.

How can the ordinary consumer make any rational judgment at all about the conflicting claims of various advertisers if the expert has difficulty? It is impossible for me, or any hon. member in this House, to deal in some engineering field, say, motor cars, unless he has particular knowledge in that field. Then if he has knowledge in that field, he probably lacks knowledge in almost every other field.

The result of this is that the consumer very often makes his selection not on the basis of the best product that is offered to him, taking into consideration price and everything else—in other words the best buy—he makes his decision on the basis of the best propaganda line. There is, therefore, a premium on promotion in our society and under our economic system as it now exists.

The successful seller is not necessarily the one who offers the best value, he is the one who offers the best line, and to add insult to injury, he charges the consumer the cost that he incurred in misleading the consumer.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): How does the hon. member figure that out?

Mr. Bryden: On the hon. member's side of the House, it has frequently been said that all these costs get into the price of the product sooner or later, and these advertising and promotional costs certainly get into the cost, the price, to the consumer. They are used to influence the consumer, frequently, to act against his own best interests and then he is charged in the price he pays.

There was a Royal commission appointed by the federal Tory government on price spreads some time ago. It reported upwards of a year ago and it attributed an important part of the increasing cost in food products to promotional practices, to factors that are of no benefit to the consumer at all.

Reference has been made earlier in this debate to the most recent book of Mr. Vance Packard. I would like to make reference to one of his earlier books, namely The Hidden Persuaders, which is a popularization, I may say, of a great many scientific studies that have been undertaken by a great many people.

I do not give Packard much credit for the facts he brings to light in his books, but I think he is to be given credit for having taken the trouble to present some of these matters in a fairly readable and understandable manner.

The alarming thing that comes to light in books such as The Hidden Persuaders is that we have now reached the point in North America and, no doubt, in other advanced societies, where people who have received advanced training in psychology and sociology, mainly at public expense, are using the specialized knowledge they have to exploit people, to take advantage of them.

They hire themselves out to industry for no other purpose than to find new ways of influencing people. They have discovered that people's conduct is frequently irrational and that they are influenced by a great many factors, often without realizing what is influencing them.

So these people who have had the privilege of getting special knowledge are using that knowledge for the purpose of playing on other people's hidden fears and aspirations, of exploiting human frailties, so that people will be induced to do things that they would not do if the proposition was put before them as a straight logical basis; to influence them to do things that they could not be persuaded by reason to do.

The hon. member for Ottawa South contrives to discover the danger of dictatorship or some other great evil in resolution No. 2 on the order paper.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that one of the greatest dangers in our society is this new science which is being developed purely for private gain of manipulating people for the benefit of other people. There is no worse authoritarianism than the imprisonment of a man's mind; of influencing him without his realizing he is being influenced. It is infinitely worse than the imprisonment of his body. Yet, that is the sort of thing we are coming to in this society, with its absolutely lopsided emphasis on promotion of the products of manufacturers.

I would like to give one or two examples, Mr. Speaker, of the sort of thing that is going on now, and which, I think, action along the lines proposed in this resolution could help to solve. I am not merely concerned with fraudulent promotion, I am also concerned about what the resolution refers to as misleading promotion.

One could find examples of misleading promotion, misleading advertising and even fraudulent advertising in almost every field.

But just for the purposes of illustration, I will confine myself to one field only. That is the field of—I was going to say of medical preparation but that would not be the proper description—I would say preparations that are on the fringes of the medical field. None of the examples that I plan to take is as far as I know fraudulent in the technical sense of the term; there is no fraud that I can see involved, it is just a deliberate attempt to mislead the people, often without telling any outright lie.

One can tell the truth but tell it in such a way as to give the wrong impression. This is the sort of thing that happens in the wild dash for profits in this society, in the deification of the almighty dollar.

I should like to refer first of all to an article which appeared in the December 3, 1960, issue of Macleans magazine. It is entitled "The One Doctor in Four Talks Back" and the author is Dr. Alton Goldbloom. The sub-heading, in summarizing the article, runs: "'TV Commercial Doctors are Closer to Medicine Men Than Medical Men,' an Eminent Canadian Physician Says. Here is Why Three Doctors Out of Four Who Recommend Those Pills, Pain-killers, and Cure-alls Are Seldom Right and Sometimes Dangerous."

I will now read a little bit of the introductory portion of Dr. Goldbloom's article—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I wonder if my hon. friend would allow me to speak for a moment, Mr. Speaker? The procedure this morning is in line with the recommendation of the select committee to satisfy the definite amount of time spent in debate in the first hour and a half of the morning before private members' resolutions and other resolutions of that nature are billed.

I would not want the practice to get out of hand at the very beginning in such a way that it might have a great effect on the House, and perhaps affect the views of the hon. members when it comes to determining whether it is a good practice or not. If my hon. friend would indicate how much longer he expects to be, it might help us to determine whether we should now adjourn the debate or if it should continue for a short time.

Mr. Bryden: I point out, Mr. Speaker, that I deferred to another hon. member. However I think I could wind this up in 5 or 10 minutes. If there is any highly urgent public business that is being held up, I would be happy to move adjournment right now, but I doubt if there is any great programme before us, so I will continue—at any rate, sir, as long as I am permitted.

Now, Dr. Goldbloom commences his article by saying:

I am the fourth doctor, who are the other 3? Well, just listen to your radio or watch your TV and you will soon find out. Day in and day out, you hear commercials blare forth that 3 out of 4 doctors recommend a particular cereal for your health, a certain medicine for your nerves, a pill for your headache, a tonic for your anemia and a mysterious preparation for your split personality.

It is almost always 3 out of 4 doctors who recommend such and such. Three anonymous doctors have made clinical tests in hospitals that are nameless and have as a result come out with enthusiastic recommendations for the advertised products.

I shall not go into all the numerous examples that Dr. Goldbloom cites. I will content myself with one, which is much the same as all the others:

One of the most enterprising headache pills entrepreneurs proclaims to the world that this product contains "not one but 3 ingredients that kill pain" and furthermore, "3 out of 4 doctors recommend these ingredients".

There is nothing dishonest about this claim; it is just that the manufacturer is kidding the public into believing he is selling them something special.

To my knowledge, a pill made up of these 3 ingredients has been in existence for at least 50 years and perhaps longer. All doctors, not only 3 out of 4, have used this combination regularly. It is a traditionally good mixture for some pain from headaches and fever.

Again I am the fourth doctor—because I do recommend these drugs, but not under the trade name.

One other matter, Mr. Speaker, comes within the same general field. That is the matter of the promotion of vitamins and vitamin preparations in this country, which I submit to you is a major racket. I doubt if it is fraudulent in the sense that anybody could bring any action against these people, but, here we have large sums of money being devoted to persuading people to buy vitamins that they do not need in most cases. If they do need them, they should get doctors' advice on the matter and not reply on advertisements in the newspaper.

It is a large industry with salesmen going around door to door offering people a family vitamin plan for the cost of $20 a month, which will ensure that the whole family will have all the vitamins that they need. It is nothing but a plain racket. Even if the products are reliable preparations—and many of them are not—it is probable that the family does not need those vitamins and at any rate, does not need to pay the price which is being charged.

The British Columbia division of the Canadian medical association had enough interest in this matter to study it. They issued a press release about it some little time ago, and when I asked them for a copy they were good enough to send it to me. I will not read the whole of it, but I would like to read one or two extracts.

It says:

A small number of people who are on an inadequate diet or are convalescing from a long illness need vitamin supplements. These people are usually under their doctor's care and are guided in the use of these supplements by him.

Then it goes on to talk about some of the products that are on the market right now. It says:

One such product for example is said to contain 30 vitamins and minerals. Most of these ingredients are of no value whatever for routine use by the vast majority of adults and children who are eating a well balanced diet.

I think that the British Columbia medical association is to be commended for the interest it has taken in this matter.

But what good is one statement like that issued to the press against advertisement after advertisement appearing in the press and salesmen going around door to door?

The medical association of British Columbia says it is merely calling attention to the matter. They do not care if people waste their money, their only point is that people should at least have the facts before they waste their money.

I feel that most people would not knowingly waste their money. They are taken in by this sort of promotion because they are naturally concerned about the welfare of their families. They do not know the facts such as are contained in this report. They are persuaded that the use of these vitamins is necessary to maintain their families in good health. So they get "sucked in" and, in a sense, robbed, because their money is taken from them for something that is of no value to them whatsoever.

The resolution that the hon. member for Oshawa has put before this House obviously will not solve the whole of this problem of protecting the consumer. It is a very complicated and a very difficult problem. The resolution is at best a start in the right direction. It will merely make an impression in the field, but I submit that it is an area in which all government, provincial and federal legislators should be taking an interest and there is no place like home to start.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution is a constructive move. It is a forward-looking move, a necessary move. It will be a start in doing the sort of job that has to be done to protect the consumer from the hordes of locusts who are forever trying to fleece him.

I rather regret the suggestion that there will be no vote on this resolution, that the debate will merely be adjourned and that will be the end of it. I submit that it is reasonable that we should have a vote on it. The resolution merely suggests the government should give consideration to this proposal, and if the government is not prepared to give consideration to it, then why is the government and its supporters not prepared to stand up and be counted to that effect? Let them stand up and say that they are not prepared to consider the matter.

If they are prepared to consider it, then I submit that they should give the House some indication that they are looking into it very seriously in the hope that they can perhaps bring in legislation at a later date. If the government were prepared to do that, I would say there was no need for a vote. As far as this group is concerned, we would very happy to accept the assurance.

But on a matter of this kind, I submit that it is undesirable merely to let it die on the order paper after a relatively brief debate. I think it should either be voted upon or else the government should make some announcement of its intentions.

Mr. J. A. C. Auld (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long you propose to have this debate continue. I would like to say something about the resolution and some of the things that are on my mind about it and with your permission, I will carry on. First of all, I think all of us in this House are quite in sympathy with the idea behind the resolution of attempting to protect people from being misled and so on, but I am quite concerned about the method which has been suggested.

There is certainly no substitute for a cautious and an informed public, and I would agree that it, perhaps, becomes more difficult each day to attain this objective, not only because of methods of advertising and the amount of advertising, and so on, but because of the amount of time which people take up in things other than perhaps studying what they may be buying, and so on.

But I think that the danger of establishing such a government bureau, as suggested by my hon. friend, is two-fold.

I think, quite seriously, that one of the dangers is this: We have a tendency today to attempt, for many reasons, to protect people from all kinds of things, and I think there is a growing tendency and a growing feeling amongst people that the government will look after them, that everything is bound to be quite safe, that the highways eventually will be safe, and that, for instance, people do not have to drive carefully because there will be some law passed that will be able to make highways safe.

I think that a government-operated bureau would have a tendency, perhaps, to lull the people's suspicions and make the situation perhaps a little more difficult than it presently is.

But the other thing that would concern me very greatly and, I think, would concern all the hon. members, is this: Supposing we had such an agency as suggested, which is responsible for testing products.

Now, we have many agencies which are responsible for quality or purity of various things.

We have, as my hon. friend from Ottawa South mentioned, the food and drug branch of The Department of Health and Welfare; the proprietary medicine people; The Department of Agriculture and its inspection of meat and fowl; The Department of Agriculture again, and grading of fruit and vegetables—we have a whole host of things in the agricultural field and in the food field. There is the Canadian standards association and, in Ontario, the Ontario Hydro, who test, for safety, all electrical appliances and equipment.

But, supposing we had a government agency which was testing products and they test automobiles, for instance, and after testing they decide that the best one, for argument's sake, is the Pontiac Tempest. I think there would be great concern in Oshawa if that were the case—

Mr. Thomas: I think the hon. member is exaggerating the whole thing ridiculously.

Mr. Auld: I do not think so. I think that is a very apt illustration for this reason: If they are going to give a ruling on products for value and quality, and so on, then obviously they must test various products and they must find some that are suitable and some that are not. After the words of some of my hon. friends opposite, I wonder that anything is safe to eat or drink.

What would be the situation where a comparison by a government agency is made between products and some product is found to be the best or better than all the rest? I would certainly be one of those who would complain very bitterly myself, that the people of the country or the province, or whatever it might be, were being influenced by what, in effect, I would consider to be somebody else's opinion.

I feel my own opinion on many things of that nature: colour and texture, and so on, or flavour, is just as good as anybody else's and is, in fact, to me far better. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, without going into this part of the thing too deeply, that the great danger of any government agency which is supposed to be doing more than controlling the standard or quality in something, is that there would be many difficulties which would ensue. In fact, that it just would not work.

I certainly think that debates such as this, articles in the press, and work by the better business bureau are needed and that great work has been done. But I suggest that in the advertising field there is a certain amount of control at the present time—in fact, a good deal of control in many media.

The newspapers, for instance, the radio stations, and the television stations will only accept certain kinds of advertising. They will not accept something which is obviously and patently false. In addition the companies themselves, who spend a great deal of money in establishing their brands and their brand names—and I have had some experience with this in the wholesale grocery business—are very cautious that they do not mislead people.

Anybody who wants to stay in business knows that the public has a long memory, and a great deal of thought and care goes into, not only their advertising programme, but their merchandising programme.

I can remember many occasions, in the food business, when the representative of a firm—not necessarily a national firm, but a firm with an established brand, which might be a large or a small firm—would send their representative around because they had found that a certain batch of beans or orange juice or whatever it may be was below standard. They would take it off the shelves and destroy it, because they could not afford to have lowered the standard of quality which they had spent a great deal of time and money producing and have dissatisfied customers.

I am a member, or was a member, of the consumers' union, and I might tell the House a true story which illustrates another problem which you have in any of this testing and so on.

Some years ago, at the suggestion or behest of my good wife, we bought a new kitchen appliance. I will not mention the firm name, but it was a well-known one and one which was not very well thought of by the testers at consumers' union. Well, it worked pretty well. We had little trouble with it. But my wife had been reading Consumers' Reports and she kept telling me that another brand was far better, and that this one was not really working quite well; that the results, while they were good, would be a lot better with the other brand, which was a check-rated brand for Consumers' Reports. So we bought the other brand and we have had nothing but trouble with the thing ever since. It is probably the worst one we have ever had.

Mr. Bryden: Does the hon. member not have a mind of his own?

Mr. Auld: Exactly, and if I had kept to my own mind we would have kept the old appliance and not purchased this one which was supposed to be so good.

The point I emphasize, Mr. Speaker, is the one which was touched on by my hon. friend from Ottawa South. I am not suggesting that consumers' union do not do the best they can. They test 2 or 3 samples in one of these items, and if they happen to get 3 good ones they will have one result.

If they happen to get in many cases only one item, and get a bad one, they will give a bad report, and this information they point out in their magazine; that these are subject to error and so on. But this information goes out to people all over the country. To have them led to believe, or attain the opinion, that anything that is in this magazine must be right, I think, is a very dangerous attitude to foster. I think that the best possible attitude that people can have is that they be extremely cautious, whether it is buying a washing machine or an automobile or an insurance policy or some machine that is sold from door to door.

One thing that interested me in the remarks of my hon. friend from Dovercourt concerned advertising and the expenditures for advertising. Again going back to the food business, every now and again somebody speaks disparagingly about advertising and the tremendous sums that are being spent.

We read that a certain television show cost $150,000 to produce and $300,000 for time, and so on, and they say if that was not done the price of the product would be reduced a great deal.

I think all the hon. members will remember that a few years ago General Foods had a large programme for Maxwell House coffee. I was curious about this because I had read the amounts in the paper as to how much this programme and their advertising cost.

I made it my business to make inquiries, and it turned out that it cost about 1.5 cents per case of coffee which would be 12 pounds. Hon. members can work out for themselves what it cost from the point of view of the unit price of the product. What was certainly a very large expenditure, was relatively minor as far as cost to the consumer was concerned.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Would the hon. member move the adjournment of this particular debate so that it could then be continued at some other time in order that we can keep within reasonable bounds under the—

Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if I might say one thing. It seems to me that there is a great need for more consumer education, but I do feel that the present system, which may well be expanded, is right in principle. I refer to the procedure of the government supporting a consumers' organization, giving them assistance so that they may inform consumers, and make their ruling but not have the government be the one who decides what is good and what is bad. I feel this is quite right.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion, I would like to ask the hon. leader of the House whether he will give us his assurance that this particular motion will be called again in a reasonably short order. There is—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think I can say this. The debate this morning has been very interesting. A number of viewpoints have been brought out, but it has not been concluded, and there are other hon. members who wish to speak to it. I feel certain that if the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) is here at the House at the time, and if there is an opportunity, he will see that it is obtained. We do propose—as he has already indicated—to try out this system and it should be possible at some stage that this would be called again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE REGULATIONS REVISION ACT, 1959

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 1, "An Act to amend The Regulations Revision Act, 1959."

He said: In rising to move second reading of this bill, I would say that I propose to move second reading of a number of bills in order to advance them. These particular bills will, in all cases that there is any desire at all for them to, go to legal bills committee. I did on first reading give explanations of them and in order to facilitate now the moving of them I do not propose to repeat what I said then. If there is any particular bill that hon. members opposite would like to have withheld from second reading for further discussion on second reading I would agree to withhold it, but on that basis I would move second reading of Bill No. 1.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ABSENTEES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 2, "An Act to amend The Absentees Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE CREDIT UNIONS ACT, 1953

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 3, "An Act to amend The Credit Unions Act, 1953."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 4, "An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE FIRE MARSHALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 5, "An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE HOTEL FIRE SAFETY ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 6, "An Act to amend The Hotel Fire Safety Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LIGHTNING RODS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 7, "An Act to amend The Lightning Rods Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LAW SOCIETY ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 8, "An Act to amend The Law Society Act."

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): May I ask a question about this particular bill? Is there any particular reason why lawyers of the province should not be bonded so that in case of any lawyer absconding with a client's funds the client would be looked after in a financial way?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the proper committee would be the place to discuss that in detail. Actually there is a fund set up by the lawyers, which some of the hon. member's friends sitting around him know, because they have to contribute to it along with the rest of us. I would think that if there is any question of that sort, it should be brought before the legal bills committee.

Mr. Whicher: The only thing is, Mr. Speaker, I do not happen to be a member of the legal bills committee. I still think that the hon. Attorney-General should give some consideration to this.

I do not think it is fair that while we realize that most—99 point some per cent—of our lawyers are fine honest people, the fact remains that some clients of lawyers in the province of Ontario lose money.

I want to inform the House that I, for example, who am in the dairy business, am bonded by a bonding company to pay funds to the producers of milk who supply our dairies. I suggest that it would be a good idea if we look into the possibility of having lawyers bonded too. With due consideration and sincerity, I see no reason why the clients of lawyers should not be protected in the same way as the producers of milk are protected by our dairy. Personally I am bonded, and I think there should be some thought give to the matter.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LIQUOR CONTROL ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 9, "An Act to amend The Liquor Control Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MORTGAGES ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 10, "An Act to amend The Mortgages Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE TRUSTEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 11, "An Act to amend The Trustee Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I rise with somewhat mixed emotions again today to speak on the Throne debate—particularly as, in following the hon.

member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), I am going to try to subject hon. members to a few truths for the next 20 minutes or so. I hope hon. members will bear with me.

I also say with mixed emotions, while welcoming two new hon. members to the House, I must also regret the circumstances which led to their coming here.

In George Johnston and Bob Herbert this House has lost two fine members who had many friends on both sides of the House. I am not much for giving advice, but I would suggest to the hon. member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. Evans) and the member-elect for Temiskaming (Mr. Hoffman) that they study how their predecessors conducted themselves here and elsewhere. In them, they will find two excellent examples of the meaning of public service.

The hon. member for Simcoe Centre has already made a fine contribution to this House in seconding the motion of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme) and both are to be commended for their efforts.

I had been inclined to speak the other day in the debate on the resolution dealing with unemployment, but I did not want to restrict myself to that field. At the same time, there are enough of my hon. friends opposite who seem to be ready to speak on any subject that I decided to combine my remarks in one speech today. I think I can add something to this debate since public works have been mentioned so often that one might think that the provincial government could hire all the unemployed and put them to work.

In The Department of Public Works, we are planning, we have been planning, and we will continue to plan and to create the greatest number of economic winter jobs. One of the hon. members opposite has criticized my department for laying off men who had been employed in this building on renovation work. It was made to sound quite callous. But I would like to assure this House that our employment policy is as considerate and as kind-hearted as can be, while still considering that it is the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars that we are spending.

The hon. members of this House know full well that The Department of Public Works comes under more pressure than any other department of government to give people jobs. This pressure comes from hon. members of all parties in this House and from people in every walk of life. Hon. members also know that when one of our casual staff is laid off because there is no work to do, there is a strong tendency for him to run to his local member and demand that he be reinstated.

I am perfectly frank and blunt about this. I do not say that all of our casual staff are this way, but some are. I hear many stories that are perfectly legitimate and give reasons why such and such a man should be rehired or given a job. For this reason we are especially careful about laying people off, but we have to look at it this way.

On my farm I need more hands around harvest time, and when it is over I cannot afford to keep them on for the rest of the year. Certainly, I would like to give every man who comes into my office with a legitimate hard-luck story a job. We go a lot farther than any private industry would go, but there is a limit. We will bend over backwards to create legitimate jobs but are not going to supervise any pyramid building.

Hon. members will have seen considerable changes in this building since the last session. They might not call it a face-lifting that we have given the old lady at Queen's Park, but at least one of her double chins has been raised a bit. Starting right at the front door, you will have seen the new bright coloured tile flooring laid over most of the main floor, and the two main committee rooms have been refurbished, as has the government caucus room, the hon. members' personal office, the Lieutenant-Governor's suite, and several other rooms and offices.

I hope the hon. members are enjoying the new dining room and the civil servants are enjoying their new cafeteria. It is our intention to keep the members' dining room open year-round so that when a delegation is brought here during the off-season, or are here on business, they will have a comfortable dining room. I might say that the décor will be further improved before the next session.

Many have seen the improvements in the press gallery. This resulted from the accommodation becoming entirely inadequate for the increased number of reporters covering the proceedings of this House, not only for the newspapers, but for radio and television. We believe that this expansion will continue, but we hope that we have created enough new office space to take care of the next generation of reporters.

I believe hon. members will admit that it is difficult to accomplish as much as we have done in this building with our routine maintenance men. We have to take on extra staff and when the work is finished we have to lay off some.

However, this year hon. members will be exposed to some inconvenience; we are going to go ahead with the painting and decorating programme that we had intended to put off until after the session ended.

This may not employ all the men we had on in the summer and fall, but we are going to rotate the work so that while the men may not be employed full time, they will earn a considerable sum of money this winter. This programme will be carried on here and in the treasury building in the east block.

Some of these men will be employed on demolition jobs. Frequently, on our building sites there are existing buildings that must be demolished to make way for our new buildings, this is one field in which we can plan for complete winter work, and work for unskilled or semi-skilled men. For example, at the Orillia hospital we are planning to start construction on a new wing next year. The old wing could have been demolished as soon as it was vacated by removing patients to the Gravenhurst hospital which we purchased during the summer. Instead, this was a planned winter work; that building will be demolished this winter and the site cleared in time for construction next year.

Here in Toronto there are 4 projects that fall roughly into the same category. Buildings will be demolished at Ryerson institute, at the old Grace hospital on Huron street and on Richmond street. Some of these we could have demolished last summer, some we could wait until next summer to demolish, but instead we are going to demolish them this winter.

To return to the planning for the Queen's Park area, the changes here are all part of a master plan which eventually would see this building become almost strictly legislative in its function. That is to say, accommodation will be provided here for only those parts of government which are directly related to the proceedings of this House.

In this I would include such offices as the Lieutenant-Governor's office, Prime Minister's office, the Speaker's office, the offices of the leader of the Opposition and the Clerk of the House, and certain special services, such as the legislative library and the provincial archives.

It is almost essential that the Provincial Secretary and much of his department be here; the same is true of the Attorney-General's department. This list is by no means complete but is recited only as examples of the type of offices vital to the functioning of the House that we would plan to have here.

Included in this master plan are offices for members of the House. Present thinking is to provide the members of this Parliament with accommodation similar to accommodation provided to members of Parliament in Ottawa. The north wing, which has always been occupied by The Department of Education, might ultimately be the best place for the members—leaving the library where it is, of course. This is the type of thinking that is going into our master plan for this building; thinking that we hope will result in a dignified and yet functional centre of government.

More than 20,000 persons visited this building and took guided tours last year, and I believe a great many more will visit the building when the interior is made more attractive. We want to have a centre of government to which the people of Ontario will come with pride; one which will create a proper impression of the province in the minds of visitors from outside our borders.

I do not want to raise any false hopes among hon. members of this House—improved facilities will depend on our providing additional space for the persons who are going to be displaced from this building. That means construction on the St. Joseph's convent school property, the title of which we do not obtain until January 1, 1962.

Our assessment of space needs, in order to bring the government offices back to Queen's Park, is an additional 1.2 million square feet of usable office space. Now, this does not mean too much to a layman, but when you consider that this big new city hall that Toronto is planning has 716,000 gross square feet or 510,000 square feet of usable office space; you get some idea of our needs and how long it will take to fill them.

We do not intend to bring The Department of Highways back from Downsview, nor The Department of Transport's testing building. The functions of these two services do not suffer from their being removed from Queen's Park. However, it is generally considered that most of the rest of the government would function more efficiently if brought back into this area.

The planning which must precede construction for this move back to Queen's Park is exceedingly complex. Hundreds and hundreds of hours of planning have already been done; thousands more hours will have to be done before the first tender is called. We now consider that a group of buildings in a campus-like setting would be most suited to our needs. We are going to try to create an atmosphere of openness and space, both within and without these buildings.

We are already fully aware that, whatever we do, we shall be exposed to more sharpshooting by amateur architects than would be the case with an ordinary building. We will strive to make the architecture dignified, without being pompous; functional, without being boxlike; and modern, without being brash. At the same time, we hope to give it a Canadian flavour and incorporate Canadian materials almost exclusively.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Planning is extremely important to the second subject which I would like to discuss. Almost all our jobs are winter works. We try to time the letting of our contracts so that the buildings will be closed in and ready for extensive interior work throughout the winter.

Contractors on public works jobs do not close up shop and go south for the winter; it is one of the terms of our contracts that they must continue throughout the winter. I would like to read 3 sections of our general inspections and requirements to contractors to make sure that these works do continue throughout the winter, and they are:

1. The work of this project shall be carried forward with all possible speed at all times, and in this connection the contractor shall be required to commence work immediately the contract is awarded and to continue all operations throughout the whole 12 months of every complete year and all months of every partial year from the date of commencement of the work and until the work is completed and accepted by the architect.

2. The contractor shall be understood to have included in the net fixed sum tender figure, ample funds for the provision of all temporary heating and cold weather working measures during the cold weather period herein certified, in accordance with the requirements of the above and following clause of this section.

The term cold weather period used in the general instructions and requirements shall be understood to mean the period between September 15 of every year, and May 31 of every following year from the date of commencement of the work until the project is completed.

That is the part in our specification that is the requirement for the contractor to work during the winter.

I will give an example of good timing. At Port Arthur last spring, we let two major contracts. The clinical services building for the Ontario hospital was a $2.5 million job; the Lakehead teachers' college was a $750,000 job. The same contractor was the successful low bidder on both jobs, and he got started as quickly as he could.

The rough, outside work that requires a minimum of labour was done during the summer when there are most jobs open in the north. The buildings are closed in sufficiently that the skilled interior trades can work hard all winter.

I would just like to add a letter that I had from the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) on a recent visit there and addressed to myself. He says this:

I was in Port Arthur last weekend and while I was there went over the new addition to the entire hospital. I cannot too highly praise the work that has been done there. The staff were advising me that, exactly 6 months to the day after the first sod was turned, the entire brickwork on the outer structure was completed. I think this a tremendous task and should be pointed to with a great deal of pride and directed to the attention of all contractors engaged on government buildings.

I might say that that is a letter between the hon. Minister of Health and myself, but it points out the co-operation that does exist among the departments of government and the appreciation, I think, of what The Department of Public Works is doing.

Now, how does this work to the advantage of the community? The contractor tells me that he will have an average of about 100 men—I am speaking of the Port Arthur job—working each day throughout the winter. That means a payroll of about $2,500 per day. The contractor's head office is not in the Lakehead, but he does have a branch office there. All of the electrical, mechanical, plumbing and heating tradesmen are local men employed by local sub-contractors.

In fact, less than 10 per cent of the labour has been brought in from outside the Lakehead. The figure would be much lower than that if you excluded the specialized trades that are not represented in the Lakehead labour force, such as terrazzo men; and of course, on almost any building job, one, two or three supervisory personnel are brought in by the general contractor.

What do these 100 new jobs and $2,500 daily winter payroll mean to the Lakehead? Well, one recent study showed that when an industry hires 100 men in a community, it creates an additional 117 other jobs in that community. For the manufacturing industry, it is claimed that 131 more households are established, there are 393 more telephones, 66 more school children, 187 more motor vehicle registrations, 3 more retail establishments and $939,000 more retail sales per year.

Of course, the study which I quoted from was based on a continuing manufacturing industry. Unfortunately, no similar study has yet been made of the construction industry, but there must be a similar benefit. I believe that the 100 men who we are employing through the contractor at the Lakehead are keeping at least 100 others employed in the community, not to mention partial indirect employment of many others in the supplying fields.

We are asking our Department of Economics to conduct a study of the Goderich hospital project, to determine how many jobs are directly or indirectly created by this building. This will mean tracing the materials back to their source and following them through the various stages until they are actually part of the building. Among other things, it will also show the wages paid on the job to the various trades and the number of local men employed, as opposed to the number brought in from outside. We hope it will now show the effect on the economy of the community during and after construction.

We believe that by virtually eliminating day labour construction jobs on our buildings and replacing them by the public tender system, we have increased the buying power of our construction dollar by up to 30 per cent. This means just that many more jobs can be let and that many more persons employed in various parts of the province.

I would like to ask all the hon. members from the smaller communities what it would mean if a $2,500 daily payroll, such as is being paid at the Lakehead, was suddenly dropped into their community? If that payroll is kept up all winter long what do you suppose it is doing for the Chatham area and, indeed, all Kent county, to have more than 400 men employed at Cedar Springs each day?

We are rushing the Cedar Springs work to completion 6 months early to provide 12,050 urgently needed beds for mentally retarded children. We are also pumping $9,000 to $10,000 per day into that area by way of the payroll of the men who are doing that job. The same sort of thing is going on wherever we are building, and we have almost $100 million worth of building projects at one stage of development or another, from the drafting boards to the occupation stage.

As was said in the speech from the Throne, new Ontario hospital projects will be started at Owen Sound and at Palmerston during the coming year. We intend to call tenders for the Owen Sound job early enough so that the successful bidder will be able to start work as soon as the spring breakup comes. The Palmerston project will follow. In that way both these jobs will have portions closed-in sufficiently to continue work throughout the winter of 1961-1962.

The architectural branch is not alone in its planning of work to insure maximum winter employment. Our engineering branch takes pains to schedule work so that the smallest number of men possible is laid off during the winter.

I will give just 3 brief examples:

Each year, for the past several years, a programme of repairs to machinery and equipment used in the construction and maintenance of dams and locks has been carried out during the winter in the Huntsville and Port Arthur workshops. It would be possible to send this work out to private companies or do this work at other times of the year, but through careful programming we are able to do much of this work during the winter and keep our own men busy and employed the year round.

As far as hydraulic construction is concerned, one would think that most of this would have to end with the onset of winter, yet this winter my department is building a concrete fishway at the Nicholson dam near Alliston. True, this is not a very big job but it has been found practical to enclose the whole working area within a temporary building. This building will then be heated and men will work under similar conditions inside the building no matter what the weather is outside.

The third example is a construction technique used a couple of years ago at Port Carling where the river was being widened to increase water flow and reduce the chances of serious flooding. On this job a steam boiler was installed and pipes were later laid to the site. The edge of the river was sand-bagged outside the working area and the water inside was heated through the steam pipes to keep it from freezing. A new concrete wall was erected in this heated area and proved very successful. The men enjoyed it since working conditions were ideal and they could walk about in warm water in rubber boots.

This winter the following major jobs are underway: At Burlington an Ontario provincial police headquarters building worth $250,000 and a toll plaza administration building worth $185,000; at Brantford the Ontario school for the blind and an assembly hall worth $642,000 and an addition to the school, $80,000. At Byron there is work starting on a children's psychiatric research institute; at Belleville and Cornwall, Ontario provincial police headquarters buildings worth a total of $500,000. Both the last-mentioned jobs were recently let and much work will be done during this winter.

At Brighton, the agricultural services building is a $235,000 job that is coming along nicely. At Dryden the Ontario provincial police detachment building will cost more than $170,000. At Guelph there is a refrigerator store building that will cost about $240,000, and around the Ontario agricultural college, Ontario veterinary college and MacDonald institute there are a number of smaller jobs.

At Geraldton a $213,000 district office building will be completed this winter. At Goderich a $3,450,000 Ontario hospital is just underway and work will be carried on there for the next two winters. At Grafton a tender for a Department of Highways garage has just been let at $97,000; at Hamilton there is an 8-room addition to the teachers' college that is almost nearing completion at $360,000. At Trentville there is a girls' residence at $262,000 which is nearing completion.

At Kenora there are small jobs going on and completion of changes of the district jail and we will need more work there next winter. At Ontario hospital, London, there is continual work and power house improvements; at Lindsay the girls' training school is a $1.35 million job and this is well underway. Also, the boys' training school at Centralia should be continuing through next winter.

This list can go on and these are major jobs. I have spared hon. members a recitation of hundreds of smaller jobs that are underway, but which nonetheless provide a few jobs each in many small communities across the length and breadth of this province.

These are real winter works. These are not jobs just to create jobs, like some fancy economist outside the government would have us take on. They are jobs that are going to create capital resources that will add to the wealth of this province. They are jobs that future generations will reap dividends from, while at the same time helping this generation over a rough spot in the economy.

I would just like to add one point: As hon. members probably know, our contracts specify that working conditions shall equal those prevailing in the area in which the job is being done. The McLean building reports show an interesting increase in the cost of construction. These reports are based on taking 1935 to 1939 average costs as 100. On this basis material costs have gone up to 269.1 while cost of labour has jumped to 396.1. This produces a construction cost index of 328.6.

These tables show that in the last 4.25 years, hospital materials have gone up less than 14 points while labour costs have gone up almost 90 points. In the same period the federal bureau of statistics consumers' price index has gone up 11 points.

What this means is that while consumer prices have risen about 11 per cent, wages of construction workers have gone up something over 27 per cent on the average, I do not begrudge the construction workers their larger pay envelopes. We have a far larger and far more highly skilled body of construction workers today than we had only a few years ago. But I believe that my department and this government deserves considerable credit for doing what it can to see that good wages are paid on our construction projects and that these jobs go on winter and summer.

I have just half a page here that I would like to add, not as a Minister of Public Works, but it follows up some of the discussion on employment the other day. I would like to talk just as a farmer very briefly for a moment. There are just a few points that I would like to bring out.

Some of the people presently unemployed have a farm background and I wonder if many of these people have given any thought to working on the farm?

I point out that working conditions have changed greatly on the farm this past 15 years. Much of the drudgery has gone, much of the work is now done by machinery which is in itself a joy to operate. Living conditions are much improved, homes are supplied on many farms for married people, and I would say that wages on many farms are comparable to those paid in industries.

There is no unemployment on the farm; there is room for many experienced men on the farms at good wages. From my own experience it is difficult to get an answer from an advertisement placed in the paper for men wanted on the farm. Working on the farm offers many advantages today that were not thought possible a few years back, and I say again that any man with a farm background who is presently unemployed should take a good look out in the country. There might be an opportunity there which he never realized existed.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Before the adjournment of the debate may I ask the hon. Minister a question? Would he permit a question please?

I would like to know—I have heard him mention quite a few of the projects he is contemplating for the year 1961—I was given to understand last year that the teachers' college in the Windsor area was going to be done in 1961. Is the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Roberts) going to announce that project or does that come under The Department of Public Works?

Hon. Mr. Connell: That comes under my department, and plans are well underway for the teachers' college.

Realizing time was getting late, I left out several things in my prepared speech. In Windsor there is a $165,000 job going on at the Western institute of technology. The plans are going ahead on the teachers' college but I do not know just when the sod will be turned. Certainly plans are going ahead and we are waiting on some suggestions from the Essex county council and city council on some revisions as far as the provincial building is concerned.

We begin to find, in looking over the Windsor situation, and I think Michael Patrick, the mayor, will agree, that Windsor is possibly being looked after better than almost any part of the province.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, these last remarks of the hon. Minister's Throne speech were very interesting. If he would tell me what he had to offer I certainly could submit him some names of men from the Hamilton area who would be willing to work on farms, if they are going to get something that will sustain them. Certainly if he will let me know what he has to offer, I will offer him some names.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, I might if you do not mind, Mr. Speaker, offer my experiences on this. I was criticized for placing an advertisement for farm help, and I do not like people getting into my own private business. They can criticize me as Minister of Public Works—but I was criticized when I advertised for either a Dutch or Danish chap. I had specific reasons for doing that, because my farm manager is Dutch, but I was criticized very severely for being—what is the word we are using around here?—discriminatory.

So twice since I have put in advertisements and I have checked these people who were saying that I was being discriminatory; that I was not giving the ex-servicemen and our Canadian boys a chance. I have given them a chance each time to send me a man when I advertised for one, and I have had no answers from them.

I say, speaking as a farmer, I feel badly that we place advertisements in the paper and we cannot get answers. We need experienced men on the farm. It is pretty difficult to get along without experienced men, and many of the people in the cities and are unemployed have farm backgrounds. Conditions have changed on the farm, and I think the rural hon. members will agree with me in that many of the wages paid today are comparable to industry. It is not just a means to eke out an existence. There are good wages and good working conditions, and I think these people should take a better look, rather than complaining to almost everyone that there are no jobs available. There are plenty of jobs available on the farms and conditions are, for the most part, pretty good.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Before moving the adjournment of the House, there may be some bills on the order paper for Monday that could be advanced though we advanced a number today. There is one in particular that I expect will be spoken to, and that is The Legislative Assembly Amendment Act. If we are to follow the recommendations of the committee, it may be that some time would be available for private members' discussion, as it recommends Mondays and Fridays. In that case it is possible, in answer to the hon. leader of the Opposition's (Mr. Wintermeyer's) comment earlier, that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) might see fit to call this item that was under discussion and not completed today, but that will be a matter for him to determine.

The Throne speech debate will be the major feature on Monday and there will be a night session on Monday night.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Clerk of the House: The following petitions were brought up, laid on the table, read and received:

Of the city of Hamilton, praying that an Act may pass authorizing the regulation of the manufacture, transport and storage of dangerous gases, liquids and substances, and for other purposes.

Of the town of Cochrane, praying that an Act may pass authorizing a debenture issue for high school construction.

Of the township of St. Joseph, praying that an Act may pass authorizing a debenture issue for high school construction.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. N. Allan moves, seconded by hon. L. M. Frost, that the House will tomorrow resolve itself into the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Provincial Treasurer advise us what estimates will be brought down tomorrow?

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): We will explain that in a moment or two.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that the estimates which are being brought to the House today are those of The Department of the Prime Minister, the Provincial Auditor, the office of the Lieutenant-Governor, and The Department of Energy Resources.

Later in the week we will have the estimates of The Department of Insurance, The Department of Mines, The Department of Travel and Publicity, and The Department of Economics. I might also inform the hon. members that relevant sections of the public accounts will be placed on the desks of the hon. members today, so that they may have an opportunity of looking over those before the estimates are considered.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by hon. Mr. Frost, that this House will tomorrow resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Is there going to be any budget speech from the hon. Provincial Treasurer on this occasion?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I will explain further before the orders of the day.

I would advise you, Mr. Speaker, that I have the traditional message here from the administrator, signed by his own hand, and the estimates are attached.

Mr. Speaker, the administrator of the government of the province of Ontario transferred estimates of certain sums required for the office of the Lieutenant-Governor, The Department of the Prime Minister, The Department of Energy Resources, and the office of the Provincial Auditor for the year ending March 31, 1962, and recommends them to the legislative assembly; Toronto, December 5, 1960.

Mr. Speaker, if we have the next order—the introduction of bills—before the orders of the day, we can then refer to the order of business.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

NORTHEASTERN UNIVERSITY

Mr. A. Johnston moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting Northeastern University."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, concerning the order of business, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) suggested on Friday that there would very probably be a night session tonight. If it meets the convenience of the House, I think it would fit better into the order of business not to have a night session tonight, but to have one on Tuesday and Thursday, this week and next week.

If that is satisfactory, then tomorrow we would meet at 3 o'clock, and I would like to devote the first hour of that day to the discussion of the portable pension bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden). I think that can be printed by tomorrow, can it not?

Clerk of the House: I will call right now, sir.

Hon. Mr. Frost: In any event, that would take the place of a discussion of a private member's bill or motion today—we could have that tomorrow.

I would propose that tomorrow we call 3 of the estimates that were given today, the Prime Minister's, the Provincial Auditor's and the Lieutenant-Governor's.

On Thursday, I would propose to call either the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources or The Department of Economics. Tomorrow I think we will try to table the estimates of either one of those. I would prefer not to call tomorrow—and I think the House would agree—estimates that require a great deal of detail work.

I may say the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) has asked me to advise that the Hydro report will be tabled also. It might be more satisfactory to let that matter stand until a week from tomorrow, instead of this coming Thursday, in which case I would call the estimates of The Department of Economics. These, while important, do not involve the detail that perhaps the other might.

I think, sir, that covers the situation. If there are any questions I will answer them now. I also have another matter to which I wanted to refer.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Did I understand the hon. Provincial Treasurer correctly when he said a moment ago, in regard to the business of the House, that the hon. Prime Minister will be calling the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity during this session before adjournment?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it is on the list. It will be ready in any event.

Mr. Wren: Well, I would recall your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the hassle we had about that last session. I would respectfully request that the estimates of that department be left until such time as those people who come long distances to make representation can be heard.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, we will have a look at that at the time.

Before the orders of the day, I also want to give this explanation to the House. Last Thursday night, in times that were crowded with other things in Quebec, I received a telegram from the clerk of the city of Ottawa, in connection with the fact that Mr. David Burgess, a candidate for the board of control, had died. It raised the question of the election proceeding in that city.

It was certainly difficult for me to meet the appeals from the city of Ottawa at 8 o'clock that evening, and I immediately endeavoured to get in touch with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) and the Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Carter). I did not succeed until around 11 o'clock that night.

The situation is this. The city of Ottawa, like the city of Toronto, has a composite ballot—all of the offices being subject to election on one ballot.

The difficulties of a composite ballot were pointed out years ago to these municipalities. However, for economy and convenience, they decided to go ahead until this year. Unfortunately, in both Toronto and Ottawa, they had difficulties.

There is an express condition, I think, of section 75 of The Municipal Act, providing for a new date of election in the event of a candidate dying.

This telegram informed me of the unanimous resolution of the city council of the city of Ottawa to go ahead with the election. It pointed out that all the deputy returning officers were employed, the places for polling were engaged, and the advance poll was to start the next day.

I was in a position where I had to make the very best decision I could make, and this seemed to be to permit the election to go ahead, subject to supporting in this House an amendment or an addition to the Ottawa private bill, validating those proceedings.

I have discussed the matter with the officials of The Department of Municipal Affairs and I think we ought to have a look at the sections of these Acts to see if they require amendment.

If they do, make them; if they do not, our decision should be taken as to future general procedure.

I do not think we should be faced with making decisions of this sort. In the Toronto case it happened that the death of one of the candidates was so close to the date of nomination it was possible to have another nomination.

In Ottawa, if the whole election were postponed, it would be unfair to the candidates who were really not affected by the situation other than through the composite ballot.

When the Ottawa private bill comes before the House, we will thoroughly review this situation, and submit to the House provisions we think will take care of this thing in the future.

Before the orders of the day, sir, I should also like to refer to this occasion as commemorating the twelfth anniversary of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights.

This great document, with its recognition of the inherent dignity and the inalienable rights of all members of the human family, is the universal expression of those great concepts of freedom set forth in the Magna Carta, trial by jury, Habeas Corpus, the Bill of Rights and other things so associated with our democratic life here and elsewhere in the western world.

I am sure that all of the hon. members of this Legislature are very proud of the fact that, several years before the universal declaration of rights was signed, we, ourselves, took the first important step in the establishment of the human rights code for our own province. As a result, it became public policy that every person—the native-born, the New Canadian and the stranger within our gates—is free and equal in dignity and rights, regardless of race, colour, creed, nationality, ancestry or place of origin.

For some months now the anti-discrimination commission, under the fine leadership of Mr. Louis Fine and, with the active assistance of the hon. members of the Legislature, has been carrying on an intensive campaign to develop a wider area of co-operation, and to create a climate of opinion more favourable to the acceptance and the practice of the principles on which the code is based. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) will, no doubt, be reporting to the Legislature at a later date upon the excellent results of this work.

May I now say, speaking for the government, that I am sure that all of the hon. members of the Legislature are deeply grateful to the churches, trade unions, and other community organizations who have given such wholehearted support to this very important activity.

I also compliment the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) on his initiative in proclaiming December 4 and December 11 as Human Rights week in the schools of Ontario.

It cannot be repeated too often that nothing could bring more disastrous results to a province and a nation such as ours as the practice of racial or religious intolerance and discrimination. We rejected that course when we took the path to nationhood, a century ago, choosing instead, as the great D'arcy McGee put it:

To cultivate the true catholicity of spirit which embraces all creeds and races in order to make our province a great new northern nation.

The adoption of that very wise decision has brought us rich rewards indeed, down through our history.

Our original partnership of French and English has, since the turn of the century, been greatly expanded so that our Canadian family is now made up of people drawn from all corners of the earth. They have brought with them many of the skills and the creative talents which have played their full part in the development of our province and our nation. There is no area of life in which the greatness of their contribution to our country is not apparent. Their contribution has been made richer because they were made to feel that they had not come into a melting pot.

Some weeks ago, I said that no one will deny that there are pockets of prejudice and animosity still operating in Ontario. We must realize, however, that these are old evils and are not limited to any one group or groups. They have always been the ugly companions of unhappy souls, and the scourge of civilized society.

It has been said that nothing is more terrible than ignorance in action. The practice of racial and religious discrimination is nothing short of that and must be abhorred by all intelligent men and women.

Now what is the aim and the purpose of our Ontario Human Rights code? I think it was well stated in the first bulletin issued by the anti-discrimination commission which I hope has been read by every hon. member of the Legislature. It speaks of a Canada in which men and women of every race, creed and colour will be able to walk in dignity with their rights, their traditions and their religious beliefs respected; where they will be able to live in mutual understanding, in co-operation and goodwill; where native-born and New Canadians will be able to unite their efforts in helping their country advance to a higher destiny in the century that lies ahead. When that is achieved, we shall have a twentieth-century Canadianism at its best.

Earlier this year, it was our privilege and pleasure to listen to a moving address by our distinguished Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay). I am sure the hon. members will agree with me that the closing paragraph of that address is particularly appropriate as we begin to observe the anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 12 years ago, and as we continue our efforts to win wider acceptance and practice of our own human rights code.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor at that time said:

May we strive to keep this bountiful province of Ontario safe for democracy. Now what appears to me to be equally important is that democracy shall be kept safe for Ontario; where the answer to error is not terror; where democracy is achieved without vulgarity, and excellence without arrogance; where the majority is without tyranny and the minority without fear.

Very great words, sir, by a great man.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, if I may add my comments to those of the hon. Prime Minister, I would say that it is a pleasure, as always, to join in comments of this sort.

I think all of us feel inside what Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I believe it was, once said:

Our very nature seems to indicate and demand of us that we try to attain that degree of excellence that may only be attained in eternity for human beings in this world.

I think, Mr. Speaker, what I am trying to say and what Laurier had in mind, is that all political parties must strive to attain the ideals of the city or the society that we have in mind—something that we can contribute to, one that we can participate in, one that in all probability we will never attain, the perfect city or the perfect human society. But we must make a contribution, and that contribution must be continually made so that we will improve the society that we have.

I think great strides have been made in the declarations of human rights. The declarations themselves will do nothing, however, unless we implement those principles in our own legislative bodies and in our own lives. I think we are agreed, that we practice these virtual tolerances in respect to all persons. But something more, I think, is required here in Canada today—something more that will give a lead to all of the world in these difficult days.

Mr. Adlai Stevenson expressed it very effectively when he addressed a group in Toronto. He said that there is a real battle going on now in this world. This is the battle for human rights, the battle for the significance of what a human being is. Is he a physical thing only? Or is he something more?

This battle has not been going on for only the last few years; it has been going on for centuries. I hope that we will make our contribution to the outcome of that battle with meaningful words. Platitudes will not be the answer. We have to take a definite position.

Not all people in this world believe in the human rights with which we are in accord, and I think we are going to have to make some very difficult decisions. I was very proud of the statement that I read in the newspaper this morning, attributed to Mr. Stevenson, and I only hope that it will become part of American policy. Maybe our own Canadian policy should look to that type of spiritual direction and spiritual ambition as part and parcel of human rights.

The term "human rights" does not mean that we deny our beginning and our end and our purpose. It does not mean that we simply treat all alike and leave it at that in a superficial way. It means that we begin to recognize what we are, where we are going and how we are going to get there.

These are the challenges we must move forward to meet. Human rights mean more than working conditions and more than the tolerances of which we have spoken. They mean that we must begin to realize that we have a responsibility to lead in the world; to overcome some of the positive intolerances that exist in eastern Europe and other parts of the world today.

What I am trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that there are difficult decisions. I am not one to believe that we must merely practice tolerance in human rights by the expression thereof. But the time may well come when we will have to speak out for those human rights and for the rights of other people that do not have them at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, as always it is a pleasure to join in this tribute. I would only hope, and I make this suggestion to the hon. Prime Minister, that on other similar occasions of non-political connotations, that some hon. members be given—the Opposition be given—some advance notice. It is rather difficult to talk offhand on such an important subject.

I merely want to underscore the words of the hon. Prime Minister in joining in this tribute.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I would take the opportunity to join with the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition in paying tribute to this week in recognition of human rights. I would first commend the government for the legislation and educational advancement made in this regard up to the present time, but I am sure that we must agree to continue our efforts in the future. Certainly the recognition of human rights should be practiced 365 days a year, if it is going to have the full meaning and intent.

We must recognize, Mr. Speaker, that racial prejudice across the world is one of the major obstacles in our objective of world peace and freedom. Even here at home we often hear in the streets and in the plants the terms "that Hunkey," "that Wop," "that Jew," "that Chirper," and so on—not very often in unkind terms—rather in a sort of unconscious way. I am sure that we all hope that the increased educational efforts of the anti-discrimination commission will help to reduce and finally eliminate this kind of attitude.

We in Ontario have legislative Acts in regard to discriminatory action in public notices, signs, and advertising. We have legislative Acts in regard to fair rights in employment, and we have Acts in regard to fair rights in public facilities and accommodation.

In the recent past we have had evidence of outright discrimination in regard to public housing, and I feel we must remember these acts of discrimination and give consideration to amendments that may help to rectify this situation.

Prejudice, Mr. Speaker, is a state of mind and of thought. Discrimination is the act. Education certainly will help change the attitude to prejudice, but we have to continue and encourage our educational efforts to change these attitudes. We know that one's property is protected by law and if one steals property from another he is punished by law. So certainly should one's human rights be protected by law if they are taken away.

Mr. Speaker, white Christian North Americans do not realize that they are a minority on this globe. Let us just pretend that you have not yet been born, Mr. Speaker, but will be born this year somewhere on the planet. Let us try to estimate your chances of living a happy, healthy and decent and useful life. If you were born this year, and on the same day more than 200,000 babies were born all over the world, you would have less than one chance in 20 of being born in Canada or the United States. You would probably be coloured. You and the 200,000 other babies who would be the day's baby crop are going to be born all over the planet, and there are not many openings in the places where the white races live.

Your chances of being born white this year would not be more than 1 in 3. Your chances of being Chinese would be 1 in 4, of being born in India better than 1 in 9. You would have only about 1 chance in 4 of being born a Christian. It is far more likely you would be born a Confucian, Buddhist, Mohammedan or a Taoist.

If you were born in North America, you would probably live longer than one year, but if you were born in India—which is more likely—you would have only little better than a 1 in 4 chance of living more than a year. Let us with full warmth join the human race.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): I beg leave to present to the House the thirty-fourth report of the liquor control board of Ontario for the 12-month fiscal year ending March 31, 1960.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I rise on a matter of personal privilege. The Toronto Daily Star in its edition of Friday, December 2, 1960, in a news item reporting a meeting of the York township ratepayers' election meeting, stated as follows, among other things:

This meeting produced one of the hottest fireworks of the current election campaign. The purpose of the meeting was to hear a discussion on "Morality in public office." This fell flat when only 2 of 4 scheduled participants turned up. They were Donald C. MacDonald, Ontario CCF leader, and Marvin Gelber, a former Liberal candidate. Municipal Affairs Minister W. K. Warrender and Allan Grossman PC, St. Andrew, newly appointed Minister without Portfolio, were the other two panelists but sent telegraphed regrets that they could not attend.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know what other people's views are in respect to what constitutes a "panelist" but I rather imagine that a "scheduled participant" or "panelist" presupposes that such participant or panelist has agreed to act as such. This certainly is not so in my case. I received a wire on Wednesday, November 30 at about 2 p.m., inviting me to attend the meeting the following day. Some of the hon. members of this House know I was slated to be host to a very distinguished gathering on Thursday, December 1, that is the following day, when this ratepayers' election meeting was to be held. I, therefore, immediately wired back that I would not attend.

Mr. Speaker, in any case I think it is highly improper for a member of this Legislature, let alone a Minister of the Crown, to inject himself into a municipal election campaign, particularly just a few days before the election. Why I was privileged to receive an invitation, even at such a late hour, is beyond me, as this ratepayers' group represents no one in my riding. In any case, Mr. Speaker, the article would leave the impression that I did agree to participate and failed to show up. I would ask the worthy representative of this great newspaper in the press gallery to please arrange for his editor to correct this false impression.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I just comment briefly on that because there was an implied criticism in my direction? If I receive an invitation from a group of my constituents to come and speak on the issue of public morality I will go at any time, just before a municipal or any other election. I did not participate in the election—as the Star story indicated—as far as supporting the candidates themselves was involved. The hon. Minister without Portfolio was invited to come, as a matter of fact I am informed he was one of many members of the Progressive-Conservative party invited and they all turned the invitation down. At least he should be given credit—he sent a wire.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 17, "An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, might I here make the report to the House which I stated I would make some days ago, following which sir, I would ask the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) to give the legal opinion of his officers and himself.

There are several matters in relation to this proposed amendment which I should like to discuss with the House and my inquiries into this have gone very much further than I first intended. However, I shall take up the matter of the position of the member-elect for Temiskaming (Mr. Hoffman) first of all, and then I shall refer to some other matters. I have a report from the chairman of the civil service commission, which I shall read and explain to the House:

Mr. Philip Hoffman, forest ranger 4, resigned from the Ontario civil service voluntarily. His superior, district forester W. B. Clarke of North Bay, on September 2, 1960, reported that Mr. Hoffman's resignation was effective from August 19, 1960, which was his final day of duty. All departmental and civil service proceedings were based upon that fact.

Accordingly, he ceased to be a civil servant and an employee of The Department of Lands and Forests as of August 19, 1960 and, therefore, was fully entitled to engage in any other employment from that date which he, in his wisdom, saw fit. A civil servant who resigns is entitled by statute, regulation or by the customs of the service which have applied for very many years, to:

(a) His accumulated holidays which have not been taken. In Mr. Hoffman's case he was entitled to 31 days' vacation which, by the customs of the department, are paid bi-monthly, until the complete payment is made. This is part of his retirement. It does not represent wages for work performed after his resignation, but it is an earned credit as of the date of his resignation, owing to him, and it is fixed as to number of days and equivalent salary at that time. This is a routine departmental procedure.

(b) The civil servant is entitled to his accumulation of sick leave credits which is paid in the form of a gratuity payment. In Mr. Hoffman's case this amounted to $2,217.71. This amount may be payable, at the option of the civil servant, monthly or in a lump sum.

(c) He is entitled to his retirement allowance, based upon the application of The Superannuation Act. In Mr. Hoffman's case his pension is vested and he is entitled to start drawing upon the same at age 60. This pension is effective from the day of resignation, August 19, 1960. The accumulation of vacation credits owing to an employee after resignation in no way affects the pension; nor is there a deduction for the same.

It might be explained, in civil service rules, customs and procedures that if a civil servant dies, the vacation credits owing are payable in a lump sum, as is the sick leave credit gratuity. The pension applies from the date of death to the widow or dependent children.

Concerning the civil servant resigning, the civil servant receives any pension entitlement from the effective date of resignation. His vacation and sick leave credits are at that time earned and are fixed as of the date of resignation. In the case of Mr. Hoffman this was August 19, 1960, when his entitlement for the regular credits upon separation became fixed and, according to the rules and practices applying to all civil servants, were payable as of that time.

With respect to resignation, there are many cases where the day after his resignation the civil servant enters employment elsewhere. In such cases, the entitlement to vacation adjustment and separation gratuity in the form of sick leave credits are payable to him in the ordinary course as above outlined. It does not interfere with his right to accept employment elsewhere and they are treated as credits which are earned at the date of his resignation.

As far as Mr. Hoffman is concerned, there were the following credits due to him effective and based upon his retirement on August 19, 1960:

1. Vacation credits—31 working days—$618.27. The 31 days' vacation credit earned by Mr. Hoffman results from the fact that he had over 26 years' service which qualifies a civil servant for 4 weeks' vacation a year and, since he had not taken his full vacation in 1959, this credit had been earned at the time of resignation.

On this account Mr. Hoffman has received 3 payments in accordance with departmental practices, namely $161.29 on August 24, 1960; $208.43 on September 9; and $208.18 on September 23, 1960. No further payments have been made and, therefore, the balance of $40.32 is due to him.

2. Accumulated sick leave credits entitlement—321.5 days. This works out to a gratuity entitlement of 161 calendar days, amounting to $2,217.71. Therefore, as of this date, Mr. Hoffman is entitled to the balance of vacation credits of $40.32 and sick leave gratuity of $2,217.71, making a total of $2,258.03.

It should be noted that payments for both vacation credits and sick leave credits are charged to the supply votes for salaries and wages in each department. There is no special fund voted for this purpose, the reason being that they are, in fact, earned credits arising from services up to the date of termination of such service and, therefore, are part of the vote for salaries and wages.

In the case of vacation credits, they are paid in the same manner as salary payments and based upon the salary rates. The purpose of this is that the payment to the former civil servant is facilitated and is made to him in the regular manner. It is not necessary to make any adjustment in what would be otherwise routine payments until the amount of such credits is satisfied.

In connection with sick leave credits, they are payable monthly in exactly the same way, subject to the civil servant at his or her option receiving the payment in a lump sum. The sick leave credits are payable monthly and are paid by the department in question in the same routine as the vacation credits are paid. The same are charged to the salary vote and there is no special fund set up for taking care of these because they are an earned part of salary and are payable to any civil servant under certain conditions, that is, dependent upon meeting the required length of service.

Although both vacation payments and sick leave gratuities are paid in the same manner as payroll payments, they should not be confused in any way with salary. This is done for purposes of convenience both to the department and to the retired civil servant.

2. The above report concerns Mr. Hoffman solely. However, there are other members of the legislative assembly of Ontario who have rights under The Teachers' Superannuation Act, and the following particulars have been obtained from the teachers' superannuation commission. The credits are as of the end of June, 1960.

Mr. Maurice Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich) is a contributor to the teachers' superannuation fund as an employee of the Windsor separate schools. He has a total credit in the superannuation fund of 25 years, 7 months.

Mr. Rene Brunelle (Cochrane North) contributed to the teachers' superannuation fund for a period of 8.75 months in 1941-1942, when he taught at Roman Catholic separate school No. 4, Calvert.

Mr. Alex Carruthers (Durham) is a contributor to the teachers' superannuation fund as an employee of the Port Hope public school board. He has a total service credit of approximately 28 years.

Dr. W. J. Dunlop (Eglinton) was a teacher in various schools for a total of 17 years up to 1920, and was a contributor to the teachers' superannuation fund from its beginning in April, 1917. In 1942 these contributions were refunded since he was at that time the director of university extension and publicity for the University of Toronto.

Mr. Donald Morrow (Ottawa West) was a contributor to the teachers' superannuation fund as an employee of the Ottawa public school board. He has not contributed since 1954 but at that time he had approximately 25 years' credit.

Mr. Bernard Newman (Windsor-Walker-ville) is a contributor to the teachers' superannuation fund as an employee of the Windsor board of education. His total credit in the fund is approximately 23 years, 6 months.

Dr. M. Phillips (Grey North) has a credit of 3 months established April to June, 1917, as a teacher at school section No. 18, Melancthon.

Mr. Leo Troy (Nipissing) was a contributor to the teachers' superannuation fund and is now in receipt of a service pension which was effective January 1, 1960. His pension is a result of 38 years, 5 months of teaching service credit.

It should be noted that a member of the legislative assembly, pursuant to The Teachers' Superannuation Act and the regulations thereunder, may re-establish his credit if he teaches 20 days in a school year by paying for the period of service as a member of the legislative assembly. (Section 48, regulation 8(1a).) Accordingly, several of the above members could re-establish credit in the fund by returning to teaching for a minimum period of 20 days.

I think that it is the clear intention of the assembly that these teachers could re-establish themselves in the teachers' superannuation fund at any time. I do not think the fact that they are members of the assembly should be in any way a bar to that.

I might explain that I have gone into this matter myself. I am going to ask the hon. Attorney-General to read the opinion given by the law—certainly not the opinion which he himself is prepared to make in the matter. In connection with the member-elect for Temiskaming, I am quite satisfied that the acceptance of sick leave credits and the payment for accumulated holidays, all of which crystallized on August 19, 1960, in no way affects his right to sit in the House. In Mr. Hoffman's case, of course, it is clear under The Legislative Assembly Act that the relevant date is September 29. I am perfectly satisfied that there is not the slightest doubt of his entitlement to take those credits either in monthly or bi-monthly payments or in a lump sum without in any way prejudicing his right to sit in this House.

In connection with superannuation I am satisfied that the opinion of the law officers would be the same. There is an anomalous situation, however, and as a matter of fact it has never been recognized to this moment as far as I know. In the years I have been here I have never heard the matter mentioned.

A person who is receiving allowances or entitled to receive allowances either from the civil service superannuation fund or from the teachers' fund, is called upon to make votes to that fund, usually in the form of supplementary estimates. This has been the situation for some years past. I also believe that in the estimates, amounts are given by the government to match the payments of the civil servant.

That is the only place I could see where there really could be any question, on the point that the House itself is asked to vote monies which, of course, strengthen and support the fund from which the member is drawing superannuation. I am perfectly satisfied that was never ever questioned. It was never questioned here, for instance, when the bill providing for pensions for members and officers was passed last session.

There is an exception in that bill providing that the pension shall not affect the right to draw from these other pensions. I mention this by way of pointing out the fact that it was never considered by any stretch of the imagination that these things would affect the member's right to sit in this House.

When we begin to look at it, there are other matters. This section is designed to be broad enough to meet this. For instance, an old age pension payable by Ottawa is a payment affected by our Legislative Assembly Act and therefore it would seem to be fit and proper that it should be covered. A person who is 70 years of age is by right in this country entitled to that pension, and yet it might be arguable that the acceptance of the pension would affect the member's seat.

Now, sir, there are other matters also. These matters, I think, should be covered by resolution of the House. I think it is proper that there should be the exception to section 10 which sets out the additional exceptions to the Act. It seems that is the proper way of doing it so that there is no question of doubt. The matter is not then dependent upon legal opinion or upon interpretation, but it is met fully and effectively by the House itself.

There are, for instance, conditions in the payments made by The Department of Agriculture, where there could definitely be some question raised. I do not think it was ever intended in this House that they should be raised, but let me give this as an example:

If a farmer-member of this House has a herd which is affected by TB, and that herd is destroyed, and he receives payment from the government—I guess the federal government, in that case—it is arguable that his seat would be affected. There is a matter of agricultural lime—on a bounty paid upon agricultural lime used for farming—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Not a bounty—a subsidy.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, that is right. Now the provincial auditor even raised this point: that if a person is a member, for instance, of a fair board, and there is a subsidy paid to the fair board in connection with rain or hail or something of the sort, that this raises the question of disqualification.

There is another point, raised with me by some hon. members, in relation to buying or paying for certain services with The Department of Lands and Forests: The purchase of trees, for instance, or the acceptance of advice and the payment for the same. I think that is in a totally different position, for this reason. The member is paying for a service to which all people are entitled. In the other case the person is receiving a payment which is not common to all people in the province.

Another point is the right of a member sitting here to pay premiums or to accept benefits under The Hospital Insurance Act. Those things were never contemplated at any time. I do not give notice of this now because I want the law officers to look at it, and this may not cover the point, but I would propose that the House in its wisdom adopt this Act, and under the resolution section I would submit this resolution:

RESOLUTION:

THAT no person shall be ineligible as a member of the assembly, by reason of his receiving, or having received or agreed to receive, compensation in respect of any regulation of The Department of Agriculture.

IT IS FURTHER RESOLVED that no person shall be ineligible as a member of the assembly by reason of his paying or having paid or agreed to pay for services, materials or things in respect of any regulation of The Department of Lands and Forests and The Department of Agriculture.

IT IS FURTHER RESOLVED that no person shall be ineligible as a member of the assembly by reason of entering into an insurance contract with the Ontario hospital services commission and having paid any premium or having received any benefit by reason of such insurance contract.

I do not give that as a notice, sir, but the resolution could be passed after the House has considered this enactment.

I could give the legal opinion myself, but I think it might be better if the House would agree to hear the hon. Attorney-General on the legality as it affects members at the present time, without the passing of the Act.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has given a very clear and complete statement in connection with the position in both phases of it. I think, however, as this is a matter that has involved a considerable amount of study and consideration that it would be helpful for the future to have the opinion given in this particular case by Mr. Eric Silk, Assistant Deputy Attorney-General, today, and concurred in by the Deputy Attorney-General and myself. In regards to my own views I will say something at the end. I will read the opinion, then, as provided by Mr. Silk and addressed to the hon. Prime Minister:

You have requested me to furnish you with an opinion regarding the eligibility of Mr. Philip Hoffman to sit as a member of the legislative assembly in the event that he accepts certain payments which relate to his period of service in The Department of Lands and Forests of this government.

It is my understanding that Mr. Hoffman joined the public service in 1924, that he resigned and ceased to be an employee of this government in any capacity as of August 19, 1960; that he was officially nominated as a candidate for the riding of Temiskaming on September 15, 1960, and that, as a result of a by-election on September 29, 1960, he became a member of the Legislature.

The payments which I have referred to above are:

(a) a deferred annuity under subsection 1 of section 12 of The Public Service Superannuation Act, 1960;

(b) payments in respect of credits for regular attendance order, regulation 135-53-reg. 4, and

(c) payments in respect of vacation leave of absence credits, regulation 135-53-reg. 7.

I have examined the relevant provisions of The Legislative Assembly Act, and I quote first of all subsection 1 of section 8:

8(1) Except as hereinafter specially provided, no person accepting or holding any office, commission or employment in the service of the government of Canada, or the government of Ontario, at the nomination of the Crown or at the nomination of any of the officers of the government of Canada, or the government of Ontario, to which any salary, fee, wage, allowance, emolument or profit of any kind is attached, shall be eligible as a member of the assembly or shall sit or vote therein.

That is contained in the revised statutes of 1937, brought forward.

There seems no doubt that in view of the facts stated above, the provision does not interfere with Mr. Hoffman's right to sit as a member.

Then I quote section 9:

9. No person holding or enjoying, undertaking, or executing directly or indirectly alone or with another, by himself, or by the position of a trustee or third person, any contract or agreement with Her Majesty, or with any public officer or department with respect to the public service of Ontario, or under which any public money of Ontario is to be paid for any public service, any work, matter or thing shall be eligible, as a member of, or sit, or vote in the assembly.

And, again, the revised statutes of 1937, chapter 12, section 10, of course.

Let me comment upon the term "contract," as used in the provision. It seems unlikely that Mr. Hoffman's employment would be encompassed by the term. A public servant on the permanent staff is appointed by the Crown during pleasure, which appears distinguishable from the contract relationship. This view was fortified by the fact that such situations are already dealt with in the Act by section 8. Let us consider the precise nature of the right to payment that obtained in each of the classes of payment enumerated above.

If upon the date of separation from the service these payments are to be regarded as rights that the employee has earned as of the date and in respect of which he is entitled to be paid in consideration of his past services, then there can be no question of Mr. Hoffman's right to sit, notwithstanding the payment to him of those amounts. Dealing with deferred annuities, I understand that Mr. Hoffman's situation falls within subsection 1 of section 12 of The Public Service Superannuation Act, 1960, and I quote it:

12(1) Every contributor who has contributed continuously to the fund in respect of 10 or more years and who ceases to be employed before he is 65 years of age, and who is not entitled to an allowance under this part, is entitled to a deferred annuity.

Clearly, Mr. Hoffman is entitled to such payments as of his cessation of employment. This right arises not because of his holding any office, commission or employment in the service of the government of Ontario, nor because of any contract or agreement with Her Majesty referring to those two sections, 8 and 9. It is a statute-given right.

Turning next to payments in respect to credits for regular attendance, I quote from the regulations under The Public Service Act:

4(5) Commencing with August 1, 1944, there may be paid to a person not then entitled to a superannuation allowance having more than 5 years' service, who ceases to be a civil servant, or to his personal representative, or failing a personal representative, such other person as the commission may determine, an amount computed on the basis of his pay at the date of leaving the service for a period equal to 50 per cent of the value of his credits or fraction thereof, but the amount shall not (a) exceed 6 months' pay, or (b) be computed on any credits earned by a civil servant after he ceases to contribute to the fund.

Here, also, the right to payment is created by the statute and comes into being upon cessation of employment. I do not overlook the permissive form of the enactment which does not affect the matters under consideration. The right offends against neither of the prohibiting provisions.

Finally, dealing with payments in respect of vacation leave of absence, the relevant portion of the regulations appears to be:

(7) Vacation leave of absence for civil servants shall be:

(a) Three weeks in each year during the first 25 years in the service and

(b) Four weeks in each year of his service thereafter.

Applying the provision to the instant situation, Mr. Hoffman on August 19 was entitled to leave of absence at the rate of 4 weeks in each year of his service. I have been advised that he was entitled to 31 days' vacation.

The practical view, having regard to administrative practices, is, that as of August 19, he is entitled to be paid an amount calculated at his current salary rate for the period mentioned. Upon that concept, such payment would fall into the same category as the classes of payment already dealt with.

This principle is borne out by the well-established custom that, as of his date of separation, a former employee may engage in any employment he wishes; and that his right to do so is not impeded by payments for vacation leave of absence credits.

That opinion is signed by E. H. Silk, Assistant Deputy Attorney-General.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister, in reading Mr. Collins' report, pointed out very definitely that the accumulated holidays are, by custom of the department, paid bi-monthly until they are paid; and that they consist of an earned credit as of the date of termination, and that credit is paid to the person entitled thereto.

In this particular case, the earned credits were ascertained as of August 19, 1960, the date of termination. The nomination occurred on September 15.

There is no particular significance in that date in relation to the problem here because, under The Election Act, the reference there to eligibility refers quite clearly only to people who are at that time members of the House of Commons, or senators, or in that classification. If there is a date on which one has to focus attention, it is election day, September 29.

With that in mind, and having reviewed his situation personally as well as with the help of the members of my department, and having the somewhat doubtful quality of being a lawyer myself, I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. Speaker, that—apart from the legislation which is now before the House—Mr. Hoffman would be entitled to take his seat, and could do so with complete assurance of safety, and with the right to vote and act as a member of the Legislature at this time.

The hon. Prime Minister has outlined the particular need for the Act, and particularly the part of it which extends the exemption.

It was enlightening to me, sir, to note that something like 10 per cent of the membership of this House is in the category of the teaching profession. This is somewhat higher than I had appreciated until I heard the enumeration here today.

The bill before the House covers then that extended exemption by way of subsection (m) of section 10, the exception section of the Act, and also includes the added words at the beginning of section 9, "except as authorized by resolution of the assembly," which of course is merely providing for a procedure for the future and in itself is not applicable to any particular case at the present time.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two comments on this matter.

The hon. Prime Minister, in his resolution, read quite a compendious list of types and species of payments that are made to hon. members of the legislative assembly. I do not think the list was complete, sir, and perhaps a further study should be welcomed in order to ascertain if such a resolution is introduced in all types of payments, especially one that I particularly have in mind.

The Legislative Assembly Act contains, among its provisions, a section directed specifically against lawyers. I do not quarrel with that, but I see nothing wrong with a lawyer making an application to the unsatisfied judgment fund on behalf of a client.

The fund, with respect of costs, makes a payment, I believe, of $35 to the lawyer for preparation of the application. The other costs—the party and party costs—are paid out in the name of the client.

The matter of the client's payment to the solicitor, be he a member of the legislative assembly or otherwise, is a matter between the client and the solicitor.

However, I have been worried about this payment of $35 that the fund makes directly to the solicitor, when there may be conflict between a member of the legislative assembly and the accepting of monies paid out of the consolidated revenue fund.

I would now like to speak on a matter which has bothered all of us on the Opposition side, and I speak for all of my hon. colleagues.

I want to say by way of preamble in addressing these comments to the House, sir, through you, that we are in no way decrying the results which were handed down by those good folk in Temiskaming.

You may recall that Temiskaming is the place I call home. And I may add that the member-elect for Temiskaming was fortunate enough to be the recipient of the votes of all my family—not only their votes, but their active support.

Nor do I wish to go into the question of how he obtained his election, although I might say, by way of an aside, that we just could not match the political dexterity of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell).

Two or three days before the election, it came out in the press that—when being shown one of the sites for the hospital school for retarded children—he said: “This is the best site that I have seen yet.”

It just happened to be in Temiskaming.

This matter was initiated by the election of the member-elect for Temiskaming and, as has been indicated, he was a senior civil servant.

What does bother us about it, sir—although we would in no way seek to prohibit a member of the civil service from running for public office in Ontario—is that we do think that when a senior civil servant does leave his office in the civil service to run for political office, then his break with the public service should be absolutely clear and final.

In this particular case in Temiskaming, when the member-elect left the post that he occupied with The Department of Lands and Forests there was some uncertainty as to whether, if the fortunes of war were adverse, he would not return to his post in The Department of Lands and Forests.

My understanding is that a few years ago, out in the west, a certain senior civil servant whom I believe had something to do with the administration of The Farm Loans Assistance Act, left his post and ran for the Liberal party. He was defeated, but went back to his post with the organization to which he had been attached before.

In a case such as at Temiskaming, there ought to be a policy that a civil servant, leaving the civil service, should indicate in unequivocal terms that if he is not elected he will not go back into a position of responsibility in the same civil service.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): That principle would destroy the Saskatchewan government.

Mr. Sopha: Indeed it would, but it would deny us the receipt of some of our illustrious immigrants.

That is all I wish to say about it. We wanted to put that on the record in this case; and we hope, before the same situation occurs again, that perhaps some reflection might be made concerning it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly to a couple of points in connection with the principle of the bill.

This bill has developed into a tidying-up operation of major proportions, and I think it is well that the full ramifications of it should be explored, and that the legal position should be clarified in the manner which is now being done.

One of the points is provoked by the comment of the hon. member for Sudbury. There is a simple solution to this problem of the civil service. Civil servants should be treated as first-class citizens who can take their positions in politics like anybody else.

And, if they wish they should be able to return to their old jobs. There is no problem involved in the administration of this, as some 15 years of experience have proven in Saskatchewan.

Some years ago, when I was living in the city of Ottawa, and happened to be active in a certain subcommittee of the Canadian institute of international affairs, we made a study of the civil rights of civil servants in many countries. I recall being astounded to discover that the principle which I have just enunciated and which is in effect in the province of Saskatchewan had even been carried to the point in some parts of Europe—I believe one of the Scandinavian countries—had even been carried to the point of a Deputy Minister, running for the Opposition party, being defeated, and returning to his position as Deputy Minister.

Now that, I agree, is going a little too far, because I think at top levels, where the policy formation is a very intimate one within the government, there are obvious difficulties in a person going out into the political battle and being able to return.

But I suggest that the day will come, even in the province of Ontario, when we can get over some of the difficulties that have been discussed arising out of this situation, by putting civil servants, whether they be working for Hydro or any other department, on the basis that they can participate in politics like anybody else.

And we will find that we will have no greater difficulties than we have at the present time. In fact, we will not even have breaches of the law as it is laid down.

If I may go back to Temiskaming, I can recall one instance there where, at a certain public meeting, there was a discussion of certain officials of Hydro who were involved, directly or indirectly, in the election by having election booths put in their homes and so on.

By trying to draw the kind of line that was drawn by Hydro—and I understand there has been something of a retreat on it—with regard to the participation in political life, I think you are creating unnecessary difficulties, and incidentally depriving a growing number of people of their basic civil rights. This weakens our democracy.

Mr. Speaker, a point that I did want to raise—and I do not know whether the hon. Prime Minister cares to comment on it now—is one that has always disturbed me.

When we are coming to grips with this problem of a genuine conflict of interest arising from an elected representative doing business with the government or the municipality, to what extent is that principle abrogated by this person doing business through, shall we say, a limited company in which he has a major interest?

It seems to me that it opens the door to a violation of the basic principle, if it is possible to set up a limited company and, through that limited company, do business with the municipality or with the government.

Some statements of this basic principle make it very clear; you cannot do business directly, or indirectly, or through a third person. And the Act goes on and on, with a lot of elaborations which one would think would cover the whole waterfront.

And yet I have heard it argued, if a limited company is set up, then the elected representative could have an interest in the limited company and he would not be violating the principle.

I pose this as a knotty aspect of the whole problem, and one which I think, if we want to tidy up the situation completely, we will have to face up to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Some of these matters we can again discuss in committee. There were some interesting points raised, and I would like to give them consideration.

By no means do I feel that the resolution which I drafted is ample. I have put it on record in Hansard so that the hon. members can look it over and give consideration to it.

We need not pass such a resolution in any particular hurry, but I would like to have it ample.

I would be very glad to comment on the points the hon. members opposite have raised, in committee.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister why he does not include in the bill itself what he is suggesting he is going to include in the resolution?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to the hon. member that actually, as he will understand, it is difficult to include matters of regulations, for instance, in various departments and include them in the statute itself. Frankly, I gave some consideration to that, and in looking at it found it was exceedingly difficult to draw such a thing. It was felt that it would be easier for this matter to be done by resolution than by attempting to put in the statute, for instance, such a thing as a subsidy payable for cattle destroyed.

Actually in this resolution we have used the term "in respect of any regulation of The Department of Agriculture." If it were profitable to draw up a section which would meet that, it would be all well and good, but I think the purpose of the resolution idea, which really came from the hon. member for Brant last year, was the fact that it would be able to deal with those matters perhaps in a more flexible way than we could by statute.

Mr. Oliver: My point, Mr. Speaker, is this, that there are included in the bill things which in my judgment—the judgment of a layman, of course—are less in conflict with The Legislative Assembly Act than those things the hon. Prime Minister now proposes to include in the resolution. It seems to me, at least, that the most important things are being left to resolution while those things which are included in the bill are the least important. Personally, I have never had very much doubt that there was any conflict in respect to The Legislative Assembly Act.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We will look at that section and it may be possible in committee to draft a section which would meet with approval.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I would at the outset like to offer my congratulations to the new hon. Ministers of the Crown and to wish them success in their office.

I must say too, Mr. Speaker, that when I came into the meeting of this House for the first time I was very glad to see the hon. Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Yaremko) in his seat. He had ill health during the summer and I know that the hon. members on both sides of the House are glad to see him back in health and wish him the best in the future.

The hon. Provincial Secretary and I have met on many occasions campaigning, he for his party and I for mine, and life has been easier for both of us in that we have never had to run in the same riding. I certainly wish him well and I know that many people that I know and who also know him have the same thoughts.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words as a result of my being implicated, no matter how inadvertently, in the investigation concerning the Sarnia land deal. I had hoped, for a good reason that I shall explain shortly, that as little advertising on this matter would take place as possible. It was not that I had anything to hide, it was merely that I had hoped other matters and other associations would not be under the glare or under the focus of any advertising or any publicity that would cause harm. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) has drawn attention to this, so I feel I have no alternative but to say a few words.

Firstly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say at the very outset that during all the relevant times concerning the negotiations of the transaction known as the Sarnia land deals, I was completely unaware that even such lands were in Sarnia. At no time had I any knowledge of what was going on. The hon. Prime Minister in his address last Tuesday night made reference to the fact that I had endorsed a Dimensional cheque and during the last sitting of this House sat here and did not even mention that I had signed the cheque.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I was unaware that I had endorsed such a cheque and I was most surprised to learn that I had, and did not learn so until near the end of the investigation when I received a call from a newspaper reporter saying that they had found this cheque.

I am acquainted, of course, with Mr. Gray, a personality who became involved very greatly in this investigation, and also I had known Mr. Clark. How it came about that I had signed a cheque was simply that, early in 1959, before I was elected to this House, and at a time when the Dimensional Sarnia land deals meant absolutely nothing to me, I did some work for Can-Tex.

This was a new company and I took on the work of secretary-treasurer simply because a few cheques came through for deposit. I am no mind-reader, Mr. Speaker, but from what I know and what I learned of the situation, that company was to be used to purchase land which had nothing to do with Sarnia and which had nothing to do with this area.

Whether things changed as a result of my being elected to this House I do not know, but most certainly the expression used by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), that it was a pay-off company, is unjustified. There was nothing whatever to lead me to think that it was in any way involved.

Subsequently, when I came to this House and the name of Mr. Gray came up and the investigation was taking place, I realized there could be some conflict, not as a result of Can-Tex but because I had been associated with Mr. Gray in another matter which did not involve the practice of law or this House. He was prominent in a certain fraternal organization, as I was.

Because the man who did much of the legal work for that organization became ill and had subsequently passed away, I was called in to assist.

It is the type of legal work that is not paid for, it is merely work in this organization, and as a result of it I had seen Mr. Gray on many occasions. I realized that it could be inferred that because I knew Mr. Gray as a result of this work I would do something to cover up or in some way to compromise what I would have to say or do in regard to any investigation.

I must admit that maybe I am unfair to the hon. members of the CCF, but I have expected that if there are to be any insinuations or any innuendoes they would come from that party, and I was quite amazed that it came from the source from which it did.

I wish to say to this House, Mr. Speaker, that I, in no way, tried to hide anything, as the hon. Prime Minister suggested and, at the time of the last session, I had no knowledge whatsoever of any cheque.

The hon. members might ask why, as the hon. Prime Minister drew to their attention, I resigned from this company called Can-Tex. The reason is this: I was very anxious, either in my fraternal association which was most obvious and from which it could be easily inferred that I knew Mr. Gray, or in any other way, not to hamper my own party in any investigation that it was making, and so that no reference could be made of any association that I might have had.

I may, as a result of these fraternal associations, have been overly concerned; to some extent it was justified when I, at one time, received a call from a newspaper reporter saying that they were going to write an article suggesting that I would possibly be covering up for Mr. Gray because I had known him.

I want to assure this House that, in no way, have I tried to cover up in any matter whatsoever. But when it became obvious to me that Mr. Gray was involved, and the only way I had of finding that ahead of time was a result of what information came into the Liberal office and what I heard from the other side of the House, I was most anxious to keep my party from being in any compromising situation. So I have done my best to do that.

What I most regret from this whole thing, Mr. Speaker, is that it focuses attention on the fraternal organization with which I have been closely associated. I think the first newspaper article concerning me mentioned it.

I also regret that my association, no matter how innocent it might have been, has been used as rather a red herring in the investigation because I am certain that it in no way—Can-Tex, or anything else—had anything to do with the heart of the matter, and they are away off base in investigating it. For myself, I regret there could be any insinuations made that I had anything to do with any government situation, or the purchase of lands in any shape or manner.

When the hon. Prime Minister said the other day that over here we were just playing smart politics, I assure this House that I was doing my best to avoid any politics simply because of other associations which I had, and to which I was most anxious not to cause any harm. The hon. Prime Minister tried to go into some detail, how he checked up on Liberal caucus meetings and what we discussed. Now, I would assure this House once again that I never brought the matter of Can-Tex to the caucus attention because I never thought it necessary and, at that time, the matter of the Dimensional cheque was not even in my mind simply because at the time it was signed, being a relatively small matter, it seemed to have no connection with this investigation. It was never really considered by me.

The only thing I can emphasize is that through other organizations I was acquainted with Mr. Gray. And I would suggest that if the hon. Prime Minister spent less time trying to snoop around and find out what we were discussing in caucuses, which was none of his business, and spent more time looking after the problems of this province, he would be serving the public far better.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I did not sneak around. I read it in the paper.

Mr. Trotter: One can disagree with people in politics—and one can disagree violently with people in politics—and yet still have considerable respect for them. And I am one who has had considerable personal admiration for the hon. Prime Minister of this province. But I will tell you quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of his performance in this situation a lot of my personal respect for him is shattered.

I would like to put before the House some of the matters that this government has been neglecting and on which—despite continuous promises and various Throne speeches—it has done little or nothing in the way of actual accomplishment, or actual building and making its promises a fact.

One of the first matters, Mr. Speaker, is that of the Toronto psychiatric hospital. There have been numerous announcements over the years that Toronto would have a new psychiatric hospital. In fact, one would be led to believe that from what the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) has had to say that there might be one starting in late 1960, or in early 1961. I regret to see that there is no mention of such a hospital in the Throne speech.

I would just like to refer briefly to what I had to say in regard to this psychiatric hospital when I spoke to this House on Friday, February 12, 1960.

I quote:

This government keeps talking about building hospitals; I believe that the hon. Minister of Health really wants them to build the hospitals, but that he is in with a government that has, in the past, not cared and does not have the foggiest idea of what to do about it, and is not even going to try.

I quote from an editorial of December, 1959, from the Toronto Daily Star, it says:

"We were reminded this week by Dr. Dymond's announcement"— then they have in quotation marks the word "announcement"—

"that a $6 million psychiatric hospital, the biggest and most modern in Canada, will be in the work programme for late next year or early in 1961."

This was news. It was also news on October 16, 1959, and the hon. Prime Minister confirmed—and that is in quotation marks—that a new psychiatric hospital was to be built. It was also news on October 14, when the hon. Prime Minister announced plans for the same hospital to be built at a cost of $5 million. Somehow within two days or so it had jumped $1 million but, evidently, they were not taking it too seriously anyway and $1 million here or there did not mean too much.

An hon. member: What is a million dollars?

Mr. Trotter: I continue to quote from my Throne speech last year:

It was even better news. The editorial goes on:

"Eight months ago—that would be in April, 1959, when the hon. Minister of Health first announced it. "On that occasion he said he hoped a start would be made on the hospital sometime this year." That was last year, of course, in 1959.

"Milking the same announcement for the sake of headlines is, of course, an old pastime for politicians. It assumes unhappy overtones, however, when the subject is human suffering."

Mr. Speaker, I think this is typical of the many programmes on which the government in the past has promised and has done very little; or when it proceeds to do something, it takes years of announcements and then finally it gets around to putting up some sort of building when it is long overdue.

Now we in Toronto have a real problem as the result of not having sufficient space for those people who need mental attention.

Dr. Bates, here in the city of Toronto, prepared a report for the local authority and pointed out in his report that as a result of Toronto not having proper facilities many of the individuals who are arrested for causing a disturbance and who are really not criminals, but who should be given mental treatment in a mental institution, spend the time in the Don jail.

Dr. Bates says in his report the major problem in fulfilling the responsibility—that is the responsibility of looking after people who are arrested for causing a disturbance—is the difficulty of obtaining a hospital bed when it is needed for these persons. The number of beds now available to the courts in the metropolitan area is not sufficient.

It is understood that the proposed new psychiatric institute will contain a ward of 40 beds for this purpose. At present a person who cannot be given suitable accommodation in the hospital must be held pending a mental examination in the Don jail. This procedure is damaging to the self-respect and dignity of a person who may be only mentally sick and not fully responsible for the disorderly or unusual behaviour that led to his being arrested.

In 1959, Mr. Speaker, there were 244 persons examined in the Don jail, while only 75 were remanded to the Toronto psychiatric hospital or to other Ontario hospitals in or near Toronto. So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that there is an urgency in this city, not only in the case of looking after people who get into trouble with the law, but in the overall picture of mental health. So I do hope that sometimes these announcements will lead to some reasonable accomplishment by this government.

There is one further matter, Mr. Speaker, pertaining to the mental health needs of this city, and that is the importance of having a clinic to treat people; to assist those who are in danger of going to a mental hospital or assisting those who have been released from the hospital.

It is common sense, Mr. Speaker—in the long run it saves money—that if you can treat people before they become patients, or are in a position to release people early from hospitals, you save the expense of the extra bed.

Therefore it is prudent that we encourage any course that we may have in making the necessary preparations that are required. I quote once again from Dr. Bates' report:

Despite the impressive array of medical health facilities and services, there is a waiting list at every clinic, the waiting list varies at each clinic, depending in part upon the season of the year, but it ranges usually from 1 to 3 months.

So you can see, Mr. Speaker, that in these clinics we have a waiting list that lasts 3 months. This government will do nothing, it has done nothing any more than the hon. Minister of Health is doing now, sitting around and reading the Toronto Telegram. I suggest that he would improve his mind and be of greater service to this province if he would put aside that old paper, the Telegram, and listen to some of the facts and some of the needs of this city.

The question arises in this city as to whether these waiting lists at clinics and hospitals will be reduced by the building of more facilities at some later time. Hospitals are needed but the situation is now reaching such a point that the only proper way to give immediate assistance to the problem of mental health is to increase the work of clinics. I suggest that it is the duty of this government to do something and not to delay and frustrate the whole matter by the continuous series of announcements which mean nothing and which are only meant to fool the people of this province.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address, through you, a few remarks in regard to hospitals and hospital schools for retarded children. During the last session this matter was discussed at some length, and we discussed the matter of Cedar Springs. I must say that I am glad to see that at long last it seems that there will be a hospital ready and some beds ready at least by next April. But I wish to discuss this matter further, Mr. Speaker, because not nearly enough is being done.

In some areas of this province where there are no schools for retarded children, the people interested, the parents of retarded children and their friends have set about providing them. The government gives them a grant of 30 per cent of approved costs for a school for retarded children, and then it is up to the parents and their friends to raise the rest. They must either pay it themselves, have service clubs assist them, or depend upon the support of the area in which the school is in.

The government also provides $25 per month for any retarded child from the age of 5 to 12, and $50 per month for any child, going to a retarded school, between the ages of 13 to 18 years. These grants do not include transportation costs or many of the extras that are needed to run such a school. The grants that the government give cover only about 40 to 50 per cent of the cost for these schools.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that these retarded children and their families are being seriously neglected by this government. Their needs are being neglected for this reason; the parents of retarded children pay their school taxes just the same as anybody else who has property and yet, because their child is retarded, they are not allowed to use the public schools. I say, Mr. Speaker, that there is an incumbent duty on this government to see to it that they supply schooling for these children.

In regard to the necessity to assist retarded children, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak at some length on the lack of an adequate programme to meet the need for schools for retarded children and the hospital schools. On November 16, representatives of the Ontario association for retarded children appeared before the hon. Prime Minister of this province. They had prepared a very thorough and a very interesting brief. They had prepared it in March of 1960, but it was not until November 16 that the hon. Prime Minister of this province could find time to see them.

When they did appear before him, they received treatment which is best reported in an old Tory standby, the Toronto Globe and Mail.

Now the delegation from the Ontario association for retarded children were treated like this.

The headline goes:

DELEGATION REBUKED FOR NEGLECTING CREDIT

Premier Leslie Frost rebuked a delegation seeking a crash building programme for retarded children's hospital schools because a 12-page brief failed to give enough credit to the Ontario government for action already taken, according to members of the delegation. This allegation emerged yesterday, the day after the 4-member delegation of the Ontario association for retarded children spent 3 hours with the Premier at Queen's Park.

We have a situation here, Mr. Speaker, where the hon. Prime Minister seems to be annoyed unless the delegations call to give him credit; credit for very little according to what I have here from their report. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, a disgrace that if a delegation does come to the hon. Prime Minister and after going to considerable effort to prepare a very reasonable and well prepared brief, they do not receive better treatment at the hands of the hon. leader of this government.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There has been a mistake somewhere. There must be a mistake somewhere.

Mr. Trotter: I am told, Mr. Speaker, that the chairman of this delegation hardly got two sentences out and then he had to listen to a long discourse on the wonders of this government from the hon. Prime Minister. I think it is time that this government, especially the hon. Prime Minister, instead of doing some talking, looked and listened, and then gave this province some good government which it needs and which it has not been getting; especially in the field for mental health, and especially in the field to assist retarded children.

I might say this first, Mr. Speaker, that much of the blame for the lack of sufficient hospital space for retarded children has been placed upon a public "which just does not care." In the past that might have been true. The hon. Minister of Health in his department has done some good work, some considerable work, in advertising and giving publicity to the need of help for retarded children. But I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister of Health through you, Mr. Speaker, that his advertising and publicity should be directed to the hon. Prime Minister and to the treasury board who evidently have no understanding and no interest in the problem whatsoever.

I wish to be fair to the hon. Minister of Health and the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts)—both of these men, obviously, are aware of the problem and, I think, in many respects they have a real desire to do something to assist the situation. But it is a shocking thing that in this government there are two hon. Ministers who probably are interested and yet they can have no influence whatsoever on the hon. Prime Minister and the treasury board.

Just let me cite some figures, Mr. Speaker, to give you some idea of how little the government is actually doing to meet this problem which is so necessary and so pressing and will, in the near future, become very pressing unless the government takes far more vigorous and direct action than it has in the past.

First of all, I will quote some figures to give some idea of the great need.

Careful estimates of many countries put the number of retarded between 2.5 and 3.5 per cent of the population. A conservative estimate of two per cent was chosen for the figures for this brief. In other words, these people are not trying to overestimate, to be frightening, they are trying to be reasonable.

And I must say this too, Mr. Speaker, in fairness to the Ontario association for retarded children. They are not of any political party, they do not wish to get involved in party politics, but they are most anxious to help the children who do need help and are most anxious to bring it to the attention of this government.

Now, I do not think the hon. Prime Minister, on November 16, was very anxious to listen to them or to hear what they had to say. He was looking for compliments for himself and his government. And I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not here to compliment this administration. I am here to give them some facts and some idea of the work that should be done—it will take me a long time, too.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that two per cent of our population is retarded, and that 10 per cent of this two per cent will require institutional care because of their handicaps or problems created in the home. In 1965 some two per cent of a projected population of 6.85 million people in this province means a restrained estimate of 137,000 retarded individuals of all ages; and 10 per cent, or 13,700, will likely require hospital care. That is, in 1965, almost double the capacity of Orillia, Smiths Falls and Cedar Springs.

We have heard, Mr. Speaker, that they have provided 300 beds in Gravenhurst. But all that has actually taken place is to empty one old building at the Orillia school, which should have been emptied years ago, and remove the patients to Gravenhurst. The effort was needed and it is a good move, Mr. Speaker.

But at the same time, it has not supplied any extra bed space for the very pressing problem of the number of children who need help.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I think it should be pointed out—and it is similar to the psychiatric hospital in the Toronto area—that we are suffering from announcement after announcement, but are not receiving any actual accomplishment. This brief says in part:

The Minister of Health last spring announced that a new hospital school will be built in northern Ontario but no definite announcement regarding purchase of site or letting of contract has followed.

Now, I know in Sudbury they think they are going to get it. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) was very careful to tell them in New Liskeard that they had the best place. But today, as far as any school for retarded children goes, it is nothing but an instrument for playing politics. And here, again, these people who have been watching the situation for years, say:

Advance announcements for the building of a new hospital school for western Ontario appeared regularly for 4 or 5 years before construction actually began at Cedar Springs. It would seem unlikely by earlier experience that any new accommodation in this area could be expected within 3 years at the most hopeful.

When they say "this area," they mean in the area of northern Ontario.

I might also point out to you, Mr. Speaker, two of the salient points in their brief; Orillia, Smiths Falls and Aurora populations as of December 31, 1959, were 5,400 in total. All report serious overcrowding varying from 20 to 39 per cent. Waiting lists were recently reported at Orillia with 1,500 and Smiths Falls with 700.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when you have a government that in the past 10 years has not been spending all the money voted by this House for public works, when they have known that there was a real pressing problem; it is time they did something about this problem and quit having discussions about foreign trade or the—

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Some $20 million was spent in the last two years on public works for mental institutions. What do they mean by saying that?

Mr. Trotter: Well, Mr. Speaker, I read in this House not only in the last Throne debate but in the debate on unemployment; setting out the figures for 10 years showing that from 1950 to 1959, inclusive—10 years—there has been a total of $65 million voted for capital projects that were not spent. Now—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trotter: So that I suggest that the hon. Minister, instead of trying to correct me on perfectly correct figures, go to his office and make some plans to—

Hon. Mr. Connell: Does the hon. member not agree that $20 million in two years on mental institutions is a lot of money?

Mr. Trotter: I do not deny that the hon. Minister is now starting to do something. But I would certainly point out to him that he is not doing nearly enough. For 17 years this government has neglected this problem completely. And now, in recent years—the last two years—they decide to spend something. The department has done some work at Cedar Springs, it has done some work with research in London. But as I said before, the transfer of 300 adult retarded people from the hospital school at Orillia is an effort to relieve the overcrowding in the old buildings, but it is merely a token effort. It is a token effort, Mr. Speaker, and it is not approaching the problem as it should be dealt with.

May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, a few ways in which this government could improve the situation—ways suggested by the association for retarded children?

One is this: That the government see to it that more diagnostic clinics are set up so that many of these retarded children could be kept at home and have their parents look after them and to have treatment centres so that it would not be necessary for many of these children to be kept in the hospitals.

It would serve two good purposes. It would save the province money and it would keep the children in their homes.

If the government made the effort to expand, in the immediate future, some of the facilities that they now have, it would be of great assistance. Concerning the serious overcrowding at Orillia, Smiths Falls and Aurora—as I have mentioned earlier their populations totalled 5,400, with Orillia possibly at the highest of 39 per cent—this is a situation in which much could be done in the immediate future if the government made a real strenuous effort.

Of course, if the government does not in the immediate future do something to alleviate the overcrowding in these hospitals, it is going to affect the standards of the schools themselves.

Because—I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. members keep this in mind—these are schools for retarded children. They are meant to teach the child so he can learn enough so that possibly he can be re-established in his home. There are many cases as well that are strictly bed cases, where there is going to be little or no hope of them ever being returned to their homes. At the present time in Orillia there are so many bed cases that those patients that could be properly treated and instructed are being neglected for the simple reason there is a lack of space and a lack of personnel.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? Would he be a little more specific about his charges of neglect, please?

Mr. Trotter: Why, yes. Are these charges not obvious; that in Orillia there is a waiting list of 1,500; that in Smiths Falls there is a waiting list of 700?

I will say this, Mr. Speaker, there are so many people in this province who have a sad situation at home, who cannot get their children placed. As the hon. Minister knows, many hon. members attempt to get these children into the hospital. On the many occasions I have approached the hon. Minister in this respect, he has been most helpful. But it seems to me a shame and a disgrace that, in order to place a retarded child in a hospital, people have to go to an MPP. I would say that these children should be placed and helped and their parents helped as a matter of right.

Such a problem as a retarded child could strike any family in this province. And the very fact there is a waiting list to get into Orillia of 1,500, and a waiting list at Smiths Falls of 700, is an indication of obvious neglect going back over the years. I know that the present government has been able to hide behind the happy Scottish accent of the present hon. Minister of Health, because many people know that he is interested in this problem. But I will tell the hon. Minister of Health through you, Mr. Speaker, that his hon. government leader and his treasury board are not paying any attention to him. Anything they have done is as reported in this brief. It is a token effort and that is all it is.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I think I have to rise on a point of privilege in this case. The hon. member is very obviously unacquainted with the facts. Neither my hon. leader nor the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) have halted me in any efforts I have made in the interests of these children. I would point out, sir, that my request for specific information concerning neglect has not been answered. The waiting list figures are completely out of keeping with facts. I would remind the hon. member to look back in history only a few years and remind himself that Smiths Falls should have been opened at least 15 years earlier—

Mr. Trotter: I will say this, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister is certainly loyal to his government, but he is not accomplishing what he is meant to accomplish. I again say what this brief says, that it is merely a token effort. Simple figures in the hon. Minister's department will indicate that even the new 1,200-bed hospital at Cedar Springs will actually take care of less than half of the present known need at Orillia, and will really do nothing to relieve the present overcrowded condition of other hospital schools, let alone do anything for providing for the future.

When these people see a situation like that, why should they come to the government, why should they come to the hon. Prime Minister of this province trying to say what a fine fellow he is, what a good job he is doing? It is obvious to these people who have lived through this situation, who have known the facts, that this government has been neglecting its duty. They themselves say—and I repeat this for the hon. Minister—"that advance announcements of the building of a new hospital school usually appear regularly for 4 or 5 years before construction." It is advance announcement that this government seems to excel at, not actually building the buildings that should be put up.

Mr. Speaker, in one other respect—let us say the long-term aspect of the need for retarded hospitals—I would just like to refer briefly to the fact that the people from the Ontario association for retarded children tried to point out to the hon. Prime Minister the need for more hospitals in the future. They projected the picture from 1959 to 1975, showing that by 1975 the retarded children requiring hospital care will total 17,600. Looking at it in the future, this could be an extremely serious problem if the government continues to treat this problem in the lazy and indolent manner it has in the past.

For example, assuming that the total population of Ontario at the end of 1959 was 6.04 million, 10 per cent of two per cent of this population is 12,080. Totalling the population of Orillia, Smiths Falls and Aurora at 5,400 and the number known to be on active waiting lists of 2,200; plus an approximate 4,215 adult retarded who are presently in Ontario hospitals; this would give a minimum of 11,815 requiring hospital care. When compared with the previously estimated demand of 12,080, it would seem that the method of estimation is reasonably proper.

I suggest that if the hon. Minister does not think that his department is doing enough, he should read this brief and, if possible, draw it to the attention of the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I say to the hon. member that I did see that deputation, and I found it a very interesting deputation. As a matter of fact, I spent 3 hours with them.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister is not making a speech and I suggest that on another occasion he might have something to say, but I am going by what they tell me and what is reported in this paper.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you, I am on my feet and I suggest that I be permitted to continue.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Trotter: Not at the present time, later on. I am not answering a question here. I just want to sum up this problem of the hospitals for retarded children—and I intend to bring it to the attention of the hon. Prime Minister again and again, as long as I possibly can, until we get some action out of him, for he has been doing nothing about this problem for years. I just repeat this matter that was in the paper. I think it is typical of a government which has become arrogant after 17 years of power—how they treat people. “Premier Leslie Frost Rebukes Delegation.” And I find, Mr. Speaker, that the only way that these people are ever going to be treated properly or the problems of Ontario are going to receive proper treatment is to see to it that a government is in power that knows what it is doing, and that the group over there is turfed right out of power.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point to another problem that has been neglected by this government. Instead of a series of announcements about what they are going to do, they have appointed a committee so that they can do as little as possible or nothing.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister has a theory of how he should govern this province. I think he was quoted once as saying; “We do a little here, we do a little there, and wait for next year.”

And this is typical of the type of Tory government that we are getting at a time when we do need leadership. We are getting this “a little here, a little there” and sitting around talking about mortgage rates and the foreign trade.

I would like to turn to the matter, Mr. Speaker, of fluoridation. This government appointed a committee in mid-March of 1959—I can see that the hon. Minister (Mr. Dymond) is even afraid to face the problem, he is on his way out—but this committee he appointed in mid-March of 1959 did not—as far as we know—meet or do anything until May 2, 1960, when they held a hearing. And then the word is now that in June they had a few secret meetings.

This is how this serious problem is treated by the government in power. We may have different views, whether fluoridation is a good thing or not, but this government seems to have ignored all the medical evidence.

We in this province, Mr. Speaker, spend $47 million per year on dental care. Through the advantages of science, through the knowledge of scientists, it has been shown that dental care can be greatly helped by using a treatment of water known as fluoridation.

Now in Brantford in 1945, Mr. Speaker, fluoridation was put into effect and since that time tooth decay in Brantford, Ontario, has been reduced by 65 per cent. And yet only in recent years, Mr. Speaker, this government has made it impossible for a small or a large municipality to use this system that has been obviously found helpful and useful. Fluoridation is in effect in 21 countries throughout the world. In the United States since 1950, some 35 million people were introduced to it.

But I do say, Mr. Speaker, that people should not be forced to accept such treatment. If a community such as the community we are now in has a council that wants to put it into effect, or its people vote for it, I say that they should be allowed to have it. Because there is a tremendous list of medical authorities in Canada and many American states which has certainly shown beyond a shadow of a doubt that fluoridation is a good thing, especially for the children. The Canadian dental association and the Canadian medical association are among those in the long list of people who support such a move.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know there are people like the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Lewis) who might be afraid of it, who might think it is rat poison, so I would like to read just a small item that appeared in the Telegram, that good Tory paper, about whether or not fluoride would be rat poison.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): I did not say it was rat poison.

Mr. Trotter: Well, I did not suggest that, I said there are people who do.

Well, listen to this, this is from a good Tory paper.

Meanwhile anyone who drinks Toronto water is consuming something with just as bad a reputation as fluorine, and veterans of World War I can vouch for the deadliness of chlorine, but it purifies the water, along with bromine and iodine, and all 4 are deadly poisons.

But so is water in any form taken in too great a quantity, because you can drown in it. Strychnine can be lethal, but lots of people are alive because doctors prescribe its controlled use.

Iodine is essential to good health in maintaining thyroid glands in functioning. Entire areas of this continent are short of it in the soil with the result of a deficiency of it in diets. So it is added to salt as an easy way to offset the need. Iodine is an excellent enemy of bacteria and is used widely to put on youngsters' cuts, but it is a poison.

Bromine is a basic sedative that doctors prescribe to calm people who are mentally upset. Here again a poison is widely used for beneficial results, and just as chlorine in water supplies closed up entire floors of typhoid cases in Toronto hospitals a few years ago, similar chemicals can be used for either a good or a bad purpose. Who would vote to take chlorine out of Toronto's water?

Almost anything can be used improperly and by the same token used wisely.

In the light of studies by the world health organization in 19 countries, surveys by medical societies and dental associations, fluorine stands as a beneficial agent that drastically cuts tooth decay in children, the age at which adult tooth troubles are established.

And yet, despite the proved usefulness of fluorine, this government will not give the people in this province the opportunity to use a needed chemical. Whether or not we disapprove of it, I suggest to this House and to this government that it is time we got some action out of this little group that was appointed away back in March, 1959.

It costs 10 cents per year to have fluorine in the water, and how much cheaper that is than the feeble suggestion by the hon. former Minister of Health (Mr. Phillips), who suggested and endorsed a fluoride dispenser for home use back in September, 1959, which would cost $99 to instal, and over the course of 10 years $100 per family. I do not know if that manufacturer was a friend of the hon. former Minister, but certainly 10 cents per person is far more efficient and far more helpful.

Now, the hon. member for York-Humber was concerned about the overconsumption of water. If he thought that chlorine might be poisonous if taken in too great a quantity, he should know that with either an 8-ounce glass of water or an 8-ounce glass of beer he would have to drink 90 imperial quarts with fluorine in it at one sitting to poison himself. I do not think that any hon. member in this House has quite that capacity for water or for anything else.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that the hon. Prime Minister of this province should do something to get his committee to give the children of this province what they need in the matter of curing tooth decay. For whether it be hospitals for retarded children or the fluoridation of water, this government has been consistent in one thing—of putting off, of doing nothing, of being lazy on the job.

I suggest that it is time that the people of Ontario got some action from this government with so many hon. Ministers and hon. Ministers without Portfolios; that they put these hon. Ministers without Portfolio to work to see that this province gets far better administration than we are getting at the present time.

Mr. G. W. Parry (Kent West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise at this particular time. I have not much time. I generally make my speech in 25 minutes but I know the hon. members would not want to listen to me after 6 o'clock, so is it your wish that I go on with my speech? Thank you.

First, I want to congratulate the hon. mover (Mr. Gomme) and hon. seconder (Mr. Evans) of a motion for an address in reply to the Speech from the throne. They must have put a great deal of time on their speeches, which were well delivered and very instructive. I congratulate them.

Further, I want to congratulate the new hon. Ministers who have been promoted to cabinet rank. I am sure men of their calibre will be a great asset to the administration of this Legislature.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I should congratulate you or offer you a vote of sympathy, but I want to assure you that, in my opinion, you are rendering a very excellent service.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a little about the county of Kent and something which is a bit of a problem to us there: the sugar beet situation.

We have two refineries in the county of Kent, one at Wallaceburg and one at Chatham. The Wallaceburg plant is closed this year because we have not sufficient beet acreage to operate the plant. The other plant at Chatham is running about three-quarters of capacity due to reduced acreage.

The acreage that will be processed by the Chatham plant is 1,600 acres of beets. The Chatham plant has, in the past, processed a crop grown on 2,500 acres.

I would like, just in brief, to say something about these sugar factories which were established over 50 years ago. The Chatham plant has continuously operated, and the Wallaceburg plant, with the exception of one year, from the time they were brought into being. We were in difficulties in 1940 and the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) was then Provincial Treasurer. He came to our rescue and the plants have survived up until our present predicament.

I would not want the hon. members of this House to think that I am advocating subsidy. I loathe the word "subsidy," especially when we have no surplus of sugar. We have plenty of markets for sugar. The only thing is that, if we were involved in war, we would experience what we witnessed in the last world war, the rationing of sugar.

What does this mean to us? We have two plants estimated at $15 million. Let us go into the harvesting and processing and cultivating. The farmers' equipment amounts to $5 million. Mr. Speaker, this $5 million worth of equipment would be of very little use in cultivating or harvesting many other crops that we produce in southwestern Ontario.

I would like to say something about this sugar situation and the reason why sugar is cheap. We are processing sugar from sugar beets.

They have cheap labour, I believe, in Cuba, which is one of the largest producers of sugar in the world. Due to low wages and low standards of living in that country, we cannot compete here under the present price of sugar.

Mr. Speaker, sugar has advanced in price very little during the last 10 years. I would just like to quote a few items that have advanced.

You pay 24 cents, I believe, for a loaf of bread, and 25 cents for a quart of milk, and I am told that you pay 25 cents for a bottle of beer. I do not know whether that is right or not, but I have friends who have intimated that is what they had to pay for it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the amount of labour that is involved in the production of sugar beets—it is true it is seasonal—is available, after the season of harvesting and thinning of beets, for the production of tomatoes, corn, hybrid seed corn and many other crops that need and require hand labour.

I would like to mention something about what I think is a federal-provincial problem, but I do urge the provincial government to lend every assistance towards setting up some kind of sugar policy. In my estimation, it is something that we need if we are going to produce sugar from sugar beets.

Sugar beet policy? Yes! They have a sugar beet policy in the United States where I believe it is in the form of a tariff. Great Britain has a sugar beet policy. And Great Britain with its tight little island is producing about the equivalent of the amount of sugar we are producing here. We are producing only 20 per cent or 23 per cent of the sugar that is consumed in the Dominion of Canada.

I would like to stress this very strongly: War is not inevitable. We realize it. I am told when talking to some of the sugar officials that this trouble in Cuba is serious, and I do not think the hon. members of this House should think that I am talking as a sugar beet grower alone. Today we have sugar that is required for canning crops. The amount of sugar that is consumed by some of our major canning companies is enormous. What would be the result if sugar were curtailed? We are living today out of cans. I am told that the Heinz people use 10 million pounds of sugar yearly for canning purposes.

We had a very successful meeting here with the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) and his associates. Also we met with the federal hon. members and the provincial hon. members. Then we had another meeting with the sugar beet growers' association, and there were present members from 8 counties of southwestern Ontario. Then on November 10 we met with the federal hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Harkness) and his associates. Our hon. Minister of Agriculture for Ontario led the delegation.

Beyond that we have two economists who have been at work on a survey regarding the sugar beet question. I am sure from what I have read of this brief that they are going to present something that is going to be very helpful to this industry in endeavouring to set up some kind of policy so this industry will survive.

We have had full co-operation from the processing company. This is the first full co-operation from the company. This is the first time to my knowledge that the company has offered their full co-operation, their books are wide open.

Now they did lose a substantial amount of money last year due to a bad weather season. That is, we had extreme dry and then extreme wet weather, resulting in very low sugar content in beets. Last year the sugar content was only 13.4 or 13.5. But there was a heavy tonnage, and a large acreage. The result is that this year the acreage has been reduced.

But I want to say to the hon. members in this House we have a quality of beet this year that is producing 16.5 sugar content and a tonnage of around 14 tons to the acre. So we have a fair crop but very, very light acreage.

Now I have one or two other comments here while I am on sugar beets. We have kept abreast of the times with our research work. I have heard some statements in this House as to what this government has done regarding research. I would like to elaborate on many other things besides sugar beets—in livestock and many other things—but I have not the time this afternoon. I would just like to tell hon. members what we have done in the production and the development of sugar beets.

Today we have a very, very high quality of sugar beet, producing a high sugar content. We have eradicated black root, which back in the early 1930s nearly eliminated the sugar beet crop. And the blight is being taken care of today. Now all that has been done through research work through the provincial government and our colleges, and also the college at Lansing. That has been brought about by research work and working together for a good cause.

Now then we have another point here I would like to make. The seed that we have today is what is called the monogerm seed. I might qualify this. It is something the same as the atom bomb. It splits into 4 or 5 different parcels and each one will produce one beet plant. At one time we planted 15 pounds of seed, today we use about 3 pounds.

Then we have a precision drill that will drill the beet seed and drop it around 4 inches apart, to eliminate this strenuous back work. Now, the sugar beet drill, in my estimation, is going to relieve a considerable amount of the cost of working and thinning the beets because that can be done with cross-furrow cultivators and also with a long-handled hoe.

I want to leave this point with you, sir, before I get away from farming; rotation—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Would the hon. member like to adjourn the debate?

Mr. Parry: I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that I have discussed the committee meetings on Wednesday with the Clerk of the House and, I think, it would be better, sir, to have no sittings on this coming Wednesday, but rather let private bills meet at 10.30 a.m.; at 2.30 p.m., education; at 3.30, legal bills; at 11.30 a.m., highways and highway safety. This makes a pretty full day.

If we can avoid having no sittings on Wednesday, December 14, I would like to do that and perhaps it could be arranged to have any committee meetings in the morning at that time during the last week. We should, I think, be rising a week from this Friday.

Tomorrow we will deal with the estimates of the Provincial Auditor, Lieutenant-Governor, Prime Minister and with Throne debates. Subject to this, there are some bills on the order paper that can be proceeded with; that is, I think, in the committee stage. We might as well try to clean up tomorrow if we can.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 of the clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Second Session of the Twenty-Sixth Legislature

Tuesday, December 6, 1960
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable William Murdoch
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

THE PROVINCIAL PARKS ACT, 1958

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests in the east gallery students from Sutton west, and in the west gallery students from St. Gabriel's school, Willowdale.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost moves, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that when the House adjourns the present sittings thereof, it shall stand adjourned until Thursday. Also, the House meet at 10.30 a.m. on Friday next and on Friday, December 16 and that rule 2 of the assembly be suspended insofar as it be applied to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

Introduction of bills.

BOUNDARIES OF ALGONQUIN PROVINCIAL PARK

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to extend the boundaries of Algonquin provincial park."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in giving a short explanation of this bill, I might say that the purpose of the Act is to add the public lands in the geographic townships of Bruton and Clyde in the provisional county of Haliburton to Algonquin provincial park. These lands will be considered to be slightly different from the point of view of management of the fish and wildlife resources in that it is proposed that hunting and the use of firearms will be permitted on them.

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Provincial Parks Act, 1958."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will give a short explanation of this bill. The purpose of section 1 will be to authorize the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council to designate any provincial park or any part of a provincial park as being an area in which hunting is permitted during the period specified. Another section makes provision for disposal of lost, mislaid or abandoned property in a provincial park. For instance, many articles are found by our parks officers and we have no authority to dispose of these articles. We do try to find the owner so that the articles can be claimed. With this legislation, we will be able to dispose of these articles in due course of time.

Another section of this bill will prohibit travel on a road or a trail that has been closed to travel and proper signs put up. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it would be of interest to the House if I were to give a short statement in connection with hunting in provincial parks.

A comparatively short time ago there were only a few provincial parks in Ontario. They were all set aside in accordance with the principle set down by the parks commission report of 1893, and were unique—dedicated areas with a much wider purpose than recreation. It was then established that a provincial park should automatically be a game preserve.

In the days when our practice of game management as a special activity had not yet started, and when our resources for game protection were very circumscribed, the provincial parks, especially Algonquin and Quetico, stood out as wildlife areas because of the special protection afforded them.

Some of our early parks included marsh lands for which there was no reason why public hunting during the legal open season should not go on. Therefore, in Rondeau, Presqu'île and, in its former boundaries, Long Point park, special arrangements for public hunting in the marsh lands existed for a long time. We now have a large number of parks which are primarily recreational areas and for which the prohibition of hunting does not contribute anything to the preservation of wildlife in the province in the broader sense.

Furthermore, we are now establishing wildlife management outside provincial parks on a much firmer basis than it used to be established.

We can now recognize clearly those areas in which there is a need for special protection for some or all forms of wildlife, and this protection is arranged for regardless of such things as provincial parks.

In the many new parks which are being established, the principle of multiple use is being applied, and in accordance with this, hunting, as recreation, should not be abolished unless its prohibition meets with some special needs. Instead of the principle that hunting is prohibited, unless some special circumstance makes it necessary, we propose for a number of our parks that hunting will continue unless some special circumstances make abolition desirable.

This proposed legislation would allow us to use our parks as managed hunting areas during the season when this will not interfere with other forms of recreation. This will be of great benefit when we consider that many of our parks are in parts of Ontario where there is a shortage of public lands available for hunting.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the fifty-second annual report of The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario for the year ended December 31, 1959.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire to take the steps required to table the estimates of The Department of Economics, The Department of Insurance, The Department of Mines and The Department of Travel and Publicity.

The estimates that have been tabled to date, together with these estimates, of course, could not possibly be dealt with between now and the end of next week. I can assure the hon. members of the House that that is not the purpose. But if we have these estimates tabled they can be considered when this House resumes its sittings at the beginning of the year.

Therefore, I would say that we will endeavour to follow the procedure which will satisfy the convenience of the hon. members of the House.

I did suggest yesterday that the estimates of either The Department of Economics or The Department of Energy Resources would be considered on Thursday. Owing to the fact that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) finds it necessary to be away on Tuesday and Thursday next, because of some commitments in relation to his department, it would be much more convenient to deal with them this Thursday, and have The Department of Economics dealt with on the following Tuesday. Now with that explanation I would say that I have a message from the hon. Administrator (Mr. Porter) signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Administrator of the government of the province of Ontario transmits estimates of certain sums required for The Department of Economics, The Department of Insurance, The Department of Mines and The Department of Travel and Publicity for the year ending March 31, 1962, and recommends them to the legislative assembly, Toronto, December 6, 1960.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in conjunction with the estimates, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister whether he will advise us at what stage we will have the budget speech. I realize that it will not be immediately, of course, but I am concerned, and I have heard the concern expressed from a number of sources, that this may be an expedient move. I think there is some justification for expediency.

But from the theoretical point of view at least it does raise this problem. All of these departments are important. But some have more ramifications than others and are closely associated with the budget itself.

It does again demonstrate the inefficiency, if I may use that word, of trying to anticipate what will come later.

I would ask the hon. Prime Minister, firstly, whether he has made a determination as to when we will have the information of the budget address?

Secondly, I would appeal to him that we use the facility that we have on the order paper now to exhaust such things as unemployment, which certainly is an immediate problem of great concern.

Also, I suggest that we leave the estimates to those times when other business cannot be conducted, or at least postponed to such time when we have finished the unemployment argument and the Throne speech. Then we can go into them at a time more approximate to the time when we will have the budget address before us.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, the method of introducing the estimates and the discussion of the estimates, as the hon. leader of the Opposition knows, is an ordinary practice elsewhere. First of all, with the estimates—the hon. leader of the Opposition is quite correct in saying that there are certain estimates dealing basically with the budget itself—for instance, the estimates of The Department of Education. That is also probably true of The Department of Municipal Affairs. I think it is true with The Department of the Treasury, dealing with the servicing of debt and things of that sort. There are others.

But I point this out—the calling of a session in the autumn, as we are experimenting with, creates an entirely different situation. It seems to me that there are certain estimates which really do not deal with the budget fundamentally. Of course, they all deal with the budget, but nevertheless they are not large-spending departments and perhaps at this time, with a session prior to Christmas, we can deal with them now without interfering with the presentation of the budget.

Mr. Speaker, the presentation of the budget itself creates another problem in doing what we are trying to do with a split session. We find—and I think experience has shown this—that the closer the presentation is to the end of the fiscal year, the better. We have, as you know, in recent years introduced the budget some time around about February 20. There are many reasons for doing that.

On the other hand, it may be possible to advance that date somewhat. The hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) has raised some objections to that but, nevertheless, we may be able to advance the date to create more opportunity for discussion in a more leisurely way.

Splitting the session does create a lot of problems. It is pointless, and I think the hon. members will agree, to meet for 3.5 weeks before Christmas as we are doing this year if we accomplish nothing and business piles up into the other end of the session.

I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that the only purpose of our endeavours is to do as much as we can in this 3.5 weeks so that we are not faced with crowded circumstances in the session in the spring.

If we work this out we can make good use of the experience of this year. A lot of it involves complete changes in our procedures. We are doing our best to work that out by the end of next week because I would propose that we should adjourn a week from Friday. I would like to accomplish as much as we reasonably can to take the weight off the other part of the session, which is going to be heavy enough.

It may be that in other years we could meet somewhat earlier. On the other hand, I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that this year there has been a good deal of difficulty meeting on November 22. From discussing it with our friends in Quebec, who have had experience in this matter, the middle of November was the time which seemed to be most reasonable. If the opening were advanced before that date, we would be dealing with a very large number of subjects without the real basic facts upon which to go.

I do not think anyone is anxious at this session to get into some of the very heavy estimates when we can deal with them at length later. On the other hand, I do not want to underestimate the importance of the so-called Department of the Prime Minister. But it does seem to me that we can get some of these matters cleaned up to relieve the pressure of work in the spring.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I add a word on this? It seems to me that the hon. Prime Minister has not addressed himself to one of the main points in the observations of the hon. leader of the Opposition, and that point I would like to support. Obviously there is no argument in the proposition that if we have a gap in our agenda we deal with some estimates. But one of the main points in the plea of the hon. leader of the Opposition was that we have a major item on the agenda, an adjourned debate on unemployment, which the government apparently is not going to recall. If the hon. Prime Minister is going to recall it, why is he filling up the agenda? It seems to me that he has a choice between the estimates now, which could logically be left and dealt with closer to the budget, or the discussion on unemployment.

If he is calling the discussion on the estimates, this means he has no intention of calling the discussion on unemployment until it is even deadlier than it is now. This, Mr. Speaker, I want to protest, because this government is doing again this year what it did last year.

If it has a hot issue like the unemployment issue, which we had focused in Elliot Lake, and it is put on the order paper and we are permitted little or no debate, then the thing dies on the order paper. It withers on the vine.

If I may borrow a phrase from the hon. Prime Minister, this is making a lot of political mileage out of an issue, but it is not dealing with the issue.

I would suggest, in support of the plea of the hon. leader of the Opposition, that if the government intends to discuss unemployment, now is the time to discuss it in an orderly fashion on the basis of a resolution which the hon. Prime Minister had put on the order paper. Then we will not be led to believe that he put it on the order paper as a red herring to permit an hour's discussion and then let the thing die like a damp squid for the rest of the time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I rather agree with what the hon. member has said, if he would leave off the adjectives and the descriptions and the heat with which he has presented it, for this reason: I intend to deal with the resolution on unemployment.

Mr. MacDonald: When? A week from Saturday?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no. I will arrange with the House that I will call it at the beginning of the week. I had planned to call it on Thursday, but there are several other important matters in the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources which again provide subjects upon which the hon. members opposite and all of us have had views at times.

I can assure the hon. member, regarding the resolution on unemployment, that it will be dealt with finally before we adjourn at the end of next week, which should be satisfactory to the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I owe the hon. Prime Minister an apology. I have delved deeply into something which I now discover he was planning to do all the time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I cannot follow the devious workings of the hon. member's mind. I am a simple person myself and I find it difficult to follow the workings of his mind. But, apparently, we are now on common ground, finally we have reached that point.

I must say that I am also unable to follow the workings of the mind of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I would like to be able to follow his reasoning.

Are the orders of the day called?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to raise something, in all seriousness, in relation to something we were discussing a moment ago. I would like to direct this to the hon. Prime Minister.

He knows—and every hon. member in this House knows—that there is another matter of serious concern to all hon. members, and that is the resumption, if you will, of the Eastview debate. I raise this in all seriousness. I would like to know now whether this government intends to take any further action and when the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) will make his explanation. These are things of concern to us.

I am not anxious just to play politics on this, but I honestly think it is a serious matter and I intend to treat it as such. I am quite prepared to extend to the hon. Minister every opportunity for explanation, but, likewise, I intend to exercise my responsibility and pursue it. I do not want this session adjourned without full opportunity to pursue this serious matter.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I have the order paper here. I was away a couple of days last week and it may be there was an item placed on the order paper about the so-called Eastview debate, but I have not been able to find it.

The hon. Minister will speak, I assume, in the Throne debate or in one of the debates of this House, and he will deal with it then, I think, to the entire satisfaction of the hon. members opposite. I hope to obtain the unanimous endorsement of the hon. members opposite for the hon. Minister's fine efforts. I would like to deal with that as soon as possible, but the hon. members want to deal with everything at one time and that is a little difficult to arrange.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE PORTABLE PENSIONS ACT, 1960-1961

Mr. K. Bryden moves second reading of Bill No. 16, "An Act to provide for portable pensions."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in support of this bill which is on the order paper and which is intitled The Portable Pensions Act, 1960-1961, I would like to refer to the fact that there is a growing interest among almost all citizens of Canada in pensions, and quite properly so. At the present time, we have nationally a basic pension of $55 a month. At the very best, one can regard that as a rock-bottom minimum, something to keep body and soul together when a person reaches retirement age. It is not sufficient to live on in any decency, and any person, therefore, who takes thought for the future will naturally be concerned about ways and means of supplementing it.

My submission, Mr. Speaker, is that the proper solution to the pension problem is a national contributory old age pension. I think we should revise our whole pension system in Canada so that the present $55 pension would be regarded as nothing more than a basic minimum. In fact, I would like to see the basic minimum increased to about $75 a month, but the present pension should be regarded only as a basic minimum.

We should in addition have a national contributory plan whereby people could, through contributions from themselves and their employers, accumulate pension rights which, upon retirement, would give them approximately 50 per cent of their income. That I think is the sort of objective we should be striving for in Canada in this day and age. In cases of employed persons, such a plan should be financed by employer-employee contributions. In the case of self-employed persons, it would be proper and appropriate for the government to step in and compensate for the fact that there are no employer contributions.

Now that type of plan was a matter which engaged the interest of the present federal government to a very great degree—according to their own statements—in the interval between the 1957 and 1958 federal elections. The federal government professed very great interest in plans of this kind at that time, but then, after having obtained an overwhelming majority in the House of Commons in 1958, their interest has perceptibly waned to the degree where it has become imperceptible.

I do not know if they have abandoned the idea altogether but, certainly, they show very, very little interest in it. Perhaps when another federal election comes along, we may see some renewed interest on the part of the federal government in this matter. For the present, it appears they intend to do nothing whatsoever about it.

I would like to submit, Mr. Speaker, that if the federal government is not prepared to act on a national pension programme in the reasonably near future, the government of this province and the Legislature of this province should give consideration to establishing such a plan on a province-wide basis.

I agree it would be better to have it nationally, but since we are not to get such a plan nationally, I think it would be desirable for us to go ahead in the province of Ontario. I think it is quite feasible to establish such a pension plan in this province, and I am convinced that it is only through a universal government-administered pension plan that we will provide adequate old-age security for all our citizens.

That, Mr. Speaker, is by way of background, outlining some broad principles which I think serve as objectives to which we might strive. Let me state now that the bill which I have placed before the House, and which is now up for second reading, is much less ambitious than the universal pension plan I have talked about and which would necessarily be a government pension plan.

I have dealt in this bill with a much smaller issue. I have found, when you are dealing with Tories, it is not wise to give them too much at one time. Therefore I have taken a very small aspect of the problem, and have introduced a bill to deal with that small aspect.

In a situation where employees or others are not covered by pension plans, this bill does not provide that they will get pensions.

It merely provides that, in situations where pension plans are already in effect by private arrangement between an employer and a union or on some other basis, they will provide for portable pensions.

The basic principle of my bill, Mr. Speaker, is set forth in section 2. All the other sections of the bill are supplementary provisions, designed to make the principle operative.

I propose, in section 2, that pensions in this province will be made portable through the operation of 3 main principles. These 3 principles are related.

In clause 1 of subsection 1 of section 2, I propose that all pension plans in effect in the province by private arrangement must provide for early eligibility. As the clause actually reads, it proposes that every plan must provide that an employee will be eligible for coverage not later than one year after the commencement of his employment.

The second principle enunciated is that in all pension plans there must be provision for 100 per cent vesting. In other words, any contributions made by or on behalf of the employee, either by himself or by his employer, will be fully vested in him the minute he is covered by the plan—and, as I said, he must be covered by the plan not less than one year after the commencement of his employment.

This is the crux of the whole matter of portability of pensions.

I am not suggesting that it is a simple problem—there are many complications in working it out in detail—but the essential principle of portability of pensions is quite simple.

If the employee's pension rights are vested in him, 100 per cent, the minute he comes under the plan, then, however you may work out the details, that pension is portable; he can carry the rights with him wherever he goes.

The government has a committee that is looking into this matter, and I understand from a press report that, sooner or later, it hopes to introduce legislation on this important subject.

There is no use trying to evade the issue. It does not matter whether legislation is brought in this year, or next year, or the year after; if it is going to provide for portability of pensions, it must provide for full vesting.

I know there is resistance to that concept. Employers very rarely have provided for full vesting in any pension plan they have put into effect, even when they have put them into effect by negotiation with unions. Most pension plans that are in effect now provide for no vesting for the first 10 years, and very few of them provide for complete vesting before 20 years.

This means, of course, that an employee could work for 10 years, ostensibly covered by a pension plan, but if he is laid off, or fired, or leaves his employment for any reason whatsoever, he ends up with no pension at all. He could work up to 20 years and not get the full rights which he had been accumulating during the period of his employment.

There are two reasons why employers prefer this particular type of situation. First of all, it costs less to provide what appears to be the same amount of pension because, in actual fact, no pension is provided for a large number of employees.

I can appreciate the view of any employer who wants to reduce costs, but, on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, looking at it from the public point of view, I think that we should also be concerned about the justice of the situation.

I submit that it is unjust that there should not be a pension plan in effect under which an employer is making contributions ostensibly on behalf of an employee, yet that employee never receives any benefit of those contributions.

What actually happens is that the benefits are transferred to some other employee, or the employer gets the money back, and has not in fact made a true contribution to the plan.

If one reads the text of settlements that are often made in employee-employer bargaining and they include pension plans, as many of them invariably do, the employer usually announces the settlement as an increase measured in hourly terms including fringe benefits. Almost invariably, in the figure that is announced as being the term of settlement, there is included an amount contributed for pensions. In other words, where the employees get a 10 cents an hour actual increase in wages plus a pension plan which the employer values at an additional 5 cents an hour he announces that there is a settlement of 15 cents an hour.

That is a false statement. Under most of these plans a great many of the employees never get that 5 cents an hour, unless they hang around for 10, 15, or 20 years.

I submit that it is unjust, that it is undesirable from a public point of view, and that we, the Legislature of the province, should not permit it to happen.

The other reason why employers prefer not to have full and immediate vesting is that, with partial vesting, some employees tend to be frozen to their jobs. Or, at any rate, so it is often thought, I am not absolutely sure if that is true in all cases, but no doubt it is true of employees who have been in a job for a number of years and who are within a year or two of getting some pension benefits. I am not criticizing any employer for trying to devise ways and means of holding employees, especially those he considers to be good employees.

But, again, from the point of view of the public interest, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is undesirable to reduce mobility of labour in that way. I am certain that mobility of labour is an important factor in the economic well-being of the country.

Now that there are a large number of private pension plans, applying to quite a substantial number of working people, I believe it is the duty of the Legislature to step in, in the public interest, and say that where any employer agrees through collective bargaining or otherwise to set up a pension plan, that pension plan must be fully vested. Furthermore, where such plans are already in effect there must be provision for full vesting within a reasonable period.

In my bill it is suggested that this requirement should be complied with within one year. I am not particularly wedded to that period of time, but certainly some reasonable time should be set in which full vesting should be provided.

The third principle set forth in my bill is that the rights vested in an employee should be made available to him upon the termination of his employment—not in cash, but in the form of an annuity.

The wording of my clauses 3 and 4 under subsection (1) of section 2 may not be quite clear, and, perhaps, should be elaborated on.

What I have in mind when I state that the rights vested in an employee shall be available to him in a pension starting immediately or at some specified date in the future, is that he should get his pension upon retirement, whatever age that may be.

On looking over those clauses, I have come to the conclusion that they are perhaps a little obscure as they now stand. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that when this bill gets into committee I will be happy to submit revised wordings of those two clauses to clear up any possible misunderstanding that may arise.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. member is an optimist.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Well, one has to be an optimist. In this Tory night, one always is optimistic that day will sometime dawn.

Mr. Speaker, in the bill I have presented to this House, I have come out solidly in favour of what is sometimes referred to as the cold-storage principle of providing for vesting, as against the transfer of value principle. I think those are the terms that are used in some of the learned documents presented to us at the last session.

I favour that principle for two reasons: My first is because I think it is administratively less complex and my second reason is because I think it is more fair.

If a man works in a plant in which there is a pension arrangement, and he works there for 5 years, he will get pension rights amounting to 5 years—payable to him upon retirement. If he goes to another plant and works there 10 years, he will get pension rights which will again be given to him in the form of an annuity which he can cash in upon retirement.

In the course of his working life, it is possible that he could work for 5 or 6 different employers, so he would have 5 or 6 different annuity contracts.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Some people might change their jobs 20 times.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member for Bruce points out that some people might change their jobs 20 times. If they were always working in plants where pension plans were in effect, they would have 20 contracts, and on retirement they would get 20 cheques.

I am not certain that there could not be a way of consolidating those cheques. But whether there could or not, I do not think the fellow would mind very much if he got 20 cheques for, say, $10 apiece. He would be very happy to cash every one of them.

It is more common, I think, that a man might have 3, 4 or 5 cheques, and I am sure that he would not mind the inconvenience of signing his name 3, 4 or 5 times every month in order to get a proper pension.

The other possible way, of course, is to provide for some sort of transfer system whereby, when an employee leaves one job where there is a pension plan and goes to work for some other employer who also has a pension plan, the value he accrued in the first plan would be transferred to the second. Now I would not rule that out absolutely, but there certainly are, as I see it, some very serious difficulties in it, Mr. Speaker, and the most serious difficulty is that, if the second plan is less favourable than the first, the fact that the money contributed on behalf of the employee to the first plan was transferred to the second might result in loss of benefits to that employee.

I therefore think that any legislation that is brought in here should not accept the transfer of value principle except as an alternative method to be used in a situation where the superintendent of insurance, or some other impartial person is satisfied that the employee does not lose benefits as a result.

This bill is not perfect in every detail. The subject is a complicated one, and if I had really thought this bill was going to pass, I probably would have made it somewhat longer. There are some details I would have tried to spell out.

But I was of the opinion that that was probably a waste of time, so instead, I have tried to put forth, as clearly as possible, only the basic principles involved.

I think the plan outlined is a sound one, and I think it can be put into operation.

The government has a committee studying this matter which, I had hoped, would be prepared to bring in legislation on the subject during this session.

I was disappointed to learn, through the press, that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) does not think that it is possible to bring anything in before the 1961-1962 session at the earliest.

I really think that he ought to get his committee working in high gear, and let us have something next February. I agree that in a complex matter of this kind, study is desirable; but you can study a thing to death, and study can be an excuse for inaction. You can even study to the point where you do not know where you are going yourself.

I do not think any hon. member in this House disagrees with the principle of portable pensions—if there is, I have no doubt he will stand up and express himself during this debate. So, if we agree on the principle, and if we can see the main lines of direction for putting that principle into effect, let us get some people really working on this, now.

I see no reason why legislation could not be brought in during the second portion of the current session of the Legislature.

I think legislation of this kind is badly needed, is overdue; and I would urge the government to reconsider its programme with a view to acting immediately. I say this although I realize that they are not likely to adopt my bill; but I would have no complaints at them failing to vote upon, or adopt my bill if I had a clear assurance that we were going to get a government bill before us in the reasonably near future.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in this particular debate. I agree with the observations of the hon. member for Woodbine. I am of the same opinion that he is, that there is not an hon. member in this House who does not agree with the principle of the bill.

I am not going to attempt to criticize the bill in its mechanics; I think the hon. member has very honestly pointed out that there are mechanical difficulties, some of which are inherent even in the bill he has presented.

I think that he accurately demonstrated that the essence of portability is in the determination of vestiture—or vesting, as they talk in the trade.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to take very little time with this matter. The hon. members of my party have supported portability of pensions for a long while. It has become an inherent part of our programme, and it will continue to be so.

But I would say this, Mr. Speaker: All

3 parties represented in this particular Legislature are in favour of portable pensions. I ask you to use your influence, and I beg all the hon. members here to use their individual influence, to avoid any political football. That study is necessary, we all agree; that study is required immediately, we all agree; but I would hope, now that the merits of this particular bit of social legislation have come to the fore, that the government will not postpone the implementation of portable pensions until the time of the next general election, and make an issue of it. That would not be fair to the public.

Mr. Speaker, we have an opportunity now to get together—and I say for my part, and for my party, that we will co-operate with anybody, now and in the immediate future, to bring early legislation into fruition. It is our responsibility, now that all parties are agreed, now that there is no difference of opinion in principle, and now that there is agreement on all sides that there are mechanical problems which I am not going to try to either magnify or minimize. But here is an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate a little bit of statemanship, a little bit of the thing we constantly talk about glibly.

Here is a legislative body that can do something for the people of Ontario, and I do not think this is a fight between management and labour. My observation is that management is all for it; I do not think they are going to ask for anything but equitability. There are mechanical problems, of course. I acknowledge this. They must be met, and can be met immediately. From people I have talked to, particularly in the insurance field, I have learned that there are a number of ways of tackling this problem.

It may well be that the way of tackling the problem is the way which is outlined in the bill—that is, to determine that all premium payments will vest after one year. That is a very sensible approach to the solution of this problem.

Others have suggested that this particular approach is weak to the extent that some contributions at the present time provide for straight-line contributions, and others a so-called sliding scale, so that in effect you would be favouring one group over another. Well, that is a mechanical problem, Mr. Speaker, that can be worked out, I am confident. I am going to make a simple, direct appeal to the intellectual honesty of every hon. member here.

What matters is that here we have an opportunity to do something, to do it promptly and effectively, for the benefit of all of us.

If the government wants to take credit in the course of the next year for its implementation—fine. I have no objection to that.

Please, Mr. Speaker, I beg of the government that it refrain from the normal, natural political temptation to use this as an issue in the next general election. There is no need for it.

We are agreed that implementation can come after reasonable study, and a reasonable study can commence now.

The Department of Economics has had this matter under its care for a year. It has done what it can do, I am sure. Now what is required is the advice and the information of persons interested in the implementation—the insurance industry, the representation from industry and from labour—to work out the mechanics.

That can be done in short order, and my simple plea, naive as it may be, is that we refrain from partisanship for the benefit of all.

I think it would be a great demonstration of the political honesty of the hon. members of this Legislature, and of integrity in Ontario, if we could move forward quickly and effectively.

That, Mr. Speaker, is my plea.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to say that a full opportunity will be given to the hon. members of this House to discuss this matter, a greater opportunity than is available in a case such as this where we are trying out a principle of allowing hon. members to introduce certain bills to provoke discussion. In this they may be more earnest in their efforts to obtain enactment than the hon. member for Woodbine has confessed in this particular instance.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister told us he was not going to let us have a vote on it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I did not say anything of the sort. But I want to say this, sir, that I am quite anxious to accede to what he has suggested. As a matter of fact, I am one of those who never like to play politics, and I point out to the hon. leader of the Opposition that it is a relief to have a suggestion of that sort, to which I readily accede.

May I deal with this bill first of all and say that if this difficult matter were as simple as the hon. member for Woodbine indicated at the outset of his remarks, I would have supported it at once. I think all hon. members of the House would.

But it is not as simple as that. The hon. member himself confessed, after saying it was a simple solution which might be enacted, that it was in fact far from perfect in detail. To say it is not perfect in detail, I would point out, is a great understatement.

In section No. 2, which is really the important section of this bill, the hon. member refers to the justice of the situation. That is an element, I think, not limited to the hon. member for Woodbine. It is not limited to one party or one individual hon. member here. We all want justice for both the employer and employee. There are very many cases in Ontario, sir—in order to provide for stability of employment, security of employees and so on—where the employers are paying the full cost of plans. As a matter of fact, some of them were introduced years ago in ridings that are represented by the hon. members opposite. The plans were never the subject of negotiations. The employers did that for the purposes of providing stability in their own area.

I would refer the hon. member for Woodbine to one statement he made which I think is derogatory of long-term employees. I hardly think it is fair to say that if an employee hangs around long enough he will get the pension. That is entirely the wrong attitude. We should encourage the long-term employee.

Sir, there are very many matters that can enter into this situation and make a just and equitable solution extremely difficult. There are, of course, very many cases where an employee may have paid into a fund for a number of years. The employer has also done so. Perhaps it is possible for the employee to obtain employment in another industry that has no plan whatever, though he is able to get higher wages in that industry for the time being. But there is not much justice to the situation in asking the first employer to provide a pension in another industry. That is just one of the almost limitless facets to this problem.

In Ontario I believe we are very much ahead of the other provinces. I might also say to the hon. members opposite that at the Premiers' conference, held last week, several provincial Premiers—some of them from the west—showed very great interest in our work on portable pensions. They asked us to advise them of our findings.

Throughout Canada there is very great interest in this immensely complicated subject. It is a subject of very great importance for the basic reason that it is difficult for people of 45 years of age to find employment. When you look at the course of history and the course of providing pension plans, as has been done in the last 25 years to an increasing extent, it was never anticipated until fairly recently that we would run into the difficulty we are running into now at the other end of the cycle, as it were. I think it extremely desirable that we here in Canada should attempt objectively to solve the problem.

As the hon. member for Woodbine said, it would be desirable to have a Canadian solution. With that I agree. On the other hand, if that is not possible, let us try for a provincial solution. That is what we are endeavouring to do.

Regarding a Canadian solution, there is a multiplicity of problems across Canada. We also have a multiplicity of problems in this province in relation to this situation, but I think we should see what we can do to bring the matter to a point of understanding and—I agree with the hon. leader of the Opposition—to a point of action if we can do that in whole or in part.

I might describe to hon. members what we have been doing. We have on the committee Professor D. C. McGregor of the University of Toronto, who is a very well-known economist and authority in matters of this sort. We have Professor Charles Hendry, whom I mentioned here last session, who is also an expert on the matter. We have brought into the committee Professor Robert Clark of the University of British Columbia, who I suppose—not only because of his training but also the investigation that he made for the federal authorities—is one of the very outstandingly knowledgeable persons in Canada or elsewhere in connection with portable pensions. Also we have brought in Richard Davies, the director of the Canadian welfare council.

The subject has been carried along—I should not say principally but I think I am right in saying largely—under the direction of Professor McGregor and Mr. Gathercole, who have jointly chaired this small committee. We propose, sir—I think about the end of the year but in any event in lots of time for the continuing session next year—to table and make available to the hon. members of this House and to the public a white paper which will encompass what has been done to date.

I will discuss with the House the proceedings following that, but I had thought the best method of dealing with this, at that time, would be to refer the white paper and the report to one of the standing committees of this House. This procedure would allow the hon. members of the House to have the most free discussion; not only in question and answer; but in every other way. That should give us the full background of this problem—what has to be met; what has to be done—and after discussion we could recommend to the chairman what other action we should take, whether it should be in the form of a select committee of this House or something of the sort, to deal with these highly complicated but very important matters.

The bill itself, of course—I think the hon. member for Woodbine will agree—is perfectly unworkable the way it is.

Mr. Bryden: It certainly is not. It is just that the hon. Prime Minister does not want to find it workable.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would ask the hon. member to listen to the hon. leader of the Opposition who, as hon. leader of the Opposition, is in a sense the leader of the Opposition groups. I would ask him to remember the high plane upon which he put this. I am doing my best, and I would ask the hon. leader of the Opposition to keep it on that high plane. I have some difficulties, but I shall endeavour to adhere to this ideal in dealing with this problem.

I think the method I have outlined is the proper one to take.

I welcome the bill of the hon. member for Woodbine because it gives me the opportunity to say these things to the House and to make this report. With that, sir, I think the proper thing to do is to adjourn the debate until such time as the white paper is available.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, before you adjourn the debate, I hope that the hon. Prime Minister will let me read a communication I received in regard to this matter from the council of the city of Windsor. I would like to make the House aware of it. I hope that I am allowed to do that before you adjourn this debate. I fully appreciate what the hon. Prime Minister has said.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sir, I will postpone that motion if the hon. member wants to read that telegram. On the other hand, it might be more proper to table the telegram and then it would be available.

Mr. Belanger: The letter is not very long so I will just read this to you, Mr. Speaker.

This letter is dated November 21, 1960, addressed to me, and it says:

DEAR SIR:

The following resolution was adopted by council at its meeting held on November 14, 1960:

THAT WHEREAS the chief defects of the pension plan generally in effect in Canada today are that:

(a) great numbers of the working population are not covered by any sort of pension plan, and

(b) many of those who are covered lose a large portion of the benefits through changes in employment without the possibility of carrying built-up pension benefits from one position of employment to another;

AND WHEREAS the result of these defects is that the hard pressed municipalities through welfare assistance must assist those who are retired without adequate pensions or other support;

BE IT RESOLVED THAT this council petition the federal and provincial governments to take every step to remedy these defects by the establishment of a system of social security which would make available contributory portable pensions to all employed persons;

AND BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT other cities of Ontario be asked to endorse this petition.

I hope that this will be considered by the committee and by the people whom the hon. Prime Minister has mentioned. I certainly do not question the people the hon. Prime Minister has selected for this, but I do hope it will be given consideration.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I received a copy of that same telegram. Again, I think, we are all in agreement with the purposes of the telegram. That is what we are endeavouring to deal with.

Sir, I would make the motion to adjourn the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I propose we deal with the 3 estimates that were mentioned yesterday, then follow by going into the Throne debate. Tonight I would like to give consideration to some of the bills in committee on the order paper including the legislative assembly bill. May I say to the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) that considerable midnight oil has been burned on the subject which he raised at the conclusion of the debate, and I hope that we may be able to find an answer.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. W. E. Johnston in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Vote 1501 agreed to.

Vote 1502 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR

Vote 1201 agreed to.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, is this the appropriate place to ask the hon. Prime Minister what is the status of the new home for the Lieutenant-Governor? I hear vague rumours about changes in the status or some changes in the picture that was related to the House by the hon. Prime Minister a year ago. Are they accurate or are we still about to receive a home for the Lieutenant-Governor a year or so from now?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I would say to the hon. member that the matter is unchanged from last year. Dr. Samuel presented this house and gave the deed for the house to the province of Ontario. The position is that Dr. Samuel is very old, and an honoured citizen of this province.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right. I tell you, he is a great man. I do not know of any greater Canadian than Dr. Samuel, a wonderful man. That he takes on Metro single-handed raises my estimation of him very greatly. It is a question of David and Goliath. I wish him well.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Dr. Samuel gave his house to the province and there is no reservation in the deed whatever. But he is living in his house as I would hope he would do, as others would hope he would do, until he desires to leave the house himself or until he passes away. I must admit that I would hate to see this fine old gentleman leave his home and feel he was compelled by a sense of duty to do so.

I want to say to the hon. members opposite, two of whom had to do with the depredations committed in connection with the Government House in Ontario, that with other Premiers I was invited to the Lieutenant-Governor's home in Quebec, Spencerwood—or, as they call it now, Bois de Cologne. I saw there articles collected since the beginnings of the province of Quebec. Some of the other Premiers mentioned the Government Houses in their provinces containing traditions and history going back before Confederation. The Quebec residence goes back into the early days of the nineteenth century.

I could not help thinking how I would like to have my good friend, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), with me in looking at the contribution that home makes to the way of life of our French-Canadian compatriots.

There are people who purchased art treasures from the residence which was put under the auction hammer here some 25 years ago. They have offered to give them back to the province, and I hope that the time will come when again we will have a place of residence for the Queen's or King's representative, as the case may be, which will be in keeping with the great people and traditions of this province, and where great objects of history and art can be collected to go with the dignity of our province.

I would say that is Dr. Samuel's idea and purpose and I think all of the hon. members of the House would agree. I certainly hope so, and I hope in the course of time these depredations of other days will be corrected.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Chairman, I think that is all fine, of course. The hon. Prime Minister seemed to put it on pretty thick. But I was thinking of the problems that he is facing; that he cannot finish highway No. 401 because he has no funds; he cannot build the overpass in Windsor because he has not any funds; he cannot build a public works building in Windsor because he has not any funds, or at least that is his argument. Teachers' colleges and things of equal and grave importance are needed all over the province—and there are 120,000 people out of work—but he cannot institute a public works scheme to put people to work. Yet now he is thinking about taking over a white elephant.

I just want to say this, that it is just typical of his fuzzy thinking. But it really is not a joke.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It has not cost us a cent yet.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: Well now look, you office boys over there, just keep quiet for a moment. I do not want to deal now with the small fry. I will come to the hon. members after a while.

But I think it is nearly time the hon. Prime Minister put his thinking cap on. In 1932, there was a great man elected president of the United States. There were some 6 million people out of work and the banks were closed. And I am sorry if I mention the name of that great man in the same breath with the name of the hon. Prime Minister of this province, because I can assure you that there indeed is no comparison at all. It is a crime that I should even be thinking this way.

But I want to tell the hon. Prime Minister something. He is a great man on history and all he has done here for the last while back is to give us speeches on ancient history. If we have a depression or recession, if we have people out of work, he says we are only peddlers of gloom, and that the depression did not start in the last year, it started back in 1952, or Hepburn may have had something to do with it. But he should get his feet out of the mud, get himself on a fast track—ask the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Hanna) back there, he will tell the hon. Prime Minister about a fast track—and start thinking in terms of 1960.

Getting back to that great man I was speaking about, in 1932 he was a cripple. But the hon. Prime Minister is a man of sound limb. I said "limb" only, I did not go any further than that. And with this president's great heart, his humane heart, his warm heart, and with his fair mind, and his common sense, he set about right after he was elected to open up those banks, to institute a work scheme and start putting back these people to work who, unfortunately, were unemployed.

Now, our hon. Prime Minister is so interested in ancient history that I have a suggestion I want to make to him.

Read the life story of a great American president, tear a few pages from his book, let him bare his mind of all this fuzzy thinking.

Here we are spending time worrying about taking over an old house. This gentleman admittedly is a very fine man and I think he means well; but we have other worries, like the retarded children problem, and there are many old people who are looking for a home.

This is not a matter of urgency. If we have no funds to do what we need, if we have no funds to deal with matters of extreme importance, why should we waste any time worrying about patching holes on an old house?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, some of my hon. friend's remarks I might take more seriously, some I might even have taken to heart—but they are roughly the same as the great organizer made up in Temiskaming, and they did not pay too much attention to him up there.

Perhaps I should not get myself disturbed and pay too much attention to what he says at the present time.

Mr. Reaume: My dear hon. friend, just a moment please. I want to answer this. The hon. Prime Minister will have a chance about 10.30 or so.

Going back for a moment, the hon. Prime Minister is the one who brought it up. I did not bring it up, but I do not mind speaking about it. It might be well for the hon. Prime Minister, too, if he were to have a meeting with his brains trust and analyze the outcome of those votes up there in that riding and by-election. The strength of our party grew and the majority of the hon. Prime Minister's party dropped.

An hon. member: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, yes, the majority dropped.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no. Every place the hon. member went, we did—

Mr. Reaume: Just a minute—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: I had the greatest laugh I ever had in my life as I was driving the streets of Haileybury. The Progressive-Conservatives had headquarters in that area, and it looked for all the world like Johnny Fullerton's mortuary.

On one side they had a picture of the great hon. Prime Minister of the province; on the other side, right next to it, one of the member-elect for Temiskaming (Mr. Hoffman). They had both pictures draped in purple, with a beautiful pot of flowers sitting beside the hon. Prime Minister, and a beautiful pot sitting beside the member-elect—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, just a minute. It worked. The hon. member does not know anything about politics.

An hon. member: Look at the results. It worked.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: And when they had it arranged, the great white father blows into town and gives the people a party. He serves them a little cup of tea, a cookie, and a cracker. Then, of all the days to pave the main street and all around the polling subdivision, was that particular day that we voted.

Let us drop around for a moment to the other act at Simcoe Centre—

Mr. MacDonald: Was that play running in Temiskaming, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Reaume: Why does the hon. member not stop talking! Because the hon. member's party fell completely out of the picture in that riding. I just want to make this statement—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: I just want to make the statement that the hon. Prime Minister should put hon. CCF members on his payroll because the greatest help he got in both of those ridings came from those hon. members. The total results show that Simcoe Centre, that great old Tory riding, dropped from a majority of 2,100 down to 500 and something. Now, that is an indication—

An hon. member: Was that in Temiskaming?

Mr. Reaume: Now, I was in both ridings. But I think that the hon. members have to admit—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The hon. member about lost his shirt—

Mr. Reaume: But I think that hon. members have to admit—Well, what did the hon. member for Woodbine lose?

Listen; there are more fleas on the top of a mangy dog's back than the votes his party got in either riding.

The way they holler about it—What are they hollering about? Peterborough? That was a federal election; now we are talking about the province.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): May I ask—

Mr. Chairman: Will the hon. member please get back to—

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Chairman, I did not bring up the matter of the by-elections. I just wanted to bring these things to your attention.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Might I just say a word on this subject? I have listened to the hon. member for Essex North make derogatory remarks about our hon. Prime Minister. I wanted to ask the hon. leader of the Opposition if all his hon. members over on that side felt that way towards our hon. Prime Minister? Do they all feel they can agree to the remarks of the hon. member for Essex North about our hon. Prime Minister?

Here is a strange thing, Mr. Chairman, if that is the collective thinking of the Opposition. I have a piece that I clipped out of the Port Arthur News-Chronicle under date of October 7. I would like to read it to the hon. leader of the Opposition because I have just heard such derogatory remarks as those coming from the hon. member for Essex North. This is an authentic press report and it says this:

EVEN LIBERALS LIKE FROST

I can now see why the people have been returning Premier Frost to the government for such a long time. With his dynamic leadership and the inspiration he has given us here tonight, he is likely to remain for a long time—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Wait a minute, my hon. friends in opposition. I continue:

This was the reply speech of thanks to the speech by Progressive-Conservative Prime Minister Leslie Frost to the north-western Ontario municipal association Thursday night at the Royal Edward hotel, Fort William.

And here is the punch line:

The thank-you reply was given by Liberal John Chapple, MPP, Fort William—

I would just like to say to the hon. members of the Opposition that that reply of the hon. member for Fort William is apparently the collective thinking of all hon. members over there in the Opposition. I will tell them this, that they are 100 per cent correct because every hon. member on this side of the House feels the same way about the hon. Prime Minister of this great province.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): This is very interesting because the hon. Minister has not mentioned one particular fact; that after I made that statement, I said, "I am very sorry, ladies and gentlemen, I have been carried away as if George Wardrope were doing this." I did admit I made a mistake and I am very sorry but I really did not mean what I said.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): I will say he is an expert on unemployment, he has enough of it!

ESTIMATES, PROVINCIAL AUDITOR

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, the estimates of the Provincial Auditor may be considered by many to be routine for the reason that the greater part of the money to be voted is for salaries. However, I would like to point out to this House that the Provincial Auditor (Mr. Cotnam) is a person of very great importance to this Legislature, particularly in his responsibility as an individual.

I think the hon. members would agree that the Provincial Auditor of this province needs to be a man of undoubted integrity and, in addition, he should be an auditor of outstanding ability and also be capable of setting up an organization capable of adequately auditing the financial operations of this government.

Now, it has seemed to me that the Auditor, the man who occupies this position now, is such a man. And when I was thinking about saying a word of appreciation I came across a letter that was written on February 14, 1938, and it seemed to me the hon. members of this House would be interested in hearing it read. The letter was written to hon. M. F. Hepburn, Prime Minister and Provincial Treasurer, Parliament Buildings. I quote:

DEAR MR. HEPBURN:

I have been discussing with Mr. Walters the question of my resigning my position because of the condition of my health and being greatly concerned as to the future of the department with which I have been connected for over 40 years, I take the liberty of writing you with regard to my successor.

I wish to bring to your attention my assistant, Mr. H. A. Cotnam, who is a chartered accountant and a Bachelor of Commerce, and who has qualifications beyond these academic ornaments. He is zealous for the service and above all he is loyal to his position and to those in authority over him. The staff respects him and serves him cheerfully. And I respect him and am grateful to him for the way he has supported me. He is in every way eminently fitted for the position of Provincial Auditor and as one of the severing acts of my 40 years of service, I write this letter recommending him for appointment to the position which I shall shortly vacate.

I have discussed this matter with your controller of finances, Mr. C. S. Walters, who will support and add to my recommendation.

Assuring you of my true personal regard and my very best wishes, believe me,

Yours very sincerely,

(signed)

G. A. BROWN, Provincial Auditor.

That was 22 years ago. And in reading this appraisal of our Provincial Auditor, Mr. Harvey Cotnam, I am reading the verdict of one who died shortly after with 40 years of service to our province. So it is indeed a voice from the past, more eloquent than anything I can say about the capabilities of Mr. Cotnam. It is borne out by the experience of more than 22 years which have elapsed.

During that period he has not been the servant of the government, he has been by statute the servant of this Legislature.

In his independent position he represents this Legislature and the people. Indeed, he stands over the government. And although I have been Provincial Treasurer for less than 3 years, I want to acknowledge the correctness of the late Mr. Brown's appraisal and Mr. Hepburn's acceptance of it. And I would like to add my own experience. I have found an unswerving loyalty to truth, the faithfulness to duty transcending any other association, and a justice and impartiality which is a tribute not only to the man but to the people of this province whom he serves.

Mr. Cotnam has been a sound advisor to me, truly he never hesitates to disagree with my judgment when he finds it necessary. However, I consider I am most fortunate to be able to look to one with his character for advice and guidance.

And I may say when offered other appointments, and this has been the case, he has always said in his modest way that he prefers to be a good Provincial Auditor. I would like to say this afternoon that no auditor of any province, of any government in Canada, could surpass him. Indeed he is the best Provincial Auditor.

I would like to associate with him his very able deputy, Mr. George Spence, and all of those to whom I should like to refer personally who are associated with this great work which is being carried on continuously every day in the interest of the government and the people of this province.

It is a wonderful source of satisfaction to be able to feel always that we have such a competent person and such a competent staff in The Provincial Auditor's Department. It gives me very great pleasure and the utmost satisfaction to work with Mr. Cotnam and his staff.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): With the remarks of the hon. Provincial Treasurer I enthusiastically agree. It has been my pleasure, Mr. Chairman, to have the occasion to inquire about many things, particularly when I first became a member of this Legislature, both of Mr. Cotnam and Mr. Spence. I found them to be very honourable gentlemen, very knowledgeable gentlemen, very loyal gentlemen. And, Mr. Chairman, I assure you, in spite of my brief remarks, that I want this House to know that I concur entirely with the observations of the hon. Provincial Treasurer and I think that in these men we have ideal servants of the province of Ontario who have given of their time generously, and have been of great assistance to this Legislature and the people.

There are, however, a few remarks that I would like to make at this time related to the position of Provincial Auditor. The hon. members may recall that a year ago I raised the point as to whether or not the Provincial Auditor was effectively independent and I am confident that he is. Then I asked whether or not the hon. members of this House should have free access to the Provincial Auditor; whether in fact he could be or should be an advisor to all hon. members of the House. I would hope that eventually his position will evolve into exactly that.

I would question whether or not he should be in any way under the jurisdiction of the hon. Provincial Treasurer. I would wonder whether it wise that he should be—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): We have to have the estimates somewhere.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is true, they must be some place. With that, I agree. But, Mr. Chairman, the elementary point I am making is the point that was made in the Royal commission, and that is that this is the one institution we have in government in Ontario where members of Opposition can go to a facility of government to make inquiries and gather information.

I am not making this request as a result of any consultation whatever with Mr. Cotnam. But it would seem to me that Mr. Cotnam is at the present time under certain disability, under certain reticence. I think he should be stripped of any concern whatsoever. I think he should be perfectly free to give the Opposition any information it wants at any time. I think this should be thoroughly, honestly and wholesomely understood by all so that there is no reticence on our part about approaching this department for information and advice.

My understanding of the Provincial Auditor is that he should be a watchdog over the Treasury, a watchdog over all financial affairs, that he is no more the servant of government than he is of Opposition, and that the opportunity be available to us at all times to consult him. My experience has been that one of the defects in our parliamentary system here in Ontario is the weakness of the opportunity of Opposition to gather information. We really have no facility, and we should have, for better government.

I am not making this as a personal plea but as an objective plea. I think better government will be served more effectively in Ontario only when the Opposition is afforded more facility for research, investigation and the accumulation of information applicable to the administration of the government.

The second point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, is this, that a year ago we asked whether or not such departments and commissions as Niagara parks, as I recall, and the Ontario hospital insurance, workmen's compensation, Ontario water resources and the international bridge have come under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Auditor.

You will recall, sir, that it was our plea that all commissions be audited by the Provincial Auditor. I would ask the hon. Prime Minister at this stage whether or not that request has been implemented.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I say something to the hon. leader of the Opposition about the first part of his question—about the Provincial Auditor and his capacity to advise members of the House; to advise the Opposition, to advise the government.

It would be unfair to drag the Provincial Auditor into the position where he becomes a figure in controversy. We have, in recent years, left the Provincial Auditor completely independent—not a member, for instance, of the Treasury board, not a member of any board or committee, but as a servant of the Legislature.

If he finds the government is doing something with which he disagrees, he must be in a position to rap the government over the knuckles. That is the duty of a Provincial Auditor and that is the position in which he should be. When the hon. Provincial Treasurer refers to the advice, and he refers to the Auditor, it is in that sense.

We have endeavoured to assist the hon. leader of the Opposition in his problem. We pay for a research man to help in those things. I think that is the proper way for Opposition members to be assisted. We have come a very long way from the days when the Opposition was given $1,000 with which to do all business. That was a few years back. We have gone a long way in providing staff and research people.

If hon. members of the House could go to the Provincial Auditor to ask for this, that, and the other, before long they would drag the Auditor completely into politics. That is not the idea of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

We endeavour to have the Provincial Auditor disassociated from any responsibility for the executive work of the government, other than that he is there to keep the departments straight, and to criticize practices, if the procedures are not being followed as they should.

I think the answer, to what the hon. leader of the Opposition is raising, is that if his research facilities are not great enough and strong enough, let us have another look at them. It is only a short time ago since I did that with the hon. leader of the Opposition, and I thought then that he had found that the facilities were a lot better than they had previously been, and perhaps were approaching something in the form of adequacy.

One never attains perfection in these matters. That is one of the great problems of government.

If we had a perfect organization, that would be a very wonderful thing. But, in these days of great change and alteration, it is difficult, if not impossible, to attain that. If the Opposition here, say 20 years ago or 15 years ago, had had the organization that he has now, then it would have been counted as being perfection to the nth degree.

It may not be perfect today, and I am quite prepared to discuss that with the hon. leader of the Opposition. I am anxious that the accommodations and the facilities of the Opposition should be as perfect as possible.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, before the hon. Provincial Treasurer replies to the second portion of the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition, I wonder if I may comment, because it was the sole point that I was going to raise before we considered these estimates.

I would judge that the specific answer to the question that the hon. leader of the Opposition has raised is that the hon. Prime Minister is not, at least immediately this year, planning to expand the staff to include auditing of these other government agencies, because I note that the salary item has gone up from $404,000 to $419,000, which I would guess no more than covers normal salary increases during one year.

I would like to add my plea that the staff of the Provincial Auditor be expanded to include all agencies with the possible exception of Hydro. I set Hydro aside for the moment; perhaps it is worthy of consideration by itself.

I know that this is a matter that the select committee on government reorganization, which both the hon. Provincial Treasurer and myself happen to be on, is considering; but I would draw to his attention that on some occasions the government has anticipated the decision of the select committee and has done something, and I would like to put this item into that category.

I would like to see the government move on it, before we consider it any further, for this reason: the man who really put his finger on the principle involved, and did so in his characteristically forthright manner, was Watson Sellar when he was before the committee.

The chairman of our committee, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), in discussing the position of the Niagara parks commission—and I take it that is just one of those that is beyond the jurisdiction of the Provincial Auditor—said to Mr. Sellar, in effect: “Are you suggesting that because this was done by an outside auditing firm that it will not get as completely a reliable audit as you would get from a provincial auditor? Surely you would not suggest this,” the hon. Attorney-General argued, “because, after all, these firms are duly licenced,” and so on.

Watson Sellar did not bat an eyelash on the issue. He said: “I am suggesting this”—and the point he made was that if a firm is doing a job for the Niagara parks commission, the Niagara parks commission is their client, and they would be something more than human if they did not want to please the Niagara parks commission.

Let me put it in terms no stronger than this.

The possibility is that they will not do as fearless an audit as should be done on public auditing of an agency such as the Niagara parks commission. Watson Sellar, from his almost incomparable wealth of experience in this field, clearly suggested that all of these agencies should be brought under the Provincial Auditor.

I think the case is so conclusive that I am a little puzzled as to why the government has not moved on it. Maybe this is just another item which, when I dig, I discover they have decided to move, and that the hon. Provincial Treasurer is going to announce it when he rises.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I may say to the hon. members that the Provincial Treasurer is prepared to see that money is provided to carry on these audits, and the amount of money that is being asked for in these estimates was increased because of the possibility of taking on some of these audits. The preliminaries, I may say, are the same as last year, and I can assure the hon. members that we are prepared to take them on.

The Niagara parks commission was mentioned particularly. The year of the Niagara parks commission ended October 31, and if it was decided to have this work done by the Provincial Auditor, it was thought that the matter would be left until the debate on the report of the select committee on government organizations, and that will be before long.

I would like to assure the hon. members opposite that there is no thought of not taking over some of these other organizations.

I might say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that the International Transit Company is presently being audited.

We have taken on two new audits this year—the International Transit Company at Sault Ste. Marie, and the Star Transport Company at Timmins.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Would the hon. Minister tell us what the Star Transport Company is, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The company that was purchased by the Ontario Northland Railway.

An hon. member: How long ago was that?

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): May I ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer if we have yet had the auditor's report for the last fiscal year tabled?

Hon. Mr. Allan: I am informed that it will be ready at the beginning of the session in the new year.

Mr. Nixon: I think there are certain requirements in The Audit Act that this report should be available within so many days after the opening of this session following the close of the fiscal year. I know I have always read this report with a great deal of interest before the estimates have been discussed in the House in the past, and found it of tremendous help and assistance.

My recollection is that it is not only tabled the second day but is in our post office boxes, so that every hon. member has a copy sent him.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I might inform the hon. member for Brant that the Act states that the report of the Auditor shall be delivered to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council, and laid before the assembly, within 10 days of the first session held in the following calendar year. We are informed by Mr. Cotnam that he will have it ready by that time, and the bulk of the estimates will, of course, be considered after that time.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that the committee do now rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions, moves the adoption of the report and asks leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. G. W. Parry (Kent West): Mr. Speaker, I will now complete my brief address. I think what I was discussing, at the close last night, had regard to research work.

I want to say to the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) and this government—I am speaking as a farmer—that the research work done for agriculture has been outstanding for the last 15 years. I want to mention one or two things which have taken place during that time.

We have accomplished much toward the eradication of tuberculosis and brucellosis in livestock. I am going over this quickly; I want to come to seed.

We have improved all seeds and we have changed our methods of farming completely—as is well known to all hon. members here. We have mechanized methods of farming and we have seed today of varieties that lend themselves to our methods of harvesting.

I want to pay a great tribute to our colleges and experimental farms for working to that end. Better seed means better farming.

I want to make just a few further remarks about sugar beets, which I referred to yesterday.

To operate both factories at Chatham and Wallaceburg requires 40,000 acres of beets. Now, 40,000 acres of growing sugar beets take a surplus off the market of some other crops—we have no surplus of sugar—I made that statement yesterday.

I might repeat myself because I am saying everything right off the cuff.

Sugar beets are grown under contract—I might say a participating contract. It works out about 50-50.

This contract is not completed for maybe 6 months because there are by-products that are sold later; it is delayed until maybe July of the fiscal year.

So I still want to make clear that we can operate these factories, provided the companies are going to make a profit and the farmers are going to make a profit; and I hope that this will be brought about by negotiation with both governments.

I want to commend the select committee for their report on transactions of business in this Legislature. I, as a private member, would like to endorse their recommendations in their entirety.

First—limitation of speeches: Reading of speeches and clippings from papers and, I might add, old musty magazines dug out of the ash can are wasting a lot of time in this House.

I hope that we can have this enforced. I would say that right now, if I were over the limit of my time, you could call me to order, Mr. Speaker. I am not inferring that hon. Ministers should not be entitled to have some more time; I am speaking only as a private member.

Last session, there were some who made speeches for two hours. We would not have to come back here at night if we could limit these speeches; and I think we would have better legislation.

We would have more time to study bills instead of coming back here and amending bills, year after year.

Now then—this is a hot potato—daylight saving time.

In my riding, we have about 20 per cent on standard time and about 80 per cent on daylight saving. I am not trying to force my issue on the hon. members of this House but I would like to see some uniformity.

I suggest we could have the closing of this daylight saving period when children are going back to school. There are single families that have children going to public, high schools and universities. And I know when I come to Toronto a month ahead of time I sometimes wonder whether I am in the right place or not. I am just putting this out as my opinion as a member of this Legislature.

I have been a bit critical in some of my remarks but to qualify that I think the hon. Prime Minister and this government have given the best legislation that we have ever had in the province of Ontario. We are alive; we are going forward. And I hope hon. members opposite get on the wagon with us.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): I do not know whether the hon. member's invitation to get on the wagon will have wide acceptance in this House. I hope that it will.

Mr. Speaker, may I at the outset take the opportunity to once again commend you, sir, for the very gracious and efficient way in which you conduct the proceedings of this House. It would take up far too much time, sir, were I to, as is the wont of the hon. members who support the government, take the opportunity of commending each and every hon. Minister who has received a promotion. I shall not do that. But perhaps, sir, I may lump them all together by saying that the changes that have taken place in the 36 benches which immediately confront us have, I would think, their advantages and their disadvantages.

The advantages to us are that we can see now all the ministry in one group as well as we can see the minor leaguers who have been moved to the rear row opposite.

I suppose the geographical location of the relief pitchers, so to speak, in the rear row has a disadvantage for the two first rows when they are conscious, as they must be, of the gigantic checker game that goes on over there; at any moment one of them might leap into one of the seats in front of them. There is always that threat. It has, however, served the advantage of keeping the first two rows on their toes.

I come to the House this year with a great deal of optimism about the future of the area which I have the honour to represent. This year it was announced by the two mining companies which moil in the ground for ore in my area, that in the next 5 years there will be a capital investment in the area of approximately $100 million. I would think that my area, in that regard, is singularly fortunate indeed to be endowed as it is by a merciful providence with the rich ore that lies beneath the soil.

The International Nickel Company of Canada made two announcements, one of the extension of further open-pit operations in the vicinity of Copper Cliff, amounting to approximately $26 million and that it would extend the iron ore recovery plant by the investment of a further $50 million.

Falconbridge Mining Company is a much smaller operation and it followed suit with an announcement that it would invest approximately $15 million over the next few years to bring the total close to $100 million.

I am happy to say, in view of this, that a great enthusiasm and optimism has been generated among businessmen and the citizenry in general in the area, and we look forward to an even greater programme of expansion and development.

I might just say a word, sir, about these companies that operate in the Sudbury basin.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I would ask the hon. member if he would adjourn the debate for a short time. If he would, there is a matter I would like to bring up.

Mr. Sopha moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I have just learned the very sad news of the sudden death of our former Lieutenant-Governor, the Honourable Louis Breithaupt, and I would like to say a few inadequate things about that very great man. I have informed the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. Breithaupt was a great citizen of this province. He started his working life as an industrialist and worked throughout the years in industry. Afterwards his great riding honoured him with his election to the House of Commons. There he represented a constituency which for a number of years was represented by Prime Minister Mackenzie King, a very historic constituency indeed, and an area of Ontario which has made a very mighty contribution to the growth and development of our province.

Now the recollections we have of Mr. Breithaupt here are those, of course, associated with the period when he was Lieutenant-Governor of our province. At that time Mr. Breithaupt—and Mrs. Breithaupt who was an indispensable companion and partner in those duties—graced the office of Lieutenant-Governor for a period of 5 or 6 years. During that time I came to know Mr. Breithaupt intimately. My wife and I had the great privilege of staying with Mr. and Mrs. Breithaupt at various times. I very well remember one happy occasion on the Georgian Bay where the Breithaupts are old residents.

He was a man of fine intellect, a man who had the greatest of knowledge of our province and its ways.

He had a great feeling, as is natural, for his people—who came to this province in the early days under very primitive conditions, travelling from that portion of the United States settled by the Pennsylvania Dutch. They were a great people indeed. They came to this area by covered wagon after the fashion of those immigrants in the early days of the last century.

Mr. Breithaupt was a very kindly, knowledgeable gentleman, one for whom I acquired a great regard—both for himself and his wife. Their interests were very broad but, as a matter of fact, the interests of Louis Breithaupt and his wife were basically connected with the spiritual fundamentals that our people have always recognized in this province. That was apparent in knowing them, apparent in their home in a very great way.

I express the regrets of all of us here in this House, particularly those who knew Mr. Breithaupt. I express the regrets of the people of the province he served so well, so faithfully and so long. I am sure, sir, that the hon. leaders opposite will desire to say something, after which, as a mark of respect I would like to move the adjournment of the House until 8 o'clock tonight.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would join in the observations of the hon. Prime Minister. He had the good pleasure of working closely with Mr. Breithaupt, particularly during the last few years of his life.

It had been my pleasure for a long while, Mr. Speaker, to know Mr. Breithaupt as a neighbour. He lived directly opposite to me. Even now his home in Kitchener is within a matter of 100 feet, I suppose, of my own.

His family I have known all my life. Mr. Breithaupt in my riding, in my community, was I suppose the most respected citizen. His family is one of the oldest in the district.

He was I believe the youngest mayor of the city of Kitchener. He became mayor at the age of 27 or 28, something of that sort.

As the hon. Prime Minister said, he and his family have served the industrial community for generations now. His sudden death has come as a shock to all of us, and I can only add our concern, our sympathy, as instructed by the hon. Prime Minister.

The family, sir, and particularly Mrs. Breithaupt, will of course suffer the severe loss of their husband and father. I know that he was a wonderful father to his children—an exemplary father. Most of the family live in my community now.

Mr. Speaker, it does not add to my sincerity to make more extended remarks. I join with the condolences and expressions of regret made by the hon. Prime Minister.

We had, in Mr. Breithaupt, a man who served his community and his province and his country, participated to the full in the industrial development of this part of Ontario, and who was, as the hon. Prime Minister said, a great Canadian and an outstanding citizen.

I wholly support the motion of the hon. Prime Minister that, out of respect of the passing of this distinguished citizen of the province, we adjourn this House until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join in the tribute to Mr. Breithaupt.

It was never my pleasure or privilege to have the opportunity of getting to know Mr. Breithaupt personally, in the fashion that has been with his successor in the position of Lieutenant-Governor. But it always seemed to me that he had filled that position, in the year or two that I was in the Legislature before the end of his term of office, not only with dignity and confidence, but with a lack of ostentation.

I would like to join with the hon. Prime Minister, and the hon. leader of the Opposition, in not only paying tribute to him but in extending condolences to the members of the family who have been bereaved.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, as a mark of respect to this great Canadian and a great servant of our province, I move that the House do now recess to reassemble at 8 of the clock tonight.

Motion agreed to.

It being 5.40 of the clock, the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1960

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, might I express at this time the regrets of the hon. members of the House on the passing of Mr. Arthur Swanson, the first chairman of the Ontario hospital services commission. He passed away yesterday, after a long illness and after much suffering, when he was still active and interested in the progress of Ontario hospitals.

Mr. Swanson, as we all here know, was the business administrator of the Western hospital, and was also for many years the secretary of the Ontario hospital association.

Throughout his whole life he was tremendously interested in hospitals. And the devising of a system of hospital insurance was one of his long-standing objectives.

I would say that, in Ontario, Mr. Swanson's influence made it possible to do what really was not done in other provinces, namely, the bringing together of the hospital association with its different facets—including the Catholic hospitals, the municipal hospitals, the public general hospitals—into a hospital plan.

We have had the very pleasant experience of working in concert with the Ontario hospital association and our Ontario hospitals, rather than being at variance with them. For that, I give credit to the great influence, the great understanding, and the great business ability of the past-chairman.

Mr. Swanson was a familiar figure here, known by most of the hon. members. He gave explanations to this House and its committees in connection with, and in relation to, the problems of hospitals.

I am sure I convey the views of every hon. member here in expressing our great sympathy to his wife and family for the great loss they have sustained.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I acquainted the House with certain developments in economic activity, in the Sudbury riding, by the two companies who carry on business in the basin. These, sir, are American companies.

It is nowadays fashionable among a considerable number of Canadians to decry the economic domination of American capital, and there are those among us who will say there is a great danger of the loss of political sovereignty as a result of the investment of that capital.

This is neither the time nor the place to go into that complex subject, but I would refer, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that it was one subject-matter of the comprehensive survey made by Walter Gordon on behalf of the government of Canada.

There is another aspect to it, sir, and we must always keep these things in balance and make reasonable approaches to them. I might say that, as far as Sudbury is concerned, it has been the recipient of the most bountiful munificence on the part of these two companies.

There is not a project designed to ameliorate the general welfare wherein these companies have failed to give the most unremitting assistance, and, as far as Sudbury is concerned, that is in direct contrast to the activities of other companies and individuals in northern Ontario.

Many hon. members will recall that there have been individuals in northern Ontario who have accumulated great wealth as a result of mining development, and have left that area of our country with scarcely a recognition for the communities that were built to provide that wealth, nor recognition of the workers who moiled in the ground to produce it.

Perhaps one should not speak ill of the dead, but two of the most notable individuals are now dead, and I might say this: this summer I had the opportunity to read the biography of the famous George Brown, one of the founders of the Liberal party in this country.

In reading of his activities and his founding of the Toronto Globe, it cannot help but give a Liberal some cause for regret when one thinks that that newspaper in the mid-thirties came under the control of the Tory party because of a vast amount of wealth which was created in northern Ontario, and taken away from northern Ontario to purchase that great newspaper—which has now fallen on sad days in its unremitting support of the Tory party—and in doing so changing the politics of that newspaper.

Between the sessions, I had the privilege to serve on a select committee of this House, the select committee to inquire into the organization of government. And I do want to express the great feeling of appreciation that I had in serving on it and being able to get to know many of the senior civil servants who are the warp and woof of the government of this province.

I do appreciate the efficiency, impartiality and fairness demonstrated in the management of that committee by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). He treated the hon. members of the Liberal party most fairly in his deliberations and gave us the fullest opportunity to express our views.

Later I will be making some comments about him which are not quite so kind, so I want to take the opportunity to say these words and I say them sincerely.

At the deliberations of that committee, sir, you would hardly have recognized the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald). He is a quiet, passive individual when one gets to know him, and I noticed that all during the committee they exposed him to the charm of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Roberts) who, I might say, effectively denatured him.

In the interval between the sessions, Sudbury was honoured by the visit of several hon. Ministers of the Crown.

During their visit—I wish, sir, to put it most frankly—I was cut to the quick because not one of them with the exception of one whom I shall mention in a moment, took the opportunity to so much as call me on the telephone.

All during their visit, so far as I could see, they were wined and dined and entertained and shown around by some leading members of the Tory party. That is unfortunate, because most of the leading citizens of Sudbury are Liberal and, if they had taken advantage to call me up, I could have introduced them to many of those leading citizens, who would have advised them of the problems which face our community.

Although I am on the most friendly terms with my hon. friend from the Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle), I really do not see why he should bring the hon. Attorney-General to Sudbury and take him around the court house without me being present.

After all, I am a lawyer, and I feel that if I were invited to accompany them around the court house, which has been long a-building—I think it is 4 years now since they started building that court house—then perhaps I might have availed myself of the opportunity in some minor degree, sir, to point out to the hon. Attorney-General some of the problems that we face in the administration of justice among the Queen's most loyal subjects in Sudbury.

But I was denied that opportunity and I hope, in the future, when my hon. friends, the Ministers from the government benches, come to our city they will call me. I do not expect the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) to call me. He was there, he is a very busy man, he arrived in an airplane; it was announced that he was flying over the area to get a panoramic view of it. I would say to him that if he got down out of the airplane to look then he would really have found out something about us, but I do not expect—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, may my hon. friend just let me interject that I confidently expected to find him in the curling rink, with all those curlers. And when he was not there I was disappointed.

Mr. Sopha: Well, sir, I am not yet old enough to curl.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Neither am I, but I thought that the hon. member ought to be there.

Mr. Sopha: Well, let us leave it that way. It may be because when I come to Toronto, I do not call them up. That might be the reason they do not call me.

But there was one noticeable exception—the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope)—and I regret that he is not in his seat when I say this.

When he came up to open that remarkable new prison at Burwash, he invited me down—they did not let me say anything, but invited me on to the platform.

The most strange thing happened; an event of the most unique character. They had 3 clergymen there—and now I am going to approach this subject with the reverence and seriousness that it deserves. They had 3 clergymen there, and each of the clergymen asked a blessing of the Almighty on the occasion of opening this new prison.

During one of the prayers of the clergymen, I began to sense something unusual. For, in his prayer, this clergyman was asking of the Almighty that the authorities at Toronto change their mind about the provision of a chapel in this institution.

I was rather amazed to find that there was no chapel, so I approached this clergyman after the tour was over and I asked him about the matter and he said: "We have no chapel here, we are forced to—all 3 of us—are forced to hold our services in the recreation room which serves as a gymnasium, movie theatre and anything else which is connected with recreation. But though we have asked them they have persistently and obstinately refused to provide us with a chapel."

I raised that matter, sir, at the meeting of the select committee, when the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions attended, and that provoked a further search by Mr. Hudson of the Toronto Globe and Mail as to the departmental policy with respect to chapels in penal institutions. The results of his research were published in a column of the Globe and Mail. To sum it up, I do not want to offend my friend, the hon. member for Kent West (Mr. Parry), by referring to a clipping, but he summed it up when he said that, as far as he could determine, their policy was that they do not provide chapels for the use of these clergymen.

I sent a copy of the clipping to the Salvation Army chaplain at Burwash and, if I may put it on record, a part of his reply will serve to give tenor to the substance of the remark that I make.

He wrote to me:

You will have done us a great favour here if, through your efforts, something might be accomplished. I cannot understand why our political leaders take such an attitude regarding accommodation for chapels in our institutions, when there is not one of them who, when they attend their place of worship, would not want it to be the very nicest and cleanest place possible—to bring about the proper atmosphere of worship.

Is it because anything will do for these fellows? With their new trend of reformation, and this wonderful building here at Burwash, it would seem to me that some thought, in keeping with consistent planning for the betterment of the prisoner, would have been given to this vital need.

The letter is signed, "A. McInnes, Brigadier, Salvation Army Chaplain."

I want to ask the government to reconsider their attitude in respect of this benefit because who is there among us, sir, who can underestimate the power of the spiritual in the reformation of these men? I think if they foolishly assume that there is no need for the provision of such a service as this, then they deny to those who are concerned with reformation one of the most powerful weapons, if not the most powerful, that might be used in returning these people, or some of them, to the paths of useful citizenship.

I want to turn, sir, to the question of a road; in fact, I want to talk about two roads.

I had something to do with a road which accomplished some results, and when I tell the story of that to this House—if hon. members will give me their indulgence and listen, I will leave it to the House to decide whether I will get a road sooner if I follow the first tactic than if I publicize the need for one that I do not have.

Last year in this House, I spoke about the Killarney-Burwash road, and I asked the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass)—unfortunately he is not in his seat tonight—what he was going to do about the completion of that road more expeditiously.

And he said to me—and it is worth just consulting for a moment, briefly, his remarks. He said, first of all:

I might say to the hon. member for Sudbury, the Burwash-Killarney road is a very interesting road. And he might be, if he wrote to people in Killarney as he suggested, in the same position he was with certain hotel owners in the city of Sudbury in northern Ontario—well, that is another story—

But there are many people in Killarney who are grateful to The Department of Highways for proceeding at 5 miles a year and providing employment in the winter-time for a number of men who otherwise would be out of employment due to the loss of fishing in the lake.

Now, I did better than that. He advised me to write to the people in Killarney—in the month of July, I went there.

I went on the occasion of a wedding and those kind people in Killarney—and there are not many who live there—did me the honour of asking me to be master of ceremonies at the wedding reception.

A little later on in the afternoon, a giant bird dropped out of the sky in the form of a twin-engine seaplane; and it carried two smaller birds in the persons of the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) and the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney).

By that late stage in the afternoon—they got there about 5 o'clock—I had that village completely politicked. In fact in the afternoon, sir—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Did they ever have such friends as ourselves in their lives?

Mr. Sopha: Meanwhile, back at the wedding—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We are not in favour of the hon. member attending such celebrations as that.

Mr. Sopha: During the course of the afternoon I received a message through the chief of police that the council was assembled in the council hall, and that they would like me to come up. So I left the wedding and I talked to the council.

The mayor and all his associates were there, and they said: "Look, Mr. Sopha, you know this government is building this road at 5 miles a year, and they have got about 25 miles north of Killarney, and the distance from Killarney to highway No. 69 is about 50 miles. Well, you know how long it is going to take them at that rate.

"What can we do to bring home to this government the necessity of finishing that road?"

"Well, your worship," I said, "let me tell you that I happen to know that the hon. Minister of Highways thinks that you want this road built at 5 miles a year."

"Well," the man said to me, in the fashion of Killarney speech, "it ain't so. There is only a dissident minority here that want us to proceed in that fashion."

"Well, you have got to let them know," I said. "I suggest you pass a resolution now and send it to the hon. Minister of Highways."

So they looked at each other and the clerk was not there and they said: "Well, Mr. Sopha, will you write the resolution?"

I said, "I just happen to be solicitor to two municipalities. I will be glad to write the resolution."

So I wrote the resolution for them and they passed it right then, first, second and third reading. They put the seal on and they passed it.

Mr. R. Belisle (Nickel Belt): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Is the hon. member for Sudbury aware that some 2.5 years ago the full council of Killarney was in to see the hon. former Minister of Highways (Mr. Allan)? The hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin and I accompanied them. They told the then Minister of Highways they objected to him calling tenders. They wanted it to be done on day labour.

Mr. Sopha: Yes.

Mr. Belisle: And the hon. Prime Minister will confirm that.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I know that. They were all Tories and they voted them all out.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member should never call the parish priest up there a Tory. This was all worked out with the community heads and the clergy and everything else to give these people work. That is what we did.

Mr. Sopha: Well, here is the point: I had written the resolution and they had passed it. So they sent me a copy, and the day I received a copy I wrote a letter to the hon. Minister of Highways—that was under date of July 15, and I am still waiting for a reply to that letter; but that is about par for the course.

Professor Parkinson said to us when he appeared before the select committee, "Never answer a letter when a telephone call will do," and the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) said, "This government invented that procedure."

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I tell the hon. member the road is going ahead this winter and that contracts are being let and the road is being pushed through. I do not know whether it had anything to do with that resolution or not, but it is a result of one of those flights that he was mentioning over that country. It is done; that is the way we do business.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I am the first to give credit where credit is due. I merely say that I initiated this.

Concerning the visit I was talking about, which the hon. Prime Minister made when he flew over the area, I am aware that he flew to Killarney. He came to Sudbury and, I believe, it was in Sudbury that he announced that he was going to complete the road, and that the contract would be let. Sure enough, they are busy as beavers on the highway.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to let the hon. member in on the act if he wants to get in.

Mr. Sopha: Now, I want to turn to another road. I have appraised the House of the little influence I had with respect to that. I hope my efforts will be met with comparable success.

I want to talk about the Sudbury-Timmins link and it is not a revelation. I am not telling the hon. Prime Minister anything new, because he has heard about it before. In fact, it was 30 years ago that the famous W. E. Mason of the Sudbury Star and the board of trade of Sudbury first initiated the proposal of a Sudbury-Timmins road.

Ever since that time, sir, it is a most complex and tortuous story of what has happened to that road since, but I can say that as of this date not one shovelful of gravel, not one stick of dynamite, has been employed in the construction of that road. In fact, it was in the winter of 1959 that the Sudbury chamber of commerce—which has been one of the strongest organizations supporting the building of this road—planned the trip by snowmobiles over the frozen wastes from Sudbury to Timmins to dramatize its necessity and this got wide coverage. A band of venturesome citizens of Sudbury were going to take off on these snowmobiles, well supplied with provisions and other things necessary for the trip, no doubt, and they were going to make it all the way to Timmins in order to demonstrate that such a road was feasible.

I do not know if the hon. Prime Minister knew about this, but just before they were about to set out he seemed to take away the necessity for such a dramatic adventure. In the Sudbury Star of March 14, 1959—if I hold it up one can see the importance of the announcement he made and its headline—"OK Sudbury-Timmins Link."

That, of course, is front-page news in Sudbury. It is written by the Toronto bureau of the Sudbury Star and reads as follows:

FROST SEES ROAD SPURRING DEVELOPMENT

Construction is to start this year on the Sudbury-Timmins highway, the road which will link the nickel belt and the gold belt by a direct route.

Premier Leslie Frost told the Sudbury Star he is specially interested in the triangle development outlined in the Star a few years ago which envisaged highway links between Sudbury-Timmins, Timmins-Chapleau and Chapleau-Sudbury.

"The Sudbury-Timmins highway will be built"— and this is a quotation from the hon. Prime Minister—

"—work will be started on it this year."

Then he goes on to tell about his long interest in it.

I do not know whether there is any connection, Mr. Speaker, and we do not know whether there is any connection between the date of March 14, 1959, and June 9, 1959. There may or may not be. However, there was his announcement—purely coincidental.

As I say, I raised this matter in the House last year and nothing has been done yet. The Sudbury and district chamber of commerce in October of this year prepared another brief in support of the highway and it is to be hoped this government will finally do something.

Significantly, a road was built between Foleyet and Chapleau and there cannot be any comprehension of why that route should get priority. One cannot imagine any economic necessity or any purposive of approach, for the development of access roads to mineral areas which would take precedence over the linking of the two largest population centres in northern Ontario.

There we are in Sudbury, balanced purely on an east-west axis. The only road we have is the road that links us with North Bay in the east and Sault Ste. Marie in the west. In addition, the only route of access into the hinterland that lies above us are the two railroads. To all intents and purposes we in Sudbury are more closely linked with southern Ontario than we are with the north.

Surely it is a legitimate aspiration for this great basin—Sudbury containing as it does upwards of 150,000 people—to expand its sphere of influence to the north. A road from Chapleau to Foleyet can only make sense if it is part of a further development which will link highway No. 17 on the south and highway No. 11 on the north. Then people travelling from western Canada could take their choice whether they proceed toward north-eastern Ontario or come down at Foleyet to Chapleau and thence on into Sudbury.

We cannot understand why this government, that pays lip service to northern developments as it does, will not immediately start the construction of that road.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to the hon. member that I would not want to place any priority, Sudbury over Timmins or Timmins over Sudbury. But the Timmins people, the Timmins council and their chamber of commerce pressed for the Foleyet-Chapleau road first of all. We have to listen to somebody, and it seemed to me that it would be a reasonable cause.

When I have the opportunity I will tell the hon. member what some of his people of Sudbury have asked down there. I do not want to spoil his speech but I will be very glad to tell him.

Mr. Sopha: I do not know who these people in Sudbury are who are asking for otherwise. I have before me editorials from the Sudbury Star, which organ surely reflects to some degree the wishes of the people of the basin. One of July 16 of this year says—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I would urge the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree) to pay attention to a complex subject because it takes him a little bit longer than most men to comprehend.

One editorial is entitled: "Can cut round-about mileage with direct northern routes." Another one says: "Government apathy to north may become politically fatal." We know that is true, anyway. "North looks for recognition in seeking"—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I might say to the hon. member, that did not refer to us here.

Mr. Sopha: "North looks for recognition in seeking development aid." Here is a delightful cartoon of the hon. Minister of Highways which is very flattering, showing him apparently talking to a representative of Foleyet. "Highway from Wawa and Chapleau to Foleyet and Timmins." Then he is pushing a citizen of Sudbury back and says, "Beat it, boy, you bother me." Sort of out of sight, out of mind.

Here is another epistle from the Toronto bureau of the Sudbury Star:

Failure of the Throne speech this week to mention any plans for a Sudbury-Chapleau, or a Sudbury-Timmins highway is seen as another nail in the party's coffin as far as the Sudbury district is concerned.

Now what better emphasis could I put to it than remind the hon. member for Nickel Belt of this fact. I might suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that if he will not do this for me, he should do it for my hon. friend because he is in trouble, he is in trouble.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt said last year—and I hope I paraphrase his remarks accurately—that if the hon. Prime Minister does not soon get started on this road, they will not be able to call it the "Frost highway."

Now I am going to leave that with the assurance that an announcement will be forthcoming.

The hon. Prime Minister invited us on this side to say something about the speech from the Throne and I am delighted to do so. I just want to mention in passing I made a speech, at a gathering this summer, about this promise that The Department of Economics will be augmented and strengthened. I would hope so. I do not see any reason why The Department of Economics should not know more about the economic conditions in Ontario than any other single agency elsewhere in the world. It ought to.

The department ought to be able to advise industry or anyone else interested in Ontario. But we sometimes wonder whether in that Department of Economics there be no economists, merely arithmeticians. We sometimes wonder over here what they do about studying the economic conditions of Ontario. We will watch with interest the expansion of this department.

Mr. Speaker, before I approach the next subject, I want to say a word about the constitution of this country. It is a subject that must be approached most fearsomely, especially by a lawyer, because I hastefully say that I am no constitutional lawyer, I am a plaintiff's lawyer. But I did have some opportunity to study both the constitutional history of this country and constitutional law as it has been laid down by the courts from decade to decade.

The Throne speech says:

Ontario has been engaged in discussions with the government of Canada and the other provinces in seeking a mutually acceptable procedure for amending the Canadian constitution solely in Canada.

The hon. Attorney-General, I think it was in October, led a delegation of his associates to Ottawa to speak to Attorneys-General assembled there from the other provinces, in order to make an approach toward a formula for the amending of our constitution in Canada.

That the constitution should be amended in Canada admits of no opposition or of no doubt. Interestingly enough, the province of Saskatchewan was the only delegation which apparently had constitutional lawyers of eminence accompanying it. Now that impoverished province as compared to ours sought the services of Professor Frank Scott of McGill and Dean Cronkite of the faculty of law of the University of Saskatchewan, two outstanding constitutional lawyers.

The delegation from this government, so far as I am able to determine, took with it Professor Brady of the University of Toronto, who is an economist, and Mr. Clifford Magone, a former Deputy Attorney-General. Now Mr. Magone is unquestionably a man of the highest reputation among lawyers. He is not a constitutional lawyer, however. Again so far as I can determine, the hon. Attorney-General did not avail himself of the advice or assistance of anyone versed in the field of constitutional law.

And may I add, sir, that Ontario, aside from Professor Scott, had the most able constitutional expert in the country, in the person of Professor Bora Laskin, who has published a text on the field and has collected and compiled the cases. Now they might have availed themselves of his advice.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): I will tell the hon. member that his definition and references to Mr. Clifford Magone are absolutely unfounded. Mr. Magone is one of the outstanding lawyers in this province. And the Opposition hon. member should never get up and make a statement—

Mr. Sopha: Now I said, and I deliberately pointed this out to the hon. Minister and to all the hon. members of this House, that the government of Saskatchewan took these two able persons with them and we did not, and something very significant happened down there at Ottawa—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They have a good government in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, well, I am not arguing that. But I say that this is something significant which reflects very much to the discredit of this government. When the hon. Attorney-General of our province went to Ottawa, the meeting was held in camera. Now, sir, there is nothing more vital in the framework of our country, and the system under which we live, than The British North America Act. It is the very warp and woof of our existence. And anything done towards the amending procedure of that statute ought not to be done in camera.

The meetings dealing with the constitution should have the fullest publicity and should be under the most searching glare of public scrutiny. But at that meeting, the hon. Minister of Justice of Canada (Mr. Fulton)—to lapse into the vernacular—tried to pull a fast one, and apparently the hon. Attorney-General fell right into the trap. I am glad to see that he is coming to his seat.

The hon. Minister of Justice said to these assembled dignitaries of the provinces: "Let us approach this thing in two stages." He said: "Let us get the Imperial Parliament in Great Britain to give us the power to amend the constitution and then after that we will get together and work out a way in which to do it." I say to him through you, sir, that is no way to approach that document, the importance of which is not rivalled by any other document in this country.

The press report indicates that they agreed with approaching it in that manner. I want to say that the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Diefenbaker) can talk all he wants about the bill of rights, nobody knows what it means yet. I have tried to argue it in 3 or 4 courts. The magistrates hardly recognize the name of it. You get nowhere.

The bill of rights, sir, is pale in significance compared to The British North America Act. And yet before the bill of rights was passed as a result of pressure brought upon the government of Canada, representations were allowed to be made by constitutional lawyers, other learned people, and any interested groups in respect of what should be contained in that bill.

I say to you, sir, if that were the case with the bill of rights, then there is monumental importance that the same opportunity be given in respect of the amendment of The British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I wish to explain one point, which I think is very important in this matter: It is not the problem of drawing a constitutional amendment at all. That can be very easily done here. As a matter of fact, we could call in our hon. friend opposite, I am quite satisfied that he could draw the amendment, although I would want to look it over myself, check it over, after the experience he had with the bill of rights.

But the problem is this: It is the problem of how much of the constitution is to be entrenched. Now you have extremes of views in that. Some provinces—and I would say ourselves—have taken a very generous view of that. We have been prepared to place our interests in the common pool and have the amendment made by some reasonable majority of the provinces and the population.

That is not the point of view accepted by some of the other provinces which are desirous of entrenching very many things. We take the viewpoint that some of the fundamentals of confederation—that is, education, religion and language, certain things that are in the constitution—should be entrenched. Now those things should be entrenched, and by that I mean they would be subject to unanimous consent in the event of amendment. Now I think that is fair and is proper.

On the other hand, in connection with the list of subjects contained, say, in sections 91 and 92 of the Act—particularly 92, that is the provincial section—there are feelings on the part of some of the provinces that a great part of that should be entrenched. It is a question of negotiation on that point. I can say to the hon. member that I think there is a very great possibility of agreement on that subject.

Rt. hon. Mr. St. Laurent called a conference 10 years ago, in 1950. I will say that he made a very great effort to solve that particular problem. It is not a matter of settling it in the market place, and I think the hon. members will understand that. I think that Rt. hon. Mr. St. Laurent was quite right, and I think the present administration is quite right, in trying to solve the problem by conferences among the governments themselves. And I think that the matter is very close to solution.

Ultimately, of course, the whole matter comes back here. But I point out to the hon. member that it is not really a matter of constitutional difficulty. Once there is agreement among the Canadian provinces, then the matter is very simple. It is the problem of arriving at that point of agreement, which I would say has been very much narrowed in the last few months, in the period since last July.

Mr. Sopha: Of course it is a very complex subject.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Very complex.

Mr. Sopha: We know some other hon. members in the House do not realize how complex it became in the last two decades. The late Mr. Mackenzie King felt the necessity of going to all 10 provinces in order to get consent for amendment in respect of old age pensions and unemployment insurance.

And the theory has grown up that there be a British North America Act as a compact. There are some provinces that hold to the view it can only be amended if there is consent of all 10. And yet there is a prevailing view that the federal government may amend the Act at its own will if it is the part of the Act that affects only it. This year it amended the Act in respect of compulsory retirement of judges. And I do not think it got the consent of a majority or all of the provinces to do so.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, it did!

Mr. Sopha: It did? But I do say this, that not all of the brains in the field of law, in the field of constitutional law, are lodged in The Department of the Attorney-General. I do not hold a brief for any lawyer to get him a job, but I say there are at least two men in this province who are well equipped: one of them is Professor Laskin and the other is B. J. McKinnon, who practices downtown. The Department of the Attorney-General, as with the province of Saskatchewan, might avail itself of the wisdom of these men.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, besides Mr. Magone who was present in the delegation, there was Professor Brady of the University of Toronto in our delegation and there was also Mr. Maurice Tremblay, when he was in reasonable health, to help in certain relations. We had a delegation there that I was very proud of, and from whom we got a lot of assistance. All 10 provinces had advisors with them, and there was nothing lacking in expert advice.

Mr. Sopha: We have lived with this statute since 1867. During that time, the power to amend it has been reposed in the Imperial Parliament. It is true that the Imperial Parliament will pay heed to an address of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada and will always amend it. But, as I say, it is almost 100 years that we have now lived with it—there is no precipitate haste to get it reposed in the Parliament of Canada.

But, I say, common sense demands that the widest opportunity be given to constitutional lawyers, political scientists and other learned people—in fact, all interested groups in this country—to make the fullest representation to the federal government in respect of the manner in which this constitution is going to be amended hereafter.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I point out to the hon. member that the basic difficulty is this: It is not what economists, or the type of persons he has mentioned, who would represent a point of view which would be acceptable in, say, Toronto, Ontario, that counts. We have to remember that there are 10 provinces and we have to reconcile the views of the 10 provinces. That is the difficulty.

It is not a matter of drawing the amendment. The amendment could be drawn in 15 minutes, as soon as there is agreement as to what is to be entrenched and what is not to be entrenched, and what is to be subject to the general rules and provisions we have with regard to amendments. It is a simple matter, not of lawyers at all.

It is the simple matter of getting persons representative of these governments who, in a number of cases, are not lawyers at all, to say: "Here, we do not want to be placed in a constitution straitjacket by agreeing to a certain thing that means any province has the right of veto." That is the problem. It is just as simple as that. Yet it is a complicated matter.

Now, Rt. hon. Mr. St. Laurent, a very wise man, attempted to settle that 10 years ago. I may say I would have had no difficulty in agreeing with his point of view.

Mr. Sopha: Yes. Well, I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that we had an opportunity to discuss this vital subject. This goes to the very foundation of our confederation, and it is well that we use this forum to air this problem. But, I just want to say that until agreement is reached in the method of amendment and what should be entrenched, the power to amend the constitution, the actual mechanics of it, should be left with the Imperial Parliament.

Now, I want to turn to another aspect of the constitution, and that is the distribution of legislative powers. I hope I do not provoke the hon. Prime Minister as many times with this aspect of it as I did with the otherwise simple matter—or more simple matter—of amending it.

The other day in his speech he hurled the term "centralist" at us. He said: "You are centralists." Now, surely, the circle has turned a full 180 degrees, because if he would but look at history he would know that Sir John A. Macdonald, the founder of his party, was the greatest centralist—the writer of The British North America Act—that there has been in the history of Canada. I do not need to go into the history of the matter.

Hon. Mr. Frost: But the hon. member has taken his place, unfortunately.

Mr. Sopha: Sir John A. Macdonald and George Etienne Cartier were desirous of founding a strong central government. One of the greatest constitutional lawyers this country has ever seen occupied the highest public office the country can bestow upon a person. That was R. B. Bennett, later Viscount Bennett, who, in the years 1930 to 1935 was the greatest centralist with this new-deal legislation with reference to unemployment insurance, with reference to regulation of the insurance industry. And now the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, completely putting aside history, hurls the term "centralist" at us. He has gone half-circle as compared to the views of those of his colleagues of yesteryears.

I give it as my private opinion, sir, that with all this talk about federal-provincial fiscal relations and all the pressure there is on the provincial government to find and provide revenue, that I, sir, am centralist enough to believe that if we had a redistribution of the powers giving to the federal government those powers which it can better perform and keeping in the Legislature of Ontario those powers of a more local nature, that it can better perform, then a great deal of the pressure upon this government for sources of revenue would be alleviated.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What would the hon. member hand over?

Mr. Sopha: I will tell the hon. Prime Minister in a moment. I will tell him two tonight. Now is not the time to go into the judicial interpretation. But lawyers know; the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) knows. I say this because I have heard Mr. Laskin say that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources often complained to him that he only got 59 percent in constitutional law, and that Professor Laskin said to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources: "What are you complaining about? You only have to be 50 per cent right in the supreme court of Canada and you win."

Those with training in law know that during the last 3 decades of the nineteenth century, and perhaps during the first 3 of the twentieth century, the judicial committee of the Privy Council, abetted and aided somewhat by Sir Lyman P. Duff, who was chief justice of this country for a period, tortured the words of sections 91 and 92 so as to impose upon the provinces of this country duties and responsibilities which it had never been intended that the provinces would perform.

The hon. Prime Minister has asked me for two that I would hand over. Under section 91, the federal Parliament is given jurisdiction over banks and banking. We read in the paper, from time to time, all the anguish of Mr. Coyne as he attempts to influence the monetary policy—supply of money, tight money, easier money, easier credit—through a manipulation of the interest rate, the bank rate it is called, of the Bank of Canada.

Through judicial interpretation of the Privy Council of The British North America Act, the great supply of savings funds were put under the control of the provinces, and I refer specifically to the insurance and trust companies. The amount of money in the hands of insurance and trust companies is infinitely greater than that at any time in the hands of the banks.

Lest the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) and the hon. Minister from St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) continue to think that the main business of insurance companies is to sell insurance, it is not. The main business of insurance companies is to invest the vast sums of savings that come into their hands through the payment of premiums. So because of the great inability of the federal government, try as it might over the years, to get control of the investment policies of insurance and trust companies, one of the greatest weapons in the hands of government to influence the pattern of economic development is denied it, because those companies are subject to the laws of 10 separate sovereign provinces.

I would say to the hon. Prime Minister, if he and the hon. Attorney-General or either of them go to Ottawa, they could do this country a great and abiding service for which they would go down in history. They would be remembered forevermore if they would lead a movement to give that responsibility and that stability and facility to the federal government to control the investment policies of those two financial institutions.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There is no money in that.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Prime Minister could close up The Department of Insurance. Please do not try to distort what I say. I am talking about the broad economic development of this country, and writers downtown in the press, and the smoother covered magazines all over the place, are always decrying the fact that Canadians will not invest in their own country; that we have to import foreign capital.

I say to the hon. Prime Minister that the insurance companies or the trust companies are the last ones to invest in anything of a risky nature. They are content to buy government of Canada savings bonds. They put that vast amount of capital into them, and this government takes no steps to make their investment policies more flexible.

I say, if it were controlled by the federal government, that subtle pressure and other devices could be used in order to funnel that vast amount of funds, which represents the savings of the people of this country, into patterns which are characteristic of more risk.

I am not suggesting for one moment that the trust or insurance companies should invest in moose pasture in the Northwest Territories or anything else. But I say that they are exceedingly conservative in their investment policy.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The argument of the hon. member is that we give this to the federal government so they can give away all our money.

Mr. Sopha: That is not my argument at all. The hon. Prime Minister knows the effort the federal government made down as far as, I think, 1917, even attempting to use the power of criminal law, as he knows, to get control of the insurance companies. They tried every other heading in section 91, trade and commerce, this one and that one, and they failed in all. They took it to the Privy Council on each occasion. Then finally they got down to criminal law and tried to regulate the insurance and trust companies under that code. I believe that was the 1917 case, though I may be inaccurate.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is the way the centralists do business!

Mr. Sopha: Sir Lyman Duff was over in Britain when that case came on for argument, and they invited him to join them on the bench. Sir Lyman Duff said: "Is this the old insurance business coming here once again? I am tired of it." But he talked it out, and the federal government has never tried since that time.

The only way the federal government will get control of the vast accumulation of savings and their investment pattern is if the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Attorney General adopt a rational outlook and lead a movement to repose it in the hands of that government.

The other matter that I say should be given to the federal government is that of labour relations.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask the hon. leader of the Opposition if he wants to hand over the assets of Mutual Life to that sort of administration?

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): I see nothing disturbing about what the hon. member has said.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): What is the matter, does the hon. Prime Minister not trust them?

Mr. Sopha: Well, Mr. Speaker, these interruptions give me the opportunity to consult my notes. I am not speaking from a prepared text.

The other one that I would hand over is labour relations. That may seem startling. It will not seem startling to the hon. members to my left because the organizations with which they are connected, for a long time, have seen the great benefits that can stem from a federal regulation of labour relations.

In the field of labour relations we have 10 jurisdictions that control labour law.

An hon. member: Eleven!

Mr. Sopha: Eleven. Thank you.

The eleventh is the federal government. The federal Industrial Relations, Disputes and Investigation Act covers only about 10 per cent of the Canadian labour force. That is to say it regulates, in the field of labour relations, employees of those industries named in section 91—such as railways and canals—and can regulate the industries that have been declared to be to the general advantage of Canada. That covers about 10 per cent.

In this field we have the same problem of the relationship between constitutional law and social fact. A federal system of government must adapt itself to changing social conditions by amendment or new judicial interpretation or it will create confusion—in fact confusion has been created, progress has been slowed—and contribute to social tension. The purpose of state intervention in labour relations is to relieve tension.

There is a desire on the part of labour for uniformity and that desire for uniformity has found its outlet in pressure for the enlarged jurisdiction of the federal Labour Relations Act. It got little support at various conferences of Ministers of Labour that have been held from time to time; I see no record of any since 1946. It has received no support at all from the Canadian manufacturers' association because industry generally, it becomes apparent, would rather deal with trade unions in 10 jurisdictions than deal with them under one unitary method of labour relations.

If the federal government had enlarged jurisdiction in the field of labour relations it would make impossible the anti-labour legislation that occurred or was passed in Prince Edward Island in 1947, in British Columbia and Newfoundland in 1959. In a federal state the alternative to federal authority is not always or necessarily provincial autonomy. It may well turn out to be anarchy, and in the field of labour relations anarchy has, in fact, existed.

Look, Mr. Speaker, at the absurdity of the packing-house strike in 1947. In that case there was negotiation in Toronto. The negotiation failed to culminate in any agreement and there was a strike of packing-house workers all across the country and, I believe, the 3 major firms involved had plants in each one of the provinces. Premier Drew—and the hon. Prime Minister will probably remember this—initiated conferences in Toronto. Nothing whatsoever came of the meeting. Professor Scott, in an article, has this to say about it:

This strike gave a revealing example of the anarchy that results from big issues being left to small jurisdictions. Because Ottawa could not act, the provinces thought they would try to combine forces and bring about a settlement. At Premier Drew's suggestion, representatives of 7 provincial governments met in Toronto on September 26, 1947, to work out a common plan. There were 6 Ministers of Labour, one Deputy Minister, one observer from Prince Edward Island and one message of sympathy from British Columbia.

Rumour has it that one Minister said the strike was illegal in each province and should be smashed, to which Saskatchewan replied that it was not illegal in Saskatchewan. Nothing came of the meeting except a good lesson in federalism. Even the appointment of a common conciliator could not be agreed upon.

The delegates went sorrowfully home nursing their provincial autonomy. The strike was settled without benefit of law, but it might not have occurred and it will be less likely to occur in the future in this or other big industries if jurisdiction keeps pace or is brought in line with the facts.

Now, to sum it all up, the Canadian congress of labour, in 1958, urged the adoption of this resolution, which was adopted at its convention:

BE IT RESOLVED THAT the congress urge upon the government to declare inter-provincial industries of nationwide scope and importance work for the general advantage of Canada and so bring them under the exclusive jurisdiction of Parliament and within the purview of The Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

Mr. MacDonald: The Liberal majority voted that bill down every time it came before the House.

Mr. Sopha: I have no responsibility for those people.

I pointed out the absurdity of the packing-house strike. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) last year told us about an absurd situation in respect of the same thing, which is worth recounting. I hope I have the facts right. A strike started in the teamsters' union in Montreal and a sympathy strike erupted in Ontario in support of those down in Montreal. Of course, the hon. Minister's conciliators, mediators, and people had nothing whatsoever to do with the strike down in Montreal or its causes, and knew nothing about it at all. All they knew was the fact that there were a number of teamsters in Kitchener or Sarnia or some place who were out in sympathy with them.

The hon. Minister of Labour told us what he did. He called up Jimmy Hoffa, and he said something to Hoffa to the effect that, "I did you a favour once and you said all I had to do was call you and you would settle the strike." And Hoffa said, "I remember that!" Within 24 hours the strike was settled.

I suggested to the hon. Minister of Labour at that time that he should appoint Hoffa as his Deputy Minister. But, at least, it demonstrates the inability to cope, in one province, with an atmosphere of industrial disharmony in another.

Again, if the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Attorney-General want to do something to the enduring and eternal benefit of Canada, they might give a little bit at these conferences and repose with the federal government powers which it can better exercise for the benefit of all of the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there is just one final topic upon which I wish to touch, and that is in respect to the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister addressed the other day insinuating that I and the hon. member for York South were acting in the role of prosecutor by appearing at the Royal commission. I want to give this background to it.

I treat it as a very serious thing—a very serious thing indeed—that a private member of the House, a backbencher, an insignificant backbencher in the House, is the object of criticism from the hon. leader of the government. Certainly it must be a serious matter when the hon. leader of the government goes out of his way to chastise a private member in the Opposition. For that reason, sir, I feel obligated to reply to that criticism.

I want to make it a matter of record right now that concerning the hearing of the Royal commission with Judge Macdonell, I have not the slightest scintilla of shame or regret for appearing there on behalf of my party as I was instructed to do. When the evidence was concluded, my opening remarks to the Royal commissioner were to this effect:

"I am not going to suggest that in any way the hon. Minister of Labour was guilty of any moral wrong in respect of this transaction. No one," I said to the commissioner, "in the Liberal party ever suggested that he was."

And I said, "Mr. Commissioner, it would ill-behave me as a new member of the Legislature to come before this commission and criticize a man of threescore years and ten who has devoted most of his adult life to the public service of this province, and a man for whom I have the highest esteem."

Now that was the background against which I set my remarks.

Then I went on as was my duty to point out to the Royal commissioner those things I felt the hon. Minister of Labour, in the execution of his duties as chairman of the Niagara parks commission and supported by his fellow commissioners on that parks commission, had done wrong. We felt they had carried out their duty without attention to either the law or without attention to good business practice. What I said in my submission forms the foundation of this report.

Now the hon. Prime Minister reads it one way, I read it another. Every submission that we made to them, the Royal commissioner put in his report. The hon. Prime Minister looked at it and he said that is vindication. Well, that is one point of view.

I do want to say this: In respect of the illegality, or at least irregularity, that he mentions in his report, it was I who raised that. The able counsel employed by the commission, Mr. C. F. H. Carson, so far as I was able to ascertain, had not intended to raise this point if I had not done so. Certainly he had his opportunity to bring it to the attention of the commissioner and he did not. It was I who brought that to the attention of the commissioner.

And it might be well—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask the hon. member: If his submissions have been accepted by the commissioner would not the hon. Minister of Labour have been in the position of having to resign?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister is drawing a red herring across—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am asking the hon. member for Sudbury! The hon. member for York South will please stay out of this.

I ask the hon. member for Sudbury: Is that not so?

Mr. Sopha: I think not!

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would ask the hon. member if he ever read the quite well-known statement by Rt. hon. C. D. Howe about approaching a matter with a Bible in one hand and a dagger in the other. Figure that one out!

Mr. Sopha: I am going to read a couple of quotations from men even more eminent than Rt. hon. C. D. Howe, though such are hard to find. But first I want to put on record what the Royal commissioner said about our participation:

I am grateful to counsel for the commission for the research and precise presentation of the evidence. I am also grateful to other counsel, particularly those for the Liberal and Co-operative Commonwealth Federation party who conducted a searching and exhaustive cross-examination of the witnesses.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right, he was referring to the hon. member as a lawyer. I am referring to the hon. member as a public servant and an hon. member of this House, with obligations in this House. That is what I am referring to. These are two totally different things. I would agree with the commissioner on what he said about the hon. member as a lawyer. I am talking about the hon. member as a member of this House.

Mr. Sopha: I do not want to use all the time. But I do want to put my submission on record; the hon. Prime Minister had his opportunity the other day.

The hon. Prime Minister, I take it, in his inarticulated major premise — I think the logicians call it—is saying that we ought not to appear at these Royal commissions because we ought not to do anything to impugn the honour of any other hon. member of the House. I think that is it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I thoroughly agree with that.

Mr. MacDonald: What an absurd proposition. The hon. Prime Minister does not want us to look at the facts, does he?

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Prime Minister, when he says we are not supposed to do anything to criticize the hon. gentlemen opposite, would have us believe that this is a nice big knitting circle and he is the chief knitter. In fact, I hesitate to say so, but it is something akin to the Russian Parliament, where Khrushchev never gets any criticism. It is like an Oxford Street club where we are all buddies; we all stand by the honour and integrity of each and every member. Well, if this is to be a sovereign Parliament among Parliaments, then it has to function like a Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask the hon. member—of course, he heard what I said. My point is this, I just want to get the record straight. The hon. member is quite right—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I have no duty and I reject any suggestion that I have any duty to protect any of the hon. gentlemen opposite, subject to this—

Hon. Mr. Frost: When he fails, the hon. member should resign. But he is not man enough to resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Sopha: One of the dangers of allowing the hon. Prime Minister to put his statement on record, sir, unanswered, is that future generations always credit the remarks of heads of government as setting down custom and precedent accurately. That is why they should be answered.

Now, I took occasion to look into that precedent after he made that general statement. And I find that in the American system of government—which we, as Canadians, are prone to decry. We look to the mother of Parliaments for our custom and precedent—under the United States committee system they call fellow Senators and cabinet Ministers and members of the Congress before them all the time and cross-examine them most exhaustively in support of any measure which they are advocating.

We do not particularly like that one. In the mother of Parliaments the House of Lords has been the great high court of Parliament and its beginnings are lost in the mists of antiquity.

Listen to what Burke said at the trial of Warren Hastings, a trial of impeachment in the House of Lords:

In the name of the Commons of England I charge all this villainy upon Warren Hastings in this rapt moment of my application to you.

My lords, what is it that we want here but a great act of national justice?

Do we want a cause, my lords? You have the cause of oppressed princes, of undone women of the first rank, of desolated provinces and of wasted kingdoms.

My lords, is it a prosecutor you want? You have before you the commons of Great Britain as prosecutors and I believe, my lords, if the sun in his beneficent progress around the world does not behold a more glorious sight than that of men separated from a remote people by the material bonds and barriers of nature, united by the bond of a social and moral community, all the commons of England resenting as their own the indignities and cruelties that are offered to all the people of India.

Now those are the words of Burke.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Was Warren Hastings a member of Parliament? If he was not, what the hon. member is saying is entirely irrelevant. Was he a member of Parliament or not?

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Sopha: Now, Warren Hastings, of course, was not a member of Parliament. He was the governor of India.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is irrelevant then.

Mr. Sopha: He was the governor of India, but I did not read the quotation for that reason. I read the quotation to show that Edmund Burke—or Leslie Frost, take your choice—but Edmund Burke gladly accepted the name of prosecutor for the Commons of England at that trial.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, but that was quite different.

Mr. Sopha: But as the hon. Prime Minister knows; and if he does not know, the hon. Attorney-General will tell him—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am talking about one member against another member—

Mr. Sopha: Let me finish—

Hon. Mr. Frost: If Edmund Burke had made a charge against another member—

Mr. Sopha: I am going to come to that—

Hon. Mr. Frost: —then he would have had to resign.

Mr. Sopha: The House of Lords, as all hon. members know, has functioned as the place where peers are tried. Peers accused of any of the major crimes, and especially treason or misprision of treason, were tried in the House of Lords. They were prosecuted by their fellows, their fellow peers—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is in the court—

Mr. Sopha: That was in the court.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend knows the House of Lords was a court.

Mr. Sopha: Yes! But I was just showing you precedent. The House of Lords, when it functions as a court, is not the St. Belvedere knitting society.

Now what is the difference—now that we are into this question—what is the difference in the hon. Minister of Labour appearing before the committee on privileges and elections, as he did, and subjecting himself to cross-examination by all members of that committee—government and Opposition alike—and then going down to a Royal commission initiated by the hon. Prime Minister and subjecting himself to the cross-examination of one member of the Opposition? What is the difference?

Mr. Whicher: What are you after now?

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Prime Minister is far more fastidious in his thinking—

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no! As I said to my hon. friend, the point of difference is this. If an hon. member of this House makes an allegation impugning the honour of another hon. member, then he should be prepared to stake his—

An hon. member: Accept the issue and resign!

Hon. Mr. Frost: I quote the Porter case, the Murdoch-Porter case in the House of Commons in Ottawa on that point. It is in the memory of—

Mr. Sopha: That has nothing to do with me, I made no charges at any time—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member did it under the guise of—

Mr. Sopha: I went there, it was my duty, and I cross-examined—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will tell him this: he went down there under the protection of that commission and he—

Mr. Sopha: I never made any charges—

Hon. Mr. Frost: —acted as counsel for the Liberal party.

Mr. Sopha: The Liberal party never made any charges.

An hon. member: You ought to look after your own party!

Mr. Sopha: We received notification of the Royal commission hearings from the hon. Attorney-General. We went down there and if we had not gone, as the hon. member for York South aptly points out, we never would have gotten to the root of the matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege on this. The Liberal party did make a charge and that is why we had a Royal commission. They charged the hon. Minister was indiscreet in the minority report which the hon. Prime Minister refused to accept.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is why I referred it to the commission, of course.

Mr. Sopha: I never heard of it. But, of course, we have our duty. There is something far more serious to it than this.

Now that we have the record straight on that one, I want to address myself to another comment the hon. Prime Minister made in his speech the other day.

I get the impression, Mr. Speaker, that the chief function of the Opposition here—after listening to the hon. Prime Minister as I have done for two years when he takes part in the Throne debate—that our function is to come here once a session, be chastized and and scolded by him, and then go home.

Yes, and then go home.

Because the other day the hon. leader of the Opposition in a very able, forthright and energetic speech exposed to the House the situation in Eastview. That is something to which I wish to address my concluding and final remarks.

I do not need to go into the malfeasance that has occurred down there. If I had the time I would go into all these clippings, but the hon. member for Kent West does not like them. However, they set out what occurred at the hearings. Then the hon. Prime Minister got up and he said—I hope

I paraphrase accurately — “The trouble in Eastview stems from expansion.” He said: “That community started from a little French-Canadian community.”

And as he said it, in my mind’s eye, I could almost hear the dip of the Indians’ paddles. I could see—if I stopped to picture it—Radisson and Des Groseilliers holding the keg of rum to trade with the Indians—and their trinkets—and founding that little community.

That was the explanation he made of their trouble! But he left himself “away out.” He said the verdict—

An hon. member: We will have the verdict of the jury of the people.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: And yesterday the people—yesterday they voted. Much to the surprise of the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender), the vote of the people was figuratively the vote of a by-election. The vote that took place in Eastview yesterday was far more important with regard to the record of this government than in Simcoe Centre and Temiskaming.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Robarts.

Mr. Sopha: I did not know the hon. Minister of Education was an authority on municipal affairs. I wonder if any hon. member over there is an authority on municipal affairs. But the long and short of it is that we have the law. The law is imposed, is set out, is formulated by this government, and apparently people are able to disobey that law with impunity, and get away with it. I am cynical enough to suggest that, had the mayor of Eastview been a Liberal, a different result would have taken place after this report was handed to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

The people of Eastview, through their citizens’ action league—or whatever it is called—made the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs aware of what had gone wrong.

I read the debates of 1958 where the Ontario municipal board recommended that the bill in relief of Eastview be not passed, and a letter of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs wherein he said: “I will ensure that supervision takes place over that municipality.” He said: “We are making improvements to The Department of Municipal Affairs Act which will greatly strengthen our hand in being able to oversee what they do.”

He made a solemn promise to this Legislature that he would take steps to see that the same thing did not happen again—but it happened.

The hon. leader of the Opposition was perfectly right when he said that because the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs gave that assurance, and he failed to carry it out, he ought to resign. It is a harsh thing for a private member of the House to say. But, when I say this, I have the assurance that history is on my side—that is custom and precedent in every government except this one.

We have also the obligation, sir, in respect of the matters—and I am not going into them—that have been unearthed in Eastview, to urge—nay, sir, not urge, demand—that this government institute some form of inquiry or take some steps to make certain that those who have broken the law are called to the bar of justice.

I want to put in the record a brief extract from Lord Chatham, who was William Pitt, in respect of this very thing:

If any member of this House were to stand up in his place and move to impeach a Minister he would be obliged to charge him with some particular crime or misdemeanour and produce some proof or to show that he was ready to prove the facts, but any gentleman may move for an inquiry without any particular allegation and without offering any proof or declaring what he is ready to prove because the very design of an inquiry is to find out particular facts and particular proofs.

We are called the grand inquest of the nation.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I agree with that.

Mr. Sopha: Therefore, sir, we call upon them to move. We demand that they move to take the necessary steps. Last Friday, the hon. Attorney-General of this province received a letter from a very outstanding law firm in Ottawa, calling upon him to act, and this is Tuesday. This is Tuesday evening and we have yet to hear from this government what they are going to do to ensure that justice is done in Eastview.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, no. May I answer that immediately, because the hon. member for York South asked a question in this House and I gave an answer. That is exactly the position.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, how long?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: You do not do things overnight. How long—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Attorney-General has had this report now for a month. He sat on it for 3 weeks. He goes chasing the shady lady but he will not go chasing a shady Tory. That is the problem.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, let us just put on the record, by way of contrast, what happened to the school principal at Renfrew. I do not know what his politics were. The hon. Minister of Mines is not in his seat or he could tell us, because there is no doubt he knows.

The school principal, on Thursday, I believe, was suspected of making defalcation of funds; on Friday the school board dismissed him; on Saturday he was arrested. If the provincial police can move that fast in that case—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Is there some innuendo? Is the hon. member, on his responsibility as a member, suggesting that somebody ought to be arrested at this moment?

Mr. Sopha: I am suggesting that the hon. Attorney-General has the obligation, having read this report, and having read these clippings from the paper, to institute some form of inquiry to ascertain whether people should be arrested. For some strange reason the hon. Attorney-General of this province has it in his mind that, before anyone can be charged, some private informant has to come forward and lay that charge.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is not it at all. The hon. member would pervert criminal justice to the ends of politics. That is what he is about.

Mr. Sopha: And the hon. Prime Minister would say that expansion of a community covers any multitude of sins or malfeasance or dereliction of duty, merely because the community has expanded. Any fair reading of the report indicates that something of a grave and serious nature has occurred in Eastview. Any fair reading of the report indicates that action should be taken by the hon. Attorney-General of this province in order to win back public confidence of the ratepayers of Eastview, and to show that criminals do not go unpunished.

Mr. Whicher: One law for the people and another for the Tories.

Mr. Sopha: I am just moved to tell about an incident I had. I have not got the material before me, but I will relate it.

I had a client who was arrested in Sudbury for an offence alleged to have been committed in Orillia. He was taken by the Orillia police from Sudbury to Orillia. When he got to Orillia two police officers relieved him of the sum of $100 which he had in his personal possession.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say to the hon. member that my recollection of the report—and I read it with some care around November 1, I think it was—suggested that there were two persons who had given testimony whose evidence should be looked into by the hon. Attorney-General.

It had nothing whatever to do with the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Lavergne); nothing whatever. He was not mentioned in regard to it at all.

Again the hon. member is using his talents to slant things; to pervert them and make it appear he is referring to the hon. member for Russell. These matters will be looked at carefully.

An hon. member: When?

Hon. Mr. Frost: They will be looked at in due course; just in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. Speaker, I make this charge to the Opposition, that they would pervert justice to the ends of dirty politics.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the last statement of the hon. Prime Minister certainly casts a personal reflection on every hon. member of the Opposition. I, myself, in speaking for every one, insist that the last statement of the hon. Prime Minister be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to cast any aspersion on the hon. members opposite; I like them all very much. But the hon. member for Sudbury has shown every indication of perverting the measures of justice. The matter that perhaps led me to make that very broad statement is the fact that the hon. members opposite applauded and therefore I put them in the same boat. If they disagree, then I certainly will withdraw that as regards the hon. members of the Opposition. But I ask the hon. member for Sudbury to tread a little softly in the future.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, Burke once said:

Those who execute public pecuniary trusts ought of all men to be the most strictly held to their duty.

Hon. Mr. Frost: How about the hon. member himself?

Mr. Sopha: I am not making any implications against anyone. I invite the hon. Prime Minister to read the report. Read the press clippings. I say, and I say again, that all—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sopha: We will continue to call for some form of inquiry from those responsible on the opposite side, in order to determine whether in fact breaking of the law did occur in Eastview, whether punishment is merited and whether those, if the law was broken, should be brought to the bar of justice. And I will continue to say that.

No distortion by the hon. Ministers on the front benches over there will alter our resolve one iota in that regard. The vote in Eastview yesterday was a vote against the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and this government.

We have been talking for a week about the situation in Eastview, and all during that time the hon. member for Russell has not been in his seat on one occasion. I ask, rhetorically, because he might get up to attempt to answer: Where is he when he is not here, when he is not here to speak for himself?

Mr. MacDonald: Running an election, of course.

Mr. Sopha: Apparently it is the last election.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the very final thing that I wish to say but I feel obliged to say it. I feel obliged to say it and I am going to say it. And that is this: The hon. Prime Minister of this province is a man held in the highest esteem by most of the citizens of this province. In fact, I venture to say—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I made that statement sincerely. It is a statement of fact which we recognize. In the best Madison Avenue tradition, he has created the image—he is the image—of leadership in this province. He is such an image in this province that he would have Allistair Grossart fairly drool to have him as a subject, because the one Allistair is trying to promote is kind of frayed down there.

What I do object to is this, that the hon.

Prime Minister uses the mantle of his integrity, and has used it, to cover the misdeeds of those around him.

Some Opposition hon. members: Right, right.

Mr. Sopha: And when one of his colleagues is guilty of dereliction of duty—as in the case of Mr. Philip Kelly, in the case of Mr. Greisinger, in the case of Mr. Mapledoram—the hon. Prime Minister used the mantle of his own integrity and the mantle of his own image to drape around them, to cover their misdeeds.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member brought this up in Temiskaming and they paid no attention to him. Out the window with him.

Mr. Sopha: And when they are guilty of dereliction, he says: "This is a personal affront to me. If anybody criticizes, it is a personal affront to me." He said it the other day, looking at the hon. member for York South. He said: "When you make a charge against any department of this government it hurts me personally."

I object to that and I am going to say so. He has no right to use his mantle, with that high respect with which the people of Ontario hold him, in order to cover up the misdeeds of his fellows. We know—and this is the note I am going to end on—he went up to Port Arthur and to Windsor where he tried to drape the mantle over two men. The people rejected them. And the next thing the people of this province are going to do is catch up with him. Next time, they are going to reject the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the next speaker adjourns the debate, may I say to the hon. member opposite that I have never cast a cloak of integrity or anything else over anybody. As a matter of fact, I have never had a cloak to cast over anybody. So I may say, as a matter of personal privilege, that I have not done that.

Further, as a lawyer, as an hon. member of this House, the hon. member for Sudbury should know better than to cast imputations. He clearly imputed that report indicated the hon. member for Russell was subject to certain criminal prosecutions. That, sir, is quite incorrect. It is quite untrue. It is quite out of character with the report itself and the matters contained in it.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Speaker, first of all, sir, let me congratulate you—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would ask the hon. member if he would please move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. White moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee; Mr. W. E. Johnston in the chair.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 17, "An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act."

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, in relation to the amendment, perhaps I might just make this explanation and it will be dealt with in the course of these sections. This is Bill No. 17, "An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act."

Mr. Chairman, I make this general statement in relation to this bill, and I think we will then deal with this Act section by section. Yesterday, on second reading, I read what I said would be the subject matter of a resolution that would arise under this Act, or under the sections of this Act if and when the same was passed.

The hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) asked why the subject matter of such a proposed resolution would not be included as one of the exceptions to section 10. In other words, in the form of subsection (n), I think, to section 10.

Actually, that was a relevant and logical question. As a result, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) and myself had this matter looked into by the law officers. The hon. Attorney-General was out of the city for a large part of today and I, therefore, had the actual onus on myself of discussing the matter with the law officers.

Yesterday I mentioned certain matters which appeared to me to require the validation of the House. These included, for instance, matters relating to payments for herds of cattle destroyed because of tuberculosis; hog subsidy; rabies bounty; agricultural lime. Then there was the matter of The Hospital Services Act, where there are definite contracts with the government or an emanation of government.

In looking into the matter, the law officers found that this matter can go a very great deal further than that—for instance, rebates for gasoline. I mentioned the agricultural matter of hog subsidies. There is, perhaps, as I mentioned yesterday, the purchase of trees from government nurseries. There is also the rabies indemnity.

Here is a point which, it happens, could affect a great many here. I may say that I cannot think of any occasion, at least within the compass of a great length of time, where it affects me, but it is in the purchase of liquor from a government liquor store. That point has never been raised. I must admit I never considered it myself, but it is a point which might arise under a strict interpretation of the sections of The Assembly Act.

There is also the question of drainage loans, of which there are very many. Then there is the matter of hospital insurance contracts. Another one is this: Hydro services in unorganized districts. Take bounties—wolf bounties and things of that sort. Also there is the possibility that workmen's compensation payments might come into it.

I do not, for a moment, suggest that this is the end of the matter. But the law officers and the hon. Attorney-General worked out, I think, a formula which could be added on to section 10 as one of the accepted items which covers the matter. I think care has been taken to limit it to these things of general application in the province. With that explanation, if the sections are called, I think the matter will become clear.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Under section 2, Mr. Chairman, I am going to move that section 2 be further amended by adding thereto the following clause. I will read the clause and I would like to make a comment on it. In addition to clause (m) which appears in the printed bill, clause (n) reads:

By reason of his being entitled to receive on terms common to all persons similarly entitled and of his receiving or agreeing to receive in accordance with such entitlement any service or commodity or any refund, rebate, subsidy—

In the draft I sent across there, I had the word "award," but I think that word should not appear at this time. It is too wide a term, perhaps, to include without a good deal of further thought about it. I continue:

—rebate, subsidy, loan or any other such benefit or payment that is authorized under any Act.

I am moving that this be added as subsection (n) and I would point out to the House that under section 9 there is the general prohibition to which we have added those few words at the beginning as appears in section 1 of this bill: "except as authorized by resolution of the assembly."

It is my conception that the resolution of the assembly in the normal course—as was the thinking of the select committee, which recommended this—was to deal with specific rather than omnibus exceptions. However, there is nothing in the wording to prevent an omnibus resolution being passed some time if it was considered advisable to do so.

But there is one word in section 9 and it is a very small word of two letters "o-r," which interpretation of the section can be of monumental importance. It could be even overlooked. At certain stages of the consultations the word "or" was found to mean a tremendous amount. So, for that reason particularly, it is felt necessary to spell out in some detail under (n) further exceptions:

Under section 10, section 10(1) reads:

No person shall be ineligible as a member of the assembly—

I suppose during the years there have been a lot of these exceptions added. For example:

(a) by reason of his being interested as an executor, administrator or trustee only or have some beneficial interest in any contract or agreement in that capacity or
(b) by reason of his being a shareholder or stockholder in an incorporated company having any such contract or agreement unless such contract or agreement is for the building of public work of Ontario, and such building or work has not been let by tender to the lowest bidder.

I recall the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) asking some general question along the lines of shareholding the other day, but that exception is spelled out and is limited in the way I have just read with respect to shareholders.

Then under (c) there is an exception with respect to the purchase of bonds and investments in government securities where, in that particular type of offering, it is an offering that is on terms common to all persons. That is the qualifying clause there.

Under (d), a miner's licence, a member of this House could purchase a miner's licence and obtain title that way, and under (e) certain newspaper ownership and provision for taking of advertising by the newspaper which is controlled or owned by a member of the House—that sort of thing is another exception. And then under (f) there are the timber licensees and the right to obtain certain rights as a timber licensee; and under (g) the fishery licensee. Under (h) certain sureties and obligors with respect to an inmate or pupil of a government institution; and (i) certain postmasters. That is rather an old one. I do not know the history of that one, but postmasters in small communities, I presume. And then it goes on to spell out a dozen of them in that way.

And then we come to (m) which was included in this amendment, still further extending those exceptions. This is not exactly an omnibus one, but one that has attempted to gather up a number of things which would seem in themselves to be matters which certainly ought not disqualify a member from taking his seat. And with that approach to the question, this amendment is submitted to the House.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): May I ask my hon. friend if this legislation is retroactive at all?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Yes, I would point out, we will be coming to that section in just a moment. Section 5.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Might I ask the question, does this bill cover rights-of-way, and land acquired by highways or where Hydro is coming in and putting poles on people's property where a member might be the owner?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would say the answer, if we take out this word "award," would be "no." That type of thing would have to be covered by the resolution provision under section 9—a specific case by a specific resolution.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, could not that be included in the bill? I ask, because, quite frequently Hydro does extend lines across this province and the highway, or even a township, or has acquired land to widen the road. For instance, I know of a township at the moment which wants to acquire land to widen a road going through my particular farm. Do I have to come to the Legislature and get a resolution in order to deal with the township?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think that there is reason in what the hon. member says, but I would like to point out the difficulties.

The law officers knew that with the word "award" in it would meet the situation. Now, perhaps, if this House feels this should be in, I am satisfied. But the point is this: At the present time I think I can name 3 hon. members who are going to be affected by Hydro expropriation. None of these hon. members is anxious to sell his property but portions of it are being expropriated. It does seem to be sensible to include that.

On the other hand, the reason I suggested to the hon. Attorney-General to take it out was the fact that perhaps "award" might be too broad, and it would be simpler and better if the procedure could be this: The hon. gentlemen here cannot prevent Hydro or The Department of Highways from coming onto their property, but they can come to this House and say, "I have not accepted or made any arrangement or settlement with The Department of Highways." Then such a resolution should be passed. That was the course which seemed to us the better rather than to make the exception too broad. Therefore, we took out the word "award."

I will say that the hon. member presents an almost overwhelmingly logical argument in his suggestion. The great difficulty is this. A matter of an award can be very, very broad—I mean it can involve any sum of money. Therefore it is probably a matter which would be better to come before the assembly in the form of a resolution even if it does cause inconvenience. That was the reason for suggesting that that word be taken out.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question? Does not the phrase "common law persons," in relationship to award, provide the necessary protection?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Does the hon. member mean how far an award might go in a certain case, and perhaps create precedents and so forth? Those are the things, I think, we have to think of in relation to the whole proposition or the original prohibition. It is difficult to bring anything immediately to mind as to how an abuse could occur. But I would say that the officers who have been wrestling with this all day have found this an extremely difficult subsection to work out without adequate satisfactory wording—or without going too far afield. So it might be better to proceed cautiously than to make this so broad that it could be perhaps broader than anybody here really thought it would be, and perhaps do some damage at some time.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question. I have Hydro poles that are established on my farm. The agreement is that Hydro can go in there at any time but if I suffer damage to crops, then they are supposed to pay me for those crops. Does it mean that I have to come here and get a resolution from this House before I can accept damages to my crops when Hydro people come in and cause the damage? I think that is silly.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say it would be safer to do that.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the payment is specifically authorized by an Act, I think my answer would be that the hon. member probably would not have to, but if he had to get it by means of some award through some tribunal he might have to.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would bring to your attention the fact that an award does connote some discretion in some persons. It would seem to me that this section should not be expanded to permit the criticism that would result if "award" were left in, and the discretionary power of the person making the award was suggested to be a favour to any member of the Legislature.

Mr. Chairman, what I had in mind is that the section is almost a mechanical operation. The determination of the amount of money to be paid back, except under the word "award," is mechanical, whereas the word "award" would permit discretion. This conceivably would be extended as a favour to a member of the Legislature—a favour that would not be common to all persons.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I might say, Mr. Chairman, that wherever any hon. member—and these things will be exceptional, I am sure there will not be any large number—wherever any hon. member is in doubt about a matter of this sort, certainly my office would be wide open to him to make inquiry and take advantage of the legal opinion to be obtained there. If there were any questions at all, and it was not a matter of principle being violated, I am sure there would be a recommendation for a resolution to help to clear it at the first opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I may say, sir, that I was questioning the word "loan" in there. I wondered whether that should be in. The matter arises under the provision of The Tile Drainage Act. Loans are not being made now—they are being made by Ottawa—and therefore it is of common application in this case. That is the purpose for the word "loans." I did ask the hon. Attorney-General, and I asked law officers, whether that word might be taken out. But again, as I say, those two points are of application at the present time: first, The Tile Drainage Act, which is very widespread in the province, and secondly, the matter of agricultural loans made by Ottawa government. So it had better stay there.

I think it is wise for any hon. member, who feels there is doubt about things, to consult the hon. Attorney General. The matter will be looked into carefully and a ruling given. Then, if a resolution is necessary, that procedure can be taken. I think that is the safer course to be taken.

One of the hon. members in this House—an Opposition member in this case—asked one of the departments for a ruling on that subject. That was a proper course to take. It was one of the matters which helped to draw this to our attention. When we looked at the matter, we found it was as widespread as I have indicated.

Our purpose in this section is to cover all those matters, to cover them now and in the claim before us to make it retroactive, and at the same time not to offend against the real purpose of the Act which is this: That you shall not work for the government, you shall not enter into contracts with the government. Those things refer to things that we all know about.

The matter of working for the government and receiving pay goes back to the days of the family compact and before—the matter of entering into contracts with the government—either expressed or implied contracts with the government. That is the purpose of this Act and I think none of us would want to weaken it.

It is only to deal with these ordinary things which apply to everyone in this province, things which members of the assembly can encounter in the ordinary course of business.

It is quite improper for hon. members, for instance, to sell the government anything. Often, those things can happen and they do happen sometimes by pure mistake.

I remember some years ago one member who ran a considerable business. One of the branches of the business, unknown to himself, sold some axe handles or something to the government, but it was possible to undo the transaction. We have to be careful of that in doing business with the government.

All these matters we are discussing here are things which apply to all our citizens and, therefore, it is not a question of any favour.

It is a matter which runs with the ordinary citizenship of the country.

I think I would leave the word "award" out, it might be too broad.

Section 2 as amended agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, the same amendment would go in there. I would move that section 4 be further amended by adding the following clause:

By reason of his being entitled to receive on terms common to all persons similarly entitled, and of his receiving or agreeing to receive in accordance with such entitlement, any service or commodity or any refund, rebate, subsidy, loan or any other such benefit or payment that is authorized under any Act.

Section 4 as amended agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. Wintermeyer: May I ask the hon. Attorney-General whether or not section 5 applies strictly to the person of the member or whether it is intended to make applicable the subsection (n) to any act of any member performed prior to this date?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think the effect of it, as I am advised by the law officers in the preparation of it, is that their purpose in reading it this way was to make it applicable to any member and with respect to any of the particular acts that would be excepted, so that if this bill becomes effective it would apply to any member, whether heretofore or hereafter elected.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think the point is this, it refers to a person who has heretofore been elected—I suppose that is everybody here. But does that apply as of, say, January 1, 1955?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly. What about where one of the members has done one of these acts in 1955?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is the hon. Attorney-General satisfied that is the meaning?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is the intention.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think the point the hon. leader of the Opposition raises is worthy of consideration. There is no doubt about it covering the persons who are elected here and persons who have been elected previously, but does it cover the acts, is that the point? That is an important point.

Mr. Chairman, just while we are waiting for the law officers to look at the matter, may I say that this is the first bill which has come before the committee of the House. It is interesting to notice this: part 2 of the Act is required because this year we have run into a curious situation in that the statutes are being consolidated. Therefore, it is necessary to put in this part 2 of the Act which is really a repetition, I think, in actual words of part 1. We are going to try to avoid too much legislation because of the necessity of putting in those provisions if it is passed in the year 1960, but applying to the session of 1961.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Perhaps to double-barrel this and put it beyond any question, because I take it to be the purpose of the hon. leader of the Opposition to put it beyond any question—in addition to what appears there, we could amend, and I would be glad to move this amendment if the House wishes me to do so—and add at the end of section 5 the words, "in respect of any act heretofore or hereafter committed."

The section would then read: "section 2—or section 4 as the case may be—applies to every member of the assembly heretofore or hereafter elected in respect of any act heretofore or hereafter committed."

Section 5 as amended agreed to.

Section 6 agreed to.

Section 7 agreed to.

Bill No. 17 reported.

THE REGULATIONS REVISION ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 1, An Act to amend The Regulations Revision Act, 1959.

Section 1 agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

Bill No. 1 reported.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that the committee rise and report one bill with amendment and one bill without amendment, and beg leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House reports one bill without amendment, one bill with amendment, and begs leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the House there will be no sessions here tomorrow. The House will be in its various committees as the hon. members have been notified. The House will stand adjourned, therefore, until Thursday at 3 p.m., and the order of business will be as intimated: The estimates of The Department of Energy Resources and Throne debate. At the beginning there will be routine matters, and two third readings can be given at that time. That would be the order of business.

I propose on Friday to proceed with the Throne debate; subject to this I think we might be able to work in an hour for private members' resolutions or bills.

In view of the fact that I have to proceed next week with the resolution on unemployment, which is a private member's resolution and to which precedence, of course, will be given, I will have to ask the hon. members for a little leeway in connection with these private members' hours. But I know I will receive the fullest co-operation. I may have to waive that hour on Friday in order to work this in on Monday or Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.30 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome, as guests, students from Humewood school, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. D. H. Morrow from the standing committee on private bills presents the committee's first report which was read as follows and adopted:

Bill No. Pr6, An Act respecting Montreal Trust Company.

Bill No. Pr11, An Act respecting Eno-Scott and Bowne (Brazil) Limited.

Bill No. Pr23, An Act respecting Pickering college.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill No. Pr24, An Act respecting the Royal Ottawa sanatorium.

Bill No. Pr32 An Act respecting the synod of Toronto and Kingston Glen Mhor camp.

Your committee would recommend that the fees, less the penalties and the actual cost of printing, be remitted on Bill No. Pr23, An Act respecting Pickering college; on Bill No. Pr24, An Act respecting the Royal Ottawa sanatorium, and on Bill No. Pr32, An Act respecting the synod of Toronto and Kingston Glen Mhor camp.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE HEALTH INSURANCE ACT, 1960-1961

Mr. T. D. Thomas moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Health Insurance Act, 1960-1961."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to address a question to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) of which notice has been given.

In view of a report carried in the Toronto Daily Star of December 8, 1960, and for the further information of the House, this report is carried on page 37 of the metropolitan edition of the Toronto Daily Star and is headed "Fears aloof Ontario may cripple job training bill," stating that last year, in October, only 65 unemployed persons were enrolled in job-skill training courses.

Inasmuch as the federal government is willing to pay 75 per cent of the cost, and inasmuch as the federal Department of Labour has asked the provincial government several times to move forward on job training courses, can the hon. Minister of Labour tell us why so little action has been taken so far, and what the government's plans are for the current year?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member letting me have this question. I received it some time around the noon hour, and I have made a few notes and given it a little bit of thought.

I ask the indulgence of the House while I expand the question a little bit and bring in the matter of apprenticeship training as it exists in the province. I think that is closely related to this proposed measure.

I do not know how many people know it, so I want to make it definitely clear that the apprenticeship training scheme, as it exists in this province today, is shared 50 per cent by the federal government. I wanted that to be particularly known. I do not think that everyone knows that. The provincial government pays 50 per cent of the costs and also assumes the matter of administration.

The provincial institute of trades has been set up at the joint expense of the federal and provincial governments. I would like the hon. members to take this opportunity, while they are here, to visit this institute of trades at Nassau street. I believe it would be very worthwhile to take a little time and see it.

I would also like to invite the hon. members to visit The Department of Labour offices at 8 York street. I do not think too many people appreciate the extent of the duties carried on under The Department of Labour.

The institute is operated by The Department of Education of the province on behalf of The Department of Labour. The courses offered are: specialized training in the construction trades, auto repair trade, and a special course in structural steel drafting. There are other courses such as watch-making and various other crafts taught at the school.

Our responsibility—that is, The Department of Labour's—is to see that these classes are filled with apprentices. Through our district inspection of apprentices, we supervise the young men during their entire period of apprenticeship.

The training of adults, who are unemployed, poses an entirely different problem.

Apprenticeship is aimed at taking young people with a mechanical turn of mind and developing them into skilled tradesmen. There are 3,169 in the construction trade in Ontario.

Strange as it may seem, there are 3,168 in the motor vehicle repair trade. These men train in the various skills to fill the needs of this province in their various capacities.

I have, on many occasions, advised young men who are leaving school and do not have the opportunity of continuing on to higher education, to give very careful consideration to the opportunities afforded by the federal and provincial governments in offering them the opportunity to learn a trade. A trade today is a very good occupation. It provides employment and is much different today than it was a few years ago when a great many of these trades were seasonal. Under the methods of construction today most of these trades are carried on, on a year-round basis.

This apprenticeship training is a long-term continuing process; it is not entirely in the same category as what is proposed here.

As I say, the programme in reference to unemployed persons is a different proposition altogether. It proposes to take some of our semi-skilled and unskilled workers—in which categories most of the unemployed people appear to be—and give them training that will enable them to fit into the ever-changing picture of industrial methods of operation, as it exists today.

This new proposal has been under consideration, I know, by The Department of Education. As a matter of fact, we have a conference arranged for Wednesday morning, next, between the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts), his advisors and myself and my people, to discuss this thing. I would like to suggest to the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker that the hon. Minister of Education be invited to further expand my remarks, because I know he has some knowledge on this question that I do not have. If that would be in order, I will pass this question on to the hon. Minister of Education.

Mr. Singer: We will be very happy to get as much information as we can, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, it was, and still is, my intention to develop this whole question a little more fully when what is referred to as the unemployment debate is resumed, which is order No. 14 on the order paper. At that time I will give the House more details.

In answer to the specific question, during the present year The Department of Education has entered into negotiation with committees and has assisted in the setting up of committees in Windsor, Brantford, Cornwall, St. Catharines and Elliot Lake, with a view to establishing courses there under this schedule M, as it is called, and to retrain unemployed.

All these arrangements, as I mentioned, have been made in the year 1960, and I gather that the report to which the hon. member refers is a report of something of the situation in October of last year. In any event, what I am referring to has been done in this present year.

Our future plans envisage the setting up of similar committees in other communities, where it appears feasible, in order to provide training for unemployed. I might say that we had a conference here—I forget the exact date but I think it was in September—with the federal hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr), and various members of his department, to deal with this whole question. At that time, they pointed out to us what was being done in the west.

I have had two officials from my department in western Canada. They got back late last night, having examined what has been done under schedule M in the west and seeing if any methods that they have developed there would be applicable to our situation in Ontario. However, our industrial setup is so different here than in the other provinces, perhaps it will be difficult for us to follow a similar course. In any event, all that information will be examined and analyzed with a view to applying it here if possible.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank both of the hon. Ministers for their answers, but I do not think they are really the answers to the question I posed.

While I understand what The Department of Labour has been trying to do in its apprenticeship courses, the hon. Minister knows that I exchanged some correspondence with him during this summer and I pointed out—and I think he agreed with me or rather indicates that he agreed with me—that we were not really accomplishing very much when apprenticeship courses were cut off at the age of 21. I did not want to quote at great length, Mr. Speaker, from the question, but to get—

Mr. Speaker: The member must know that he asked his question and got the answer. A supplementary question is allowed now, but not a long statement on the same subject.

Mr. Singer: Yes, Mr. Speaker. To pose a supplementary question in the most lucid manner let me just quote a few sentences from this article:

Last year Ontario missed out on 75 per cent unemployment grants and training grants. It will again miss this year. The grants are paid when a province provides man days of training equal to 3.5 per cent of its adult population. Last year the province provided about 1,500 man days, about one one-hundredth of the—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would ask the member to keep this information for some other occasion to present to the House.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the question is: Why has this taken place? These facts have not been denied.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. A. F. Thompson (Dovercourt): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, of the hon. Minister of Labour? I would like to know if this is the first time that The Department of Labour and The Department of Education are going to get together with respect to the unemployment question. Is this the first conference that they have had with respect to the unemployed?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Did the hon. member give us notice of that one? That is a supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. Daley: The answer is no.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Ministers have never had a conference prior to this? I do not want to comment on it, but I would say it is pretty shocking in view of the unemployment situation.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the hon. Minister of Labour also in regard to the institute of trades. Does that institution admit other than apprentices, or must you be an apprentice in industry before you can be a student at that institute?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Oh yes, you must be an apprentice, you must have—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Oh no, not the night school, no!

Mr. Troy: Is there no opportunity then in that institute for any youngsters to get training in the great number of trades other than through industry?

Hon. Mr. Daley: They must be indentured as apprentices.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I am just informing the House there are special courses like barbers' courses which are not apprenticeships in the normal sense in which they pay a special fee in addition to the apprenticeship. I guess we should all go over and visit the institution and find out what is happening there.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Yes, the hon. member should!

Mr. MacDonald: I have been there. I was there last week.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Oh, I know. I know where the hon. member is every day.

Mr. Troy: Is there any assistance given to these students; particularly as barbers? I know it is a very expensive proposition for a youngster from out of the city of Toronto. It costs about $1,000 to become a barber. Is there any help given to students?

Hon. Mr. Daley: Private organizations give help.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Before the orders of the day, if I may be permitted, I would like to mention a matter of interest to the House. This was called to my attention, and I would like to call the fact to the attention of the hon. members of this House.

There are present with us this afternoon a group of women from Toronto known as the cradle service group. These women have given their time and efforts to worthy charitable causes, and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, that this group be now given recognition.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, in outlining the programme for this afternoon and evening, I think it is understood that there is a night session tonight. It is intended to call the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources and to discuss them. An arrangement has been made between the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer)—who are in Kitchener attending the funeral of the late Louis Breithaupt, former Lieutenant-Governor of this province—that discussion having to do with Hydro would be left over until the evening.

If there is time following the presentation of the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources we will call the order of debate on the Throne speech.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading, upon motion:

Bill No. 1, An Act to amend The Regulations Revision Act, 1959.

Bill No. 17, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

The House, upon order, resolved itself into the committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Johnston in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY RESOURCES

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Chairman, in rising to present the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources, I would wish to repeat what has been said by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan). Today it was anticipated we would deal with, first, the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources, and following the return to the House would then discuss the reports which were tabled several days ago in relation to Ontario Hydro.

Therefore this afternoon, if it meets with the pleasure of the House, we will discuss the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources and, assuming we finish in time for the evening break, this evening could then be devoted to the report of The Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I present to the House now the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources for the coming year, 1960-1961.

I would be remiss, sir, in addressing myself to this matter, if I first did not make some reference to the small, compact, but able staff developed in The Department of Energy Resources and who are now directed by the Deputy Minister, Mr. Clarkson.

I referred last year in the estimates of this same department to what I felt was the signal honour that had been done to the government in the acquisition—if that is the proper word—of a Deputy Minister who is one of the outstanding authorities on energy resources in the country. He is sufficiently well recognized in his own field that he has been invited to a number of countries both in Europe and in South America to present reports and papers in relation to energy resources. He has been a very great source of strength to me in this last year of establishing the department and reorganizing The Department of Energy Resources. I wish to indicate to the House my deep gratitude to him as well as to the able group of men he is developing around him.

We will also have this afternoon for the first time, Mr. Chairman, all of the inspectors of The Department of Energy Resources here in the Legislature. They happen to be in the city of Toronto attending a refresher and training course which the department is conducting for its inspectors. They will be here some time in the neighbourhood of 4 o'clock, and I will then make more thorough reference to them.

These are men who work in the service of this Legislature, and I would like to have the opportunity of presenting them to it.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some very short reference to the resources of the province of Ontario in terms of energy. These are very important. In terms of the future of man, energy is—outside of morality—perhaps the single most important ingredient of the world. Because where there are cheap and abundant resources of energy there is a high standard of living; where energy is expensive and scarce there is indeed a low standard of living.

But perhaps even more than that, from the energy resources available to man today, is arising man's own capacity to do two things—one, to destroy man in quantity and the other perhaps to direct his own evolution.

The significance of energy apart from its beneficial qualities can perhaps be drawn to the attention of this House when I say that in World War II all of the Allies dropped 2 million tons of TNT. Today, one hydrogen bomb is equal to somewhere in the neighbourhood of 15 million tons of TNT. One hydrogen bomb has the capacity to cause some 7 times all of the destruction which was wrought in the last world war.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the energy resources of this province, I would like to refer to them in this way.

In terms of coal: In this province we have no resources at all with one exception, a minor brown coal deposit of low b t u content unfavourably located in the ground near Onakawana, south of Moosonee. This coal may ultimately be utilized to the advantage of the development of this part of the province—the northern part of the province—when the Belcher iron ore deposits and the seaport at Moosonee are developed. Then it will be possible to carry the Belcher iron ore from the top portion of Hudson Bay to Moosonee where it can be smelted. Perhaps the brown coal at Onakawana can be used for this purpose and the more refined product carried south on the enlarged line of the Ontario Northland Railway.

In any event, to summarize in relation to coal: This province has no coal reserves of its own and must import all of its coal either from other places in this country or from the United States.

Second, in terms of oil: This province has some resources of oil. It uses approximately 100 million barrels of oil a year; it produces approximately 1 million barrels. Therefore, we have in our own province something in the neighbourhood of a 3-day supply. Oil production in Ontario is slightly up this year over last year and considerable energy is being devoted to the development of oil supplies by the number of companies interested in it. This is a large industry and means many millions of dollars to this province, not only to our gross national product but particularly to the gross product of this province. In any event, we produce 3 days of our 365 days' supply. We must buy the rest.

In terms of electricity: We use, in this province, somewhere in the neighbourhood of 6.1 million kw of electricity. Of that, we manufacture or generate all but 600,000 kw. Thus we must purchase 600,000 kw and we have of our own 5.5 million kw of electricity.

In this area, I think, it amounts to about 330-some days of electricity which we are able to generate in our own province.

In terms of gas: In this province last year the figures are in the neighbourhood of 100 billion cubic feet, of which this province produces something in the neighbourhood of 16 billion cubic feet. We produce something like 15 per cent—12 per cent to 15 per cent—of our own needs.

Mr. Chairman, the most significant factor in relation to energy today is that in 1960, in Ontario, we are capable of producing about 12 per cent of all of the energy this province uses. We must import something in the neighbourhood of 88 per cent.

By 1970 the energy study branch of The Department of Energy Resources estimates we will have reduced our self-sufficiency to a figure in the neighbourhood of 8.5 per cent in terms of our energy resources.

Turning particularly to the administration of the department and some of the industries associated with it—but leaving aside at the moment the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario—we anticipate that, in 1961, the year that we are about to enter, the gas utility companies will employ and spend on expansion in this province something in the neighbourhood of $35 million. We anticipate also that the oil companies will expand something in the neighbourhood of $15 million, making a total of $50 million between the gas and oil companies.

The synthetic rubber industry—which is really an aspect of the chemical industry—we anticipate will spend in the neighbourhood of $10 million and the benzene, plastic and other associated industries something in the neighbourhood of $10 million.

In terms of capital expansion for Ontario Hydro, in the coming year, although the budget has not yet been struck and the year is not yet ended, we anticipate something in the neighbourhood of $150 million. There are many programmes under way in terms of the energy-producing resources of Hydro to which I will refer tonight.

Some of the most significant, however, are the development of the Lakeview generating station, which is said by many to be—or that it will be—the largest of its kind in the world when it is completed; the Otter Rapids generating station; the Thunder Bay generating station at the head of the lakes; CANDU, the first nuclear generating station in Canada—or rather, the second. The first is M.P.D.2—which will come into operation in the summer of 1961. Lastly, we have a very large development in the Little Long Rapids area to which I will make reference this evening.

Another aspect of development in terms of energy in this province, Mr. Chairman, is the amount of investment which is made by companies and organizations in research and development. From research and development come increased fuel efficiency and this in turn has a significant influence upon costs and our ability to compete.

The steel companies, for example, are experimenting with gas and oil in firing their blast furnaces. New equipment and methods are being used to increase efficiency, and with increased steel efficiency comes a greater ability to compete in the foreign market.

One of the most fundamental ways of improving the capacity of the industries in this province, a matter to which we have all directed attention in the debate which has taken place in connection with unemployment so far, is related to fuel costs, because they are not by any means insignificant. They are of immense importance; they permit an industry to compete more favourably in foreign markets.

Mr. Chairman, although I may appear to be hopping amongst a number of energy resources, I would like to make some reference to the uranium industry and the field of nuclear energy apart from the production of electricity—to which I will make reference this evening. We had a debate in this House last year, Mr. Chairman—you may recall—dealing with uranium and nuclear energy.

Although a word or two which I would like to place before the House today will touch upon some of the statements which we discussed generally at that time, I would like to review for a minute or two a little of the background in relation to uranium.

In 1956 Great Britain and the United States entered into contract to purchase the total uranium production of this country. These contracts were to expire in 1962 and 1963. Last year, in the fall—I think it was in November—Great Britain and the United States gave notice to Canada that they did not intend to extend their contract beyond 1962-1963.

Now this was a very serious matter for the uranium industry which had come into being on the basis of those uranium contracts. The total production of uranium in Canada had built itself up to something in the neighbourhood of 15,000 tons.

This was a very serious blow, representing about $245 million a year in export for this province, which is a very sizeable dollar value, and a very important mining industry to this country and particularly to this province.

The total production of this industry in Canada is in the neighbourhood of 15,000 tons and all but a few hundred tons of this is exported. Very little of it is used in this country for reasons which I discussed with the House last year.

Therefore, when the notice came to this country that these countries—Great Britain and the United States—did not intend to extend these contracts beyond 1963, the uranium mines were faced with a situation which was very similar, as was pointed out by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) last year, to the position in which the nickel industry found itself at the end of World War I when, with the treaty of Versailles and the disarmament programme, armaments were out. Up to that time nickel had been used predominantly for armaments. The industry was faced with the prospect of closing entirely.

Now with regard to uranium, immediately we received notification that Great Britain and the United States did not intend to extend these contracts beyond 1962 and 1963, the government of the province of Ontario called the first Canadian conference on uranium and atomic energy. This was held in January of 1960 at Toronto. Delegates came from all over the world.

I am happy to say that 3 results came from that conference, to which a number of hon. members in this House were kind enough to refer last year. The first—possibly it is the most important—was that the people of Canada became realistically aware of the problem of marketing uranium and nuclear energy, and the fact that civilian demand for uranium would not strengthen very much before 1970.

From our own point of view as administrators of a department—and a very small department at that with a small budget which I hope the House will feel has been well used during the year—two significant results came of this conference. They were the establishment of the Canadian nuclear association and the Canadian uranium research foundation.

The Canadian nuclear association was organized to assist the industry by pushing trade interests to find new uses for nuclear energy; to disseminate realistic information on which to base management decisions; to encourage co-operation and interchange of views among nuclear industries, Canadian mining companies, government departments and agencies and the general public. The membership is growing rapidly and the association is in full swing.

The president of the association is Mr. Ian F. MacRae, who is the chairman of the board of the Canadian General Electric Company. Honour was done to this Legislature by appointing the Minister of Energy Resources his vice-president. The directors are drawn from across this continent.

They are: Mr. B. A. Avery, who is the vice-president and general manager of Orenda Engines; Mr. S. M. Blair, who is the president of Canadian Bechtel Limited; Mr. W. M. Gilchrist, who is the president of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited; Mr. Grauer, who is chairman and president of British Columbia Electric Company Limited; hon. Donald Harper, who is the chairman of the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission; Mr. Jean Claude Lessard, president of the Quebec Hydro-Electric Commission; Mr. W. R. McLachlan, vice-president of Canadian Westinghouse Limited; Mr. Stephen B. Roman, president of Dennison Mines Limited; Mr. G. I. Staber, general manager of A.M.F. Atomic (Canada) Limited; Mr. D. M. Stephens, chairman of the Manitoba Hydro-Electric Board; hon. Robert Winters, president of Rio Tinto; and Dr. J. W. T. Spinks, president of the University of Saskatchewan.

That then, Mr. Chairman, is some indication of the purpose which this conference served in the creation of the Canadian nuclear association; a most valuable association I hope. Its objectives are set out in a small pamphlet which it has published, and if any hon. members of the House are interested, I would be happy to send copies to them.

The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) referred to the fact that I could not be here next Tuesday and Thursday. The reason is that I am representing this association at a nuclear energy conference, being held in California, which is important to this department and I believe to this House. It is necessary to send someone to it, and as I am in the association, it was felt that perhaps I should go, rather than someone else in the department.

The second result of this conference—the first being the Canadian nuclear association—was the formation of the Canadian uranium research foundation. This was a foundation organized by the uranium mining industry, which will finance and direct approximately $1.25 million worth of research over the next few years. Much of this research will be done by the Ontario research foundation here in Toronto.

It was announced yesterday in the House of Commons by the federal hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Comtois), that an exclusive Canadian metallurgical process for using uranium as an alloy, and for strengthening steel, had been patented and is now available to the steel industry.

I made reference to this development, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for York South and other hon. members in this House, last year, following the conference on uranium and atomic energy. This reference was made on February 16, on page 417 of Hansard. I will not repeat it, but hon. members who have come to the House more recently might be interested in this subject and pursue it. There were a number of speeches given in this House in connection with it.

The process, Mr. Chairman, to which the federal hon. Minister of Mines has referred, is one of adding an amount of refined uranium to steel. The result will improve the strength of steel and, I believe, its resistance to corrosion as well as improving its properties at high temperature. This can have a very important role, not only in the industrial progress of this country—but also, and perhaps more particularly—in the uranium industry itself.

A great deal of hope is held for these processes, Mr. Chairman, but by no means do these, to which the federal hon. Minister referred, close the field to further development. In fact, the government through the Ontario research foundation is investigating the introduction of uranium as a getter and scavenger for steel. This is an important process and, if it is successful, will have a very beneficial effect upon the industry.

Uranium will be used in that way to pick up carbon, sulphur, oxygen and nitrogen.

The Ontario research foundation is currently investigating the use of lithium for this purpose, using 50 and 500 pound batches of steel melted in a pilot induction furnace. In addition, Mr. Chairman, we are studying the potential use of uranium involving equilibrium studies of high iron and of uranium and of the iron carbon diagram.

These are uses, in short, to which uranium can be put in specialized fields of the steel and other industries; uses which have been, up to this stage, unknown to us because of the problems involved in uranium itself and in its capabilities in terms of industry.

These are basic studies, Mr. Chairman, to provide information which will supplement the present studies of the uranium foundation and will point the way to further utilization of uranium in steel. There will also be consideration of the effect of small additions of uranium on corrosion resistance of metal, in order to reduce pitting corrosion and, in addition, the effect of uranium additions to nichrome on the adherence of protective oxide scale.

These matters to which I refer, Mr. Chairman, are in relation to uranium as a metal. Uranium will also be investigated in this same process of support, by this government, of the Ontario research foundation. Further investigation will be as made for oxide that can be used as a fining agent for glass. Studies will be made in relation to yellow coatings for roofing granules and other ceramic uses for uranium oxide, perhaps as a major constituent for very special glasses for defence purposes.

These are but some of the uses, Mr. Chairman, into which further research will go in order to enlarge the markets for uranium in this country and particularly as they pertain to this province. If they are successful, and they are accepted in the industries in which they can be used, the prospects for the future use of the uranium industry are very encouraging, quite apart from the normal development in terms of medicine, agriculture, industry and the development of power from nuclear energy.

Most of the research is not designed to supplant other additives in steel, but to add to them; to give properties to steel and other products which they do not now possess.

I can only say again that the uranium industry is facing very much the same financial and marketing circumstances that were faced by the nickel industry after the end of World War I when it looked as if there would be no market for the nickel industry whatsoever.

The nickel industry took up the challenge and found ways and means of introducing nickel into steel and new products abound now with the use of nickel. The result is that the nickel industry is a thriving, vital and productive one. We expect, in this province, that the uranium industry will—with patience, with research and with determination—rise to an eminent position in the economy of this great country.

Mr. Chairman, turning more specifically to The Department of Energy Resources, as to its administration I would like to give some indication to the House that The Energy Act which the House passed last year in this Legislature came into force on September 1 this year. I need not take the time of the House describing the difficulties in introducing this legislation sooner than this—but there were many. There was the problem of space and of staff and other things related to them.

We overcame as many of these as we could by September 1, and we have now had 2 or 3 months in operation under the present Act. In that connection, I would like to make reference to the following:

First, the problem that Mr. Clarkson and I, and the rest of us in the department faced, was a question of reorganization, which we are still undertaking, because we took over the Ontario fuel board's personnel and left the Ontario fuel board, as such, to become the Ontario energy board. There were a number of problems related to it. We are now spread out in 3 areas, unfortunately. We have offices on the ground floor of the main old Parliament buildings; we have the energy board located at 790 Bay street—which is the corner of College and Bay—and the energy department proper. Its inspection staff, its energies studies branch and so forth, are going to be located at 42 Charles street east next week. This has involved a number of difficult problems.

To give some indication to the House of the size of the department, it consists of 80 people and it really has 4 basic branches: Its administrative side, which is located for the most part on the ground floor of this building, the inspection branches—

I would point out to the hon. members that the inspectors who represent The Department of Energy Resources on behalf of this Legislature, and on behalf of the people of the province of Ontario have come into the Speaker's gallery and I would like the hon. members to see them. They are very fine men indeed.

The third branch of the department is the energy board itself, and the fourth is a small group of persons who do research for the department and for this Legislature in terms of energy resources to which I will be making reference shortly.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of gas codes in this province. The two most important ones I have in my hand are extremely technical; very involved. This department has spent a great deal of time in rewriting and reorganizing both of these codes.

I stress that there are a number of codes but there are two basic codes to which I will make reference. The first is the transmission code, up to the meter in the building, and the second is the code dealing with the distribution of gas inside the building, after it has gone through the meter. The "inside code," as it is referred to, is now being revised and rewritten. It is a tremendously complicated problem for this reason.

Although this House in a committee has said it is not fond of what is called "incorporation by reference"—that is to say, you pass a section and it refers to another Act of another Legislature or another jurisdiction—there is a great problem involved.

It is that these pieces of legislation which are adopted here are so complicated and so involved that, were the regulations that predominate in the industry in Canada and the United States to be collected and re-enacted and reprinted in one form, by the time the printer had finished—with a volume about as thick as I indicate—many of them would be out of print.

However, we are trying to deal with that. We have an "inside code" which we believe is the best in the country—the best in North America in fact—carried on and supported, we believe, by the very finest of men in the inspection branch. But even so, this code is being rewritten and will be republished in the next few months.

We published last year—January, was it?—the "outside code," which I have here in my hand. It has been copied—or is in the process, I am advised, of being copied—in many of the provinces of this country and by some of the states in the United States. But we are not satisfied with it and we have a committee which is studying both of these codes constantly for revision.

Mr. Chairman, I think one would be quite remiss, in my position, if one did not make some reference to the most unfortunate explosion which took place in Windsor some weeks ago, in which a number of people were killed and others were injured.

This was a most unfortunate event. I can only say, as I said when I went to Windsor at the time—although this was in anticipation of the findings of the jury—that I was confident the codes of this province were adequate, in fact, more than adequate. I believe at that time if the codes had been abided by, had been followed, had not been broken violently in at least one place, if not more—3, I think, including our Act—there would have been no need for this explosion.

The jury has since confirmed that, and in line with the recommendations of the jury, we are obtaining copies of the transcript of the evidence. This transcript will be reviewed with two purposes in mind:

One, for consultation with The Attorney-

General's Department as to whether any charges will be laid by his department. If they are, the greater will include the lesser, in which case the criminal charge would obviously include the statutory charge.

But, if The Attorney-General's Department comes to the conclusion there is not sufficient evidence that a criminal charge should be laid, then The Department of Energy Resources will also study the evidence to see whether charges should be laid under the Act of this department.

If there is evidence that such exists, the charges will be laid. I so said when I was in Windsor and I also said that I intended, as the representative of this House in terms of the gas industry, to see that the law that this Legislature has passed, and the regulations in connection therewith, are adhered to.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, to the two codes to which I have made reference, the inside code, which is the green book, and the outside code, which is a blue book, we are in the process of producing an additional code for propane. This has been covered to date, but we want to have our own code. We want to make some changes and we will be publishing a propane code, and this will obtain particularly in northern Ontario.

The jury in Windsor made reference to explosimeters and the suggestion that, perhaps, purging should be done by a hose to the outside of the building; that the buildings to which the public are admitted should be connected up only during off hours; that there should be perhaps a seal on a line which has been connected but has not been purged; and that consideration should be given to the fact that only the company—that is the distributor—should purge or turn on gas. As soon as we have the transcript we will be studying the recommendations as well as the evidence to see which one of these recommendations—or all of them—should be implemented.

I say again with complete and absolute determination that this industry shall be as safe as it is possible, knowing the human frailties of people.

Mr. Chairman, during the coming year we are planning to review our inspection services in terms of natural gas and, in fact, the other inspection services of the department. That is one of the reasons why these gentlemen have come to Toronto for this 3-day conference, and are here now. Actually, it is a matter of the sheerest coincidence that these estimates are on at the time that these gentlemen are here, but I am glad to have them here to have some understanding of, and to see, the Legislature which has passed the laws they have the responsibility of administering.

We have, in the province and in the department, 35 inspectors. Last year, they travelled more than 500,000 miles and made more than 30,000 inspections. It is our intention, nevertheless, to review the operations of the inspection department and the responsibilities of these gentlemen, and to make sure that they are aware of the constantly changing complexion of the industry, the codes and the regulations associated with it. It may be necessary to employ additional inspectors.

In any event, we are going to keep this problem under constant review. That is one of the reasons why this first of a number of conferences is being held.

We also intend to establish a small engineering group for special projects and special requirements.

Mr. Chairman, this is no small or easy task, for this reason, that a very few years ago this province was distributing something in the neighbourhood of 14 billion cubic feet. This year it will be something like 100 billion or 105 billion cubic feet. And in 7, 8 or 9 years—likely by 1970—it will be something in the order of 300 billion cubic feet. This is a tremendous increase.

Today, there are approximately, in this province, 500,000 customers of natural gas. There are somewhere in the neighbourhood of 450,000 domestic customers; in the neighbourhood of 35,000 commercial customers and 4,500 industrial customers. Altogether 500,000.

The law requires a re-inspection of every one of these installations every 3 years, which means something like 165,000 inspections there alone if nothing was added.

In addition to that, something like 50,000 new connections are made each year, which means, therefore, that there are now over 210,000 inspections, without taking into consideration the number of persons who add a single item to a supply of gas which they already have in their home.

So we are talking about inspections in the neighbourhood of 350,000, or 400,000 in a year.

Some of these may last but a few moments in order to connect up. Some can be protracted over a day or two. The problems—and I think one has to face them—of the inspection staff in connection with the installation of gas are major ones—problems which cannot be taken lightly and problems which I hope this House will feel have been attended to by this department.

I do not pretend for a moment, and I did not when I was here a year ago, say it is perfect. I maintained before the energy committee it was as perfect as we could make it at the time, and if other events took place, or this House felt so inclined, or the energy committee made recommendations for further additions—apart from these gentlemen with whom I have the pleasure to work—we would make those regulations and we would make those changes.

By no means have I any hesitation in saying to this House that, if we have made any errors or we have fallen short of the mark hon. members expected of me or of the department, I would expect them to say so. I can only say that I have the most sincere desire to serve the industry in this province, as do the persons with whom I am associated.

In order that the Legislature can keep the industry informed of the things which it desires in the industry itself, and in order that the industry can bring its problems to the Legislature through the department, we wish to announce today the formation of the Ontario gas council. We may change this name but at the moment it will do.

It consists of representatives of the gas utilities, the liquefied petroleum gas industries, and The Department of Energy Resources. We will be including in that, I think in due course, our relations with the municipalities.

In this connection, we have been working on a great many different subjects. One, as I mentioned to the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) who is not in his seat, is a model bylaw in relation to municipalities. This is something of importance to them, but it is something which cannot be brought about overnight and which we are attempting to bring to the attention of the municipalities and to co-operate with them. We are confident that we will have their assistance in this.

This council is also designed to improve our relations with the industry itself, so that they can understand the point of view of this Legislature and its desire to act fairly and justly on behalf of the consuming public.

Mr. Chairman, in relation to lake drilling, a matter of great interest to a number of hon. members in this House—particularly those hon. members who live in the peninsula area surrounding Lake Erie and Lake St. Clair and those bordering on Lake Huron—I have a progress report only, which I would like to table.

This progress report has been filed by the Langford committee composed of 3 eminent geologists who were appointed, last spring, to investigate and report to this House upon a number of matters relating to drilling, production, oil storage, spacing and so forth.

The report of the committee is simply to report progress and to indicate that there is hope that the report will be finalized or completed by January. I cannot assure the House that this will be so, but when it is available, I will have the pleasure of discussing it with the Legislature.

At the moment, the report consists of very little more—in fact, nothing more—than a description of where it has been, what it has done, and what its obligations are. It makes, at this stage, no findings and, therefore, I have not distributed anything to the hon. members individually, but I have tabled a copy of the report.

This committee, Mr. Chairman, has held hearings in a number of cities in the province of Ontario on notice, and before them have come a great many people with briefs and evidence relating to drilling. This committee has been said to be one sitting in connection with lake drilling. But it is concerned not only with lake drilling and not only with Lake Erie, but with all of the Great Lakes and with the matter also of drilling and production of oil and gas on land.

I am hoping that from this committee will come recommendations which this House will find useful and which, when implemented, will be of value not only to our industry, but also to our people.

I say to the hon. members, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible that a small department, such as The Department of Energy Resources, should be able to solve all of the problems that it wishes to attend to at one time. We have been hampered because of the unavailability of space. We have therefore been unable to take on the staff we have needed to get up to our proper number.

But the space is now coming available in a matter of a week or so, and we will be filling out our plans and proceeding with a number of the problems to which we are anxious to direct our attention. For one thing we wish to study the problems of old leases—that is, leases that have existed for many years, and seem to have no termination date. This is a subject which has been under some review by the Langford committee and something that the department has been unable to get to because of the shortage of personnel; but something that is very important.

The importance of gas storage itself is a subject which is being considered by the Langford committee and which must also be studied by our department when their report comes in. This is a matter of the greatest significance to this province and I believe that in due course—and I cannot say more than this at the moment—there will be some pronouncement of very great importance in connection with gas storage.

We are anxious to study the problems relating to old wells and the small producers. We want them to understand that we are interested in their problems and will, we hope, get to the sites this coming year. We are anxious to tackle and to solve the problems relating to spacing and pooling regulations. These are very important. From the point of view of conservation, there should not be an unnecessary, unreasonable or improper withdrawal of a natural resource, whereas at the same time there should be an equitable distribution of any revenue arising therefrom.

Mr. Chairman, the department also has a small branch which we call the energy studies branch and we have prepared a number of important—I hope they will be felt to be important—reports which we expect to be publishing and distributing very shortly to the hon. members, the industry, and the public generally.

One is something which I think will be interesting to everyone. It is entitled “An analysis of the origin of Ontario’s energy supply.” It is an interesting document and it has some realistic and real value. The second one is “The historical energy statistics of Ontario” which will be of more particular interest to persons doing research in the industry. Both of these will be available in a short time.

This energy studies branch, Mr. Chairman, apart from publishing papers as a result of its own research, carries out special studies and investigations, some of which I have related in terms of problems which we have yet to solve.

We are confident that a number of these studies will lead to a more economic use of the fuel and energy absorbed by our industries, and this will enable our industries to become ever more competitive—which is of course one of the prime purposes in today’s struggle for markets.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of other isolated matters to which I would like to make reference, all of which are of some considerable importance.

First, I would like to make some reference to the large and important rate hearing which is in progress. In the last year the Ontario energy board has entertained some 76 or 77 hearings. It has heard some 11 franchise agreements; some 5 certificates for public convenience and necessity; 26 rate hearings of which 11 were for the reduction of rates; 28 hearings for leave to construct; 3 hearings involving expropriation; 1 involving a secondary recovery order; and 2 involving gas storage orders. There have, as I say, been 11 reductions of rates in the last year at hearings in connection therewith.

The board is presently engaged on the first major rate hearing, namely that of the Consumers' Gas Company, one of the largest utilities in the province serving 92 communities and having in excess of 200,000 customers. These hearings got under way on September 28 last, and at the present time the board is under adjournment in order that the company may prepare certain specific additional information and data required by the board. This is to supplement the material already filed. The hearing will resume, I expect, on December 15.

To date the only testimony in the rate case—and it is an extremely large and very important one—has been given by the applicant's witnesses who have been cross-examined to a degree. But it is anticipated that more witnesses will be called to give evidence before the hearing is concluded—in fact I would think many more.

A number of exhibits have been filed. A large one I have had a look at amounts to 275 pages of evidence and is the chief submission of the company. To date the transcript of the evidence covers more than 300 pages. I would think it would reach 1,500 or 2,000 pages before it is finished.

Much research work is presently being carried on by the board and its staff in examination of the financial statements, the accounting procedures, and the exhibits which have been submitted in support of the application.

The board and its staff are also engaged in a study of rate cases before regulatory boards, commissions and appeal courts, both in Canada and the United States.

The Consumers' Gas Company rate hearing is unique in that the company was established over 110 years ago. It was originally a distributor of manufactured gas and it was designed and operated as such and in 1955 turned to the distribution of natural gas. Prior to that time the distribution of natural gas had not been under the provincial government regulation.

In 1955 the government's distribution system was converted to natural gas and at that time the company's rates came under provincial government control. It will be early in 1961 before the board can hope to complete its intensive and extensive study and research and hand down a decision in this very complex case.

I would like to make reference to some of the responsibilities in relation to the Ontario energy board. First of all, the board has responsibility for major hearings in relation to rate cases and matters which are referred to it by the department.

In addition there are other subjects which by the legislation itself come before the energy board. I indicated to the House last year who the members of the board were. It is headed by Mr. Crozier, a geologist of many years of experience. Other members are Mr. Wingfelder, Professor Allcut, Mr. Treadgold and Mr. McTavish.

The hearing, of the moment, as I have indicated, Mr. Chairman, is a major hearing of the Consumers' Gas Company. We expect that it will be followed by that of a second company, the Union Gas Company.

One of the branches of the energy board itself is that conducted by a Mr. Armes, who is the energy returns officer of the board. His responsibility is to appear before the board, to cross-examine and bring out evidence from witnesses who have appeared for applicants or others. It is also his responsibility to introduce his own witnesses, produce his own evidence, produce his own documents and to do various research jobs both in advance and subsequent to the hearing and to bring on hearings where this is needed.

I think the efficacy of this move has proven its value because there are no respondents involved in the Consumers' Gas hearing at the moment. Mr. Armes and his staff—he will have an inspector assisting them and other technical and engineering and accounting staff—are doing a first-rate job and I think are proving the point that in this province, when a gas company wishes to establish a rate, it will not be established just because there is no proof that some other rate should be established.

The rate itself must be proven and it is the responsibility of the energy returns officer to see that the board hears all of the evidence and not just the evidence presented by the applicant.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is anything more that I would say in a general way at this moment to the House. As we go through these 3 or 4 votes, I would like—just before each one of them is called, if I might—to have an opportunity of explaining very briefly what the particular vote involves.

As we are now in a position of calling vote 601, although I realize a number of my hon. colleagues on both sides of the House may wish to make some reference to these estimates, I would like if I could, just while I am on my feet, to make reference now to vote 601.

Vote 601, Mr. Chairman, is broken down into a number of different items, actually 5 in number. The first one, salaries, involves the sum of $143,000. Last year this figure was $116,000. This vote includes the Minister's office, the Deputy Minister's office and all the administrative staff for the department. Most of the matter was formerly under the fuel board and it is impossible, sir, to relate the votes in this year's estimates in connection with my department with those of last year. Last year's estimates were presented to this House on the basis of the department being set up as it was—namely, the administrative side—except for the Minister's office, which was under the fuel board itself. Now it is under the department.

The vote includes this year the energy studies branch which carried out special studies and investigations at the request of the department. The fuel industries in the province are highly competitive, and for this reason some of the studies which we are preparing are available from the point of view of advising the government in terms of economics, and it really is not fair to make these a matter of public dissemination.

The second item under vote 601, Mr. Chairman, is for travelling expenses amounting to $10,000. Last year the item was $15,000. There has been a reduction of $5,000.

I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that we in this department have only a few months of experience and we are still feeling our way forward in the responsibilities which we have.

We are trying to make the most sincere efforts we can to be as accurate as possible, but without a great many months of experience it is difficult to be able to predict the exact number of dollars which we will require or to compare and defend one item as opposed to another.

Last year, as I said, our men travelled somewhere in the neighbourhood of 500,000 miles and we have to consider the inspections involved again this year. We are unsure of the total travelling requirements and this item includes our main office and is really not for our inspection staff.

Our experience indicates that we can reduce this item this year and, therefore, we are reducing it by 33 per cent. This item provides for travel by the Minister, the Deputy Minister, and the other persons on the staff of the department other than inspectors.

The third item is for maintenance, amounting to $53,000 this year. Last year it was $57,000, so there is a reduction of $4,000. I would indicate, Mr. Chairman, that this year in The Department of Energy Resources we are asking for exactly the amount we asked for in 1960.

This item includes all maintenance for the department including printing of forms, licences, codes; office supplies and equipment; postage; telephone; advertising exhibits; Queen's Printer; subscriptions; any membership fees, and so forth—membership fees, such as for the Canadian nuclear association, the American nuclear forum, to which we belong, and so on. It includes some maintenance items formerly carried under the fuel board.

The total maintenance for the department is reduced this year because our purchases of furniture will be less.

Last year we purchased two short films on the atom, which were put out by the Disney company and shown at the Canadian national exhibition and which are presently being circulated and are in tremendous demand amongst schools throughout the province. The investment, I think, was $400 or $500, but it has been well worthwhile, according to the reports we have had from the teaching staff.

We have, under item 4, a special sum for investigations and reports amounting to $17,000. Last year it was $25,000. Again, this is a reduction. Last year we had a number of reports prepared for us in connection with our codes, also the Langford committee report, and others. This year we are going to try to get by on some $8,000 less.

The last item is boards of arbitration. The item is $4,000. Last year it was $2,500. This is an estimate. Quite logically, it will not be spent.

On the other hand, it seems more realistic under the circumstances than the amount last year because, when the department was established, the arbitration committee, which we have now set up, does two things. It deals with Hydro expropriations which will be paid for in another way, and gas expropriations involving pipe lines.

Very few hearings took place in 1960 because we were making the changeover of the department and I wanted to make a clean sweep. The board of arbitration, which has served this province well for 3 or 4 years, has been disbanded. A new board has been appointed, and this amount of $4,000 is, as I say, an estimate only.

The new board consists of 5 gentlemen who have been drawn from across the province, including representatives of the farming communities, the federation of agriculture, a former employee of Hydro, and so forth, to try to give a complexion of the broadest nature to this committee which will sit in terms of 3 people. There is a gentleman from the north, one from the east, one from the west and the others are drawn from across the province. The committee will sit as 3 individuals, with 2 replacements depending on where the committee sits.

The last item is a statutory vote of $12,000 in relation to the Minister.

On vote 601:

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, we have listened with the greatest interest to the comprehensive report made by the hon. Minister. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) would now normally make a comment but unfortunately, as you know, Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the Opposition is attending the funeral of the former Lieutenant-Governor of this province (Mr. Breithaupt), along with the hon. Prime Minister and other representatives of the government.

This department is just a little over a year old in the form it was constituted by the last session of this Legislature, and perhaps it is too early to understand or to evaluate the impact that this department will have upon the future life of this province.

But I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister who is in charge of this department is a man for whom I have the most profound admiration.

His energy, alertness and intelligence, I am sure, will stand the province in good stead in the future development of this department, and particularly in the utilization of the vast uranium resources that we have in this province and which come under his jurisdiction. I hope, sir, that enough years will be left to me to see the development of the uses of uranium in this century. I am confident, as with people who stood at the threshold of the twentieth century, that given another 20 or 30 years' time, the wildest imaginings we could make today will not paint a concrete picture of what will be the benefits and the uses to which uranium and other forms of nuclear energy will be put.

Now, sir, it is in respect specifically of the uranium industry that I would beg leave to address a few comments.

The House had the opportunity last year to discuss at great length the situation in Elliot Lake, and I can report to the House from personal observation that Elliot Lake today affords to the eye of the observer quite a depressing spectacle. Quite a number of workers have departed from that community; their families have not as yet, in many cases, also departed and joined them. I think at one count there were some 200 houses boarded up for want of residents or purchasers. In many cases where the money had been advanced under The National Housing Act the mortgagees had merely departed without any feeling of further responsibility of meeting their obligations.

Now I do not for a moment suggest that the decline in the uranium industry is the fault of this government. I am curious as to the reason for the decline when I note a press report, which I do not have with me, published within the last month, which related that the atomic energy commission of the United States had asked domestic suppliers of uranium oxide to increase their production this year.

Now I forget the number of units that they had asked for but I believe it was somewhere in the neighbourhood of a 10 per cent increase. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that it is a great cause for regret, in view of our situation here, that that additional requirement of the atomic energy commission could not have been met from suppliers in Canada.

But I do say, sir, that it is illustrative of the evil days, sad days perhaps would be a better adjective, upon which relations between our two great countries have fallen. I allow myself to believe that in yesteryear had there been an additional requirement by the United States government, our relationship with them was on such friendly terms that some arrangement or accommodation could have been found between the government of this country and the atomic energy commission.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: I wish the hon. member would not ask me any questions. We are getting along fine, Mr. Chairman. The "head man" is away, and I want to be able to report to him when he comes back that we got along fine. So I will appreciate it if the hon. member would not ask me any questions.

I was saying that I do regret, in view of the contracts that we had with the American government for the supply of uranium to them, that if they needed more, our government, in Ottawa, perhaps at the instigation of the hon. Minister or other people in this government, might have come to some arrangement with the American government to supply their requirements from Elliot Lake or other uranium-producing centres in Canada.

However, the way it stands now, the cold hard facts in the uranium industry are that it is in a period of very dramatic decline. Since we discussed the situation last year in this House, there has been no cause for painting a rosier hue to the picture. Apparently the uranium industry is going to continue to decline, and there has been a complete absence of concrete steps taken by any government in this country to bring about a more optimistic situation.

Now the hon. Minister, in attempting to draw an analogy, related the history or part of the history of the nickel industry. He said that after World War I, for want of markets, the nickel industry was stimulated to find alternative uses for their product.

That is perfectly true and I think I can safely say that in the nickel industry happily, and perhaps I can be allowed to say it more happily than any other hon. member, the demand is greater than the supply because those producing nickel in this country are continually opening up new ore bodies and developing them.

But it is not an exact parallel and that is the point that I want to emphasize.

Nickel is a commodity that can be utilized in such things as knives, forks, dinnerware, chrome on automobiles and perhaps a thousand other uses. But in common ordinary everyday living you do not have similar uses for uranium. In other words, uranium is not a consumer product.

I hope I am accurate in saying that; if I am not accurate I will be corrected. But I draw that out to show that it is not exactly an analogy. And I would think that, despite the efforts of the producers of uranium, it will be difficult to develop alternative uses for it, other than that sad and pessimistic use that it has related to human destruction.

However, there is a tremendous responsibility upon government to do what it can in the field of scientific research to ascertain more quickly to what peaceful uses uranium oxide may be put.

Now the hon. Minister did not relate to us—if he did, then not at any great length—what the government is doing along this line. We heard last year that there was some disagreement among scientists about these reactors and the best way to use the reactor in the production of hydro-electric power.

Now on this side our interest becomes two-fold. We would like to hear what progress, if any, has been made towards this on the part of industry.

We would like to hear what the government is doing to stimulate it in order to hasten the day when—and this ought to be the end result of any inquiry—this great community of Elliot Lake and other similar communities in this province will once again become thriving mining towns.

Now, accordingly, Mr. Chairman, I respectfully invite the hon. Minister of Energy Resources to apprise the House as to any progress that has been made along that line.

Now there is just one other subject. The House will be happy to know that, having finished with this subject, I do not intend to speak to these estimates again.

While I am on my feet, I wish to speak of one of the aspects of the explosion in Windsor to which the hon. Minister alluded.

Now let me say hastily that I do not know a thing about the technical aspect of hooking up gas mains or supply of that fuel to users.

One may as a layman at least be permitted to reason backwards. We do not usually reason that way over on this side of the House; we leave that to the other side. One may be allowed to infer, since there was an explosion in Windsor, that unless the supply of gas is approached in a cautious manner, there is a danger of such a thing happening and it becomes, then, what we call in law, an inherently dangerous substance.

If that be the case, as I assume it is, then I wonder whether in that gas code there is a provision—I have never taken the opportunity to look at it and I will be the happiest man if I am told it is already in there—that workmen, technicians, plumbers and whatever else they are who hook these things up, are prohibited from doing anything with them while a store such as the Metropolitan store is occupied by the public. It would seem to me to be axiomatic that if this danger exists, it would be done at a time when the public is not on the premises.

If I may use an analogy and compare it to dynamite, an explosive, then surely people do not run around using dynamite when there are large numbers of the public in the vicinity. In fact, I think there are some regulations in that regard to the effect that they have to use it at a time when there are not likely to be very many people around.

That is one thing, and if that provision is not in that gas code, I would think the hon. Minister should make sure the responsible people get that in. I say this because, if they had done this at a time when the Metropolitan store was not full of people, no doubt it must follow, it is trite to say, there would have been many less people injured.

Here is the other thing I want to say about it: I followed the press report. I have a particular interest in it because the supply of gas is a new phenomenon in the constituency I represent, as well as to the constituency represented by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle). We, fortunately, have escaped such an occurrence as this, but we are interested in what goes on and that is the background against which I studied this.

I saw where the hon. Minister was down in Windsor making a study on it; I saw the report of the coroner's jury; and I saw where the hon. Minister had suspended the licence of the plumber, the man who was actually connecting up the system.

It seems to me, and it perhaps will seem to the hon. Minister, that, as a matter of law, the real responsibility, at least from the aspect of civil negligence, resides in the company, and that the responsibility is twofold.

In the first place, the company selects the independent contractor, if we may call him that, the plumber. They have the ability, the capacity, the right, to go out and hire the man. Therefore, they have the responsibility to ensure that the man they hire is competent.

I do not know how many that gas company uses. They may use only 1; they may use 5; they may use 20; they may use 100 of these technicians. But surely it is not asking too much of that company to make certain that the people they hire to connect up their works and supply their consumers are fully qualified and trained.

It seems to me that to descend all the responsibility and all the blame upon the poor unfortunate plumber, culpable as he might be, is not really getting at the root of the thing.

I did not read where the hon. Minister took any salutary steps with respect to the company and directed them that, in future, they must see to it that a competent, fully-trained, cautious, prudent technician is hired to hook up their gas supply to the user.

There is another aspect to this. The hon. Minister is a lawyer so, perhaps, he will agree with me in the interpretation of some of the cases.

A person in charge of the inherently dangerous substance, dynamite, or natural gas, as in this case, cannot delegate his authority. This is the difference in the hiring of the technician.

The company, in addition to hiring this technician, has a responsibility to supervise him and to see that whatever he is doing is being done in accordance with the regulations and in a careful and prudent manner. It is no answer for that company to turn around and say—in fact, I do not think they can say to the injured people—"We delegated this task to a technician and left him to carry it out." As I understand the state of the law, they cannot say that. They have the responsibility to actually supervise it; to see that he is carrying it out in accordance with the regulations—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member is aware there have been writs issued in this matter and it is sub judice, I am sure.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I am aware of that. I am not deciding the cases. I am talking about the code and I am just trying to sum it up by saying that I hope that code contains some provision requiring the suppliers, the company that supplies this inherently dangerous substance, to take some steps towards supervision. I do not think the courts will object to me making these remarks and putting forth these observations if they will go but a little way toward the possibility that this unfortunate circumstance does not happen again.

Those are two aspects of this unfortunate explosion that took place.

Thirdly, I just wonder how widely these codes have been publicized. The last aspect is the responsibility of the hon. Minister to see that they are followed, which responsibility resides in him. I would not want the hon. Minister to think for a moment that we, in the Opposition, are so irresponsible, so incautious, that we take any comfort out of this at all. We do not. I am not speaking to him in the spirit of chastisement, but only because we feel conscious of these things. We want to do what we can, acting responsibly, to make certain that such an unfortunate occurrence does not happen again in this province.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, in his comprehensive coverage of the work of his department, the hon. Minister has touched on a number of points that I would like to deal with generally. There may arise specific questions which I shall include in my remarks because, I think, perhaps, we can deal with them all in one unit rather than trying to separate them out.

My first point has to do with coal, one of the fuels that the hon. Minister dealt with in giving us an outline of our resources in this province. I was going to leave this until our discussion on Hydro but I think it fits more logically into the general context of his earlier remarks.

I was very interested to receive just today, as a matter of fact, a letter from the federal member of Parliament for Cape Breton South, (Mr. MacInnes), pleading with me, and all the hon. members in the province of Ontario, to try to have our municipalities buy coal from Nova Scotia.

Having at least a Scottish affinity with Cape Breton, I have a great sympathy for the problems that face them down there, and I am wondering whether or not some greater contribution could be made. I remember a few years ago, for example, when that well-known Progressive-Conservative, the mayor of all the people, went down to the wharf in Toronto and almost blessed the arrival of a shipload of coal from Cape Breton as though they were inaugurating something new. The whole thing is made more current by a story in yesterday's Toronto Globe and Mail following a comment in the House of Commons by the federal hon. Minister of Mines to the effect that:

It is my understanding that they intend to use Canadian coal when the third plant is built.

The federal hon. Minister was referring to Hydro—and Hydro replied to the effect that this is not the case.

Now, the question I want to put to the hon. Minister is this: Is the gap which would preclude the economic use of coal—particularly now that the seaway has been opened and presumably it can be transported in larger boats from Cape Breton—is that gap such that we cannot use more Cape Breton coal?

This problem has relation to western Canada and the languishing coal mines of Alberta and eastern parts of British Columbia. But it always seemed to me, as a layman not familiar with all of the economics of the problem, that the water transport from the Maritimes opened up the possibility of the use of Nova Scotia coal, whereas rail transport from, say, Alberta, would preclude it.

Now I would appreciate it very much if the hon. Minister could make some comment on that. Apparently there was some misunderstanding on the part of the federal hon. Minister who was led to believe, perhaps mistakenly, that Hydro was considering the use of it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I deal with that now?

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Minister wishes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Interestingly enough, Mr. Chairman, I received the same letter to which the hon. member has referred. I am sure many other hon. members have and I have sent for my reply. I replied yesterday afternoon to the gentleman who wrote to me and I would have liked to have had it here so that I could have read my answer to the House. It may come before I am finished, but the position is basically this:

There have been in the newspapers a number of misquotations in relation to the matter. These are the facts:

Ontario Hydro a year ago, or in 1958, ordered 10,000 tons of coal from Nova Scotia and tested it. The test was in relation to generators of the size used at the Hearn plant, 200,000 kw. Now I should, if I may, digress for a moment and say this to the House.

Certain coal will be satisfactory for certain temperatures and under certain conditions and may be entirely unsatisfactory for other temperatures and other conditions, even though both temperatures and both conditions are designed to create electricity. Therefore, coal which may be satisfactory or unsatisfactory for the Hearn plant may or may not be satisfactory, for example, for the Lakeview plant. The Hearn plant generators are 200,000 kw, the Lakeview generators are 300,000 kw; there are presently being used in the United States 500,000 kw generators. In 1949, 40,000 kw or 50,000 kw was as high as anyone thought they could go.

Generators had a capacity of only 40,000 kw or 48,000 kw when the plant in Windsor was built. In 1949 40,000 kw; 50,000 kw; 60,000 kw were as high as the ratings of the generators could go, although it was always felt, with further engineering work, that ultimately you could get higher and higher and higher ratings on your generator.

Now then, when this Nova Scotia coal was brought here and was tested and run through our equipment, it was found that it was in b.t.u. content not quite as favourable as American coal, but it was satisfactory. At the same time we had on hand some $10 million to $12 million worth of coal, which we had bought at more favourable rates than that coal at the present time.

The position in relation to Hydro and Nova Scotia coal is this. When the Lakeview plant is finished, we will test it for the Lakeview plant, and if it is satisfactory for performance and competitive in price, we will give it consideration for use there. And when we come to reorder for our present plant, so long as the prices are reasonably competitive, we will certainly favourably consider the Nova Scotia product.

Now any other statement has been a misstatement. There are only two things which Hydro is concerned about in relation to the fuel, one is its performance and the other is its price.

May I, just while I am on this, put this on the record? I wrote a letter yesterday to Mr. Pallet of the House of Commons, who forwarded to me Mr. MacInnes' letter. I do not know, but perhaps he did the same for the hon. member. In any event, I wrote to him yesterday and I said:

I have your letter of December 5, together with the enclosure in relation to Mr. MacInnes.

Ontario Hydro tested a year ago 10,000 tons of Nova Scotia coal for our purposes for generators of the size of the Hearn plant. This coal, although having a somewhat lower btu content than the American coal, assuming the price is competitive would be acceptable to the commission. We purchased many millions of dollars of coal several years ago and have not bought any since because of extreme flow conditions and temperature.

When it becomes time to make further purchases, so long as the coal is competitive in price and if performance is satisfactory, we will be happy to consider the Nova Scotia coal—and so on. I went on to point out the problem and, I might just say, rap somebody's knuckles.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the hon. Minister for the very careful way in which he is approaching this matter. Many times, before this session is over, I imagine we are going to have the opportunity to discuss this question of whether or not we should always buy Canadian and under what circumstances we should buy Canadian. Obviously, there is a point beyond which it would be a serious economic problem if you bought Canadian when the cost was going to be a very great deal more.

My only point, in this context, would be the hope that all departments of the government would be approaching it as carefully as the hon. Minister indicated he is doing. For example, I am very interested in the hon. Minister of Planning and Development (Mr. Nickle) trying to develop new industries in this province to fill the fabrication gaps.

I am also very interested to come back and find that we have new chairs in the committee rooms, so that we can sustain more comfortably the impact of the ideas and information poured at us. But I am a little puzzled to discover, when I turn the chair upside down that it was made in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Now, I may be wrong, but it would seem to me that there are some manufacturers of chairs in Canada who might have unemployment at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I say this to my hon. friend? I know the hon. leader of the Opposition intends to deal tonight with this problem of purchases in other countries and perhaps we can all dive in all at once, shall we?

Mr. MacDonald: The second point I want to touch on is with regard to uranium. I was delighted to read the news story yesterday that Canada has reached the point of being able to patent the use of uranium as an additive to steel, giving greater strength and perhaps greater resistance to corrosion. I wondered whether the hon. Minister would be able to give us any indication as to the potential of this at the actual level of production and use in industry?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member did last year, how about the hon. member repeating it?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I have forgotten exactly what the figures were, but the automobile industry, for example, is a most challenging one—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is why I am sorry the hon. member for Sudbury has left. He said uranium did not have any real value in consumer goods. That is true if an automobile is not consumer goods. But it is conceivable that the automobile industry alone could use something like 13,000 tons of uranium. Our total production of uranium is 15,000 tons.

I am not making this statement as fact—nor did the hon. member last year. The hon. member and I are relating what we say to the evidence of the best experts we have been able to hear, who came to our conference and who have delivered papers on this subject.

But in relation to the total tonnage of steel which goes into the automobile industry, allowing for anywhere from 1 to 4 pounds per ton, it is quite conceivable—although I make no prediction of this and some people think this is much too high an estimate—but it is conceivable that a very substantial portion of our production can go into the automobile industry alone, not to mention other industries. There is boiler making, for instance, where there is a large corrosive factor once you get up to a high temperature, where high temperature fields are very important, and these—although they are not consumer goods, they are producer goods—are very high consumers of steel.

Mr. MacDonald: It may be too early, but what I am wondering is whether the hon. Minister had any indication of the likely civilian use of radium so we can halt the degeneration of Elliot Lake and other uranium-producing areas into ghost towns?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, that is a proper question. Does my hon. friend mind me dealing with them this way?

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I have spoken—as a matter of fact, I have a letter here—from Dr. Forward who is the director of the Canadian research foundation. He came to see me a few weeks ago and we discussed the problems of the Ontario research foundation, to which I made reference this afternoon, and the programme we are going to follow. Some of these people—I do not say Dr. Forward—are quite eager and keen about this development; some are approaching it with caution. How soon this method is adopted will depend to a very large degree on its acceptability by the people who purchase steel and will put a premium or a value on steel going into their produce which will not be subject to as much damage—for instance in automobiles, from salt—and other steel uses where temperatures are important, and so forth.

So quite apart from finding a use, sir, there are two problems. There is the problem of finding a use, and then there is the problem of selling your product to the industries. Now that is partially what both of these associations I have mentioned—and to which the hon. member was kind enough to make reference last year, one of them at least, because the other had not then been formed—those are some of the functions of these two associations.

Now how soon the motor car industry and the steel industry can be encouraged to take this up in order to accomplish what is said is possible of the steel with uranium in it, I cannot say. All I know is that a great deal of time, energy and money is going to be devoted by these industries, as well as by the government, in encouraging industries to use this.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not want to dwell further on this because I imagine it is to a degree speculative—a happy kind of speculation which offers the prospect of getting ourselves out of the situation we face. But the final comment of the hon. Minister is something I would just like to touch on briefly in relation to what the hon. member for Sudbury said.

It is that up until now the governments have done most of the research work in this field. He asked that the government pull their weight. The fact of the matter is that it is the governments which have done the job up until now. It is the industry which has ignored its obligation, almost to the point of self-destruction as far as their own market is concerned.

Faced with the impact of the present situation they have now, they have been doing more in the past year, and I hope that we can get the kind of necessary teamwork both for developing these processes and for securing the markets the hon. Minister has referred to.

Now, there are a couple of items of unfinished business which the hon. Minister touched upon and which I wanted to refer to. I was very disturbed to hear the hon. Minister say that the Langford committee's investigations into the Lambton storage fields, the problem of leases, of the spacing and the pooling, has not yet been tackled and we have no report.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not say, sir, that this has not yet been tackled, all I say is that the report will be here in January.

Mr. MacDonald: On this aspect?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, that was my understanding. In the report which I tabled, Dr. Langford said his report will be available. As I read it, it is expected these additional studies will be completed by January 31, 1961. So I am hoping we will be able to discuss it in the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I would hope an opportunity will be made for discussing it once these estimates are passed, because some of the gas producers, particularly the small producers that the hon. Minister has indicated he has a soft spot in his heart for, have been living with these problems for a long, long time.

Interestingly enough—if I may just draw the parallel with what has happened down in Windsor—the company they have really had such tough dealings with has been Union Gas, whose record is much worse than some of the other companies in the field. I think it is about time we regularized this and halted the kind of exploitation that has gone on. However, we can leave that until later.

The other item of unfinished business I want to raise without going into any great detail—because I think it would be premature—is that last spring, when we were sweating through the various bills that were establishing the operations of this new department, we gave some consideration to a model bill in the United States and to what extent the various clauses in that model bill might have application.

The hon. Minister smiles. He thinks this model bill is something that is going to haunt him. Well, I assure him he is correct, it is going to haunt him.

For if he had looked at some of the things in the United States, he would have included in his safety code the point raised by the hon. member for Sudbury: That you do not install this kind of equipment when people are in the building—a public building. I think there are other aspects of that model code which, for better or for worse, we did not include in our setup and I wonder whether we should not have done so.

For example, the hon. Minister referred to the gas rate hearings that have been held, particularly those for Consumers' Gas. I was very interested in an editorial carried in the Toronto Daily Star on November 14 which they headed: "Councils Ignore Gas Rates." There is no municipal council intervening for the protection of their own consumers.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: They did not give us much credit though, I did not think! Did the hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, no. They did not give the hon. Minister much credit. Whether or not they are wrong in not giving him credit, events alone will tell. So, for the moment, I am going to reserve whether I give him credit or not.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That comes as a crushing surprise.

Mr. MacDonald: It does point up, Mr. Chairman, the extreme importance of this energy returns officer. If the municipalities for one reason or another are not going to enforce a careful examination of the rate base and the other various financial factors involved, then we, in this Legislature, through this officer of the Ontario energy board, have to protect the public interests.

I remind the hon. Minister that it is very fortunate that some of us on this side of the House fought last year to have this energy returns officer taken out of the ivory tower of the department and brought into close relationship with the energy board where he can do his job.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: He has done just as good a job, and he is where everybody wanted him.

Mr. MacDonald: I suspect he would not have done just as good a job or the hon. Minister would not have moved him because he was then persuaded he would do a better job where the hon. Minister put him. So let us not argue that point.

To get back to the model bill. The model bill has some proposals in specific terms as to what should be in a rate base. I am not exploring this exhaustively today because the whole thing is now in the process of examination. I was interested in the points that were brought up in the Daily Star editorial. They point out, for example, that Consumers' Gas sought to have included in their rate base one figure of $19,472,600 covering deficiencies in returns for the 4 years between 1955 and 1958. They say that the company claims it should have got 7 per cent returns in 1955, and 7.5 per cent returns in each of the other years and in fact it never got over 3.6 per cent. So now it wants to add these deficiencies in its returns into the rate base.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes. But they could put in something for mother's summer cottage. That does not mean anything.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope the Ontario energy board agrees with the hon. Minister because he in effect has said this is utter rot and I want to agree with him; it is utter rot. Why the deficiencies in returns for the last 3 years should go into a rate base, which becomes the basis for calculating your rate for presumably the next 10 or 15 or 20 years, completely mystifies me. If companies are going to try to get that kind of item included in their rate base, then the hon. Minister had better man the staff of the energy returns officer and supply him with everything that is needed. I suggest this because he is going to have a tough battle on his hands.

The editorial cites another example, adding some $6,941,000 into the rate base for "receivables on sales finance plans." I do not profess to be an accountant or an economist, but I have almost as much difficulty in conceiving of that having a valid place in the rate base.

Well, I think we can leave this matter for the moment, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I trust the hon. member does not assume because I do not comment on what he read that I approve of what he is reading, because I said last year, and I repeat, that the rate of return for these companies will be on a rate base of historical cost less depreciation and there are a fair number of precedents in relation to that. In fact, there are volumes of books that describe what are historical costs that would run through perhaps two or three decades and on.

They will be given a rate of return in the neighbourhood of 7 per cent. We have not swerved one inch on either side of that pronouncement.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, we will leave that. I want to turn finally to some aspects of the lessons that are to be learned from the Windsor blast which, unfortunately, took 10 lives and injured some 80 people.

The thing that strikes me about this coroner's jury report is the contrast between the approach of the hon. Minister indicated in the House here and indicated earlier in his statements made in Windsor before the coroner's jury had even met. For example, when he was down there, he was quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail of October 29 as saying in no uncertain terms that contractors were going to have to obey these codes. The direct quotation was:

My own opinion is that the code was broken and that is what caused the blast. I want it known that I mean business. The code is going to be obeyed. If it is not, I will follow every avenue to penalize those who break it.

Now that is fine. I appreciate the hon. Minister reiterating it today. The coroner's jury has sat and has brought in its report, which states that there was gross negligence on the part of the company. And what does the company say?

I have the Windsor Star of December 3, after the report had come out and an official—in fact Russell Perkins, the general manager of the Union Gas Company, Windsor operations—issued the following statement:

We feel we were not negligent. We did not violate any of the code.

Now this is a preposterous situation! After we have had a coroner's jury investigate the situation and come up with a documented report that the code had been violated and the company's conduct had been described as "gross negligence," officials of the company say they have not violated the code.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, what would the hon. member expect them to say? I do not want to take sides on it, but what would he expect them to say?

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell the hon. Minister what I expect them to say. I would expect them, like a few other people who have been caught violating the law, to at least say nothing.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: But he does not think he was caught violating the law.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, this is the point. He says that he has not violated the code when the hon. Minister says the code was violated and his stand has been confirmed. All I am saying is that the hon. Minister has a real job on his hands. He has a job dealing with a company which is a rough, tough customer and has operated as it blessed well pleases for a long, long time down in the Lambton fields—with regard to the problems that the Langford committee is looking into—and on this issue too.

And I hope that the hon. Minister does not waver one iota in his pronouncement as to what he is going to do in having this code lived up to. Because if they are permitted to get away with it, they are going to get away with it. This is the record of this company.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member does not really believe I will waver though, does he? He really believes I will do a job?

Mr. MacDonald: I will wait and let events confirm whether or not the hon. Minister is going to waver.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, that is—

Mr. MacDonald: As a matter of fact the hon. member for Sudbury was raising a very valid point and the hon. Minister for a moment began to try to throw legal monkey wrenches into his argument. He said: "Did the hon. member for Sudbury not know that there were writs issued against the company?"

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is correct.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine! But does the hon. Minister not know that the writs are also issued against the plumbers?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is correct.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, fine. The hon. Minister put the penalty on the plumbers before anything had gone before the courts, but he did not put in the penalty against the company.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Does the hon. member want to know why?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I would be interested in knowing why.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Because at the time I was there I advised the press when they asked me what I had to say about it, that it was my own point of view only, and that it had been recommended to me by the energy board of Ontario, that the licence of the contractor be suspended.

Now, a rather interesting aspect of this matter arises under this heading. We passed legislation last year. I told the energy committee, and I pointed out to this House, that I felt under some circumstances a Minister should have the authority to suspend a licence. I did not get it. The committee voted against it and I acceded to their opinion that there should be a hearing before the energy board. I had no authority to suspend anybody's licence. I did not. I said that the licence had been suspended until we got back here to Toronto and found out that, legally, I should not have suspended his licence.

Now this was in acceding to a request of the committee of this House and the opinion at that time, following a recommendation of the Gordon committee—as the hon. member will remember—that there should be no cancellation of licences without people having the right to be heard and having a full right to appeal. It was on that basis that the legislation was prepared and presented to this House that the Minister has no right, even in an emergency, to cancel a licence. Quite frankly, I am going to speak to the House about it in the coming session—about whether the Minister under some circumstances should have an emergency power.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Does the hon. Minister mean it was cancelled in Windsor when he came back to Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Pardon? Did I—

Mr. Whicher: Did he retract the statement that the licence was cancelled when he came back to Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Retract it to whom?

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Well, he said it was suspended—the plumber's licence—to the press. Did he bring a statement—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I had no authority to lift it. Therefore it was never lifted.

Mr. Lawrence: At least did the hon. Minister have the courtesy to have something in the paper to show that he did not have that authority?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am advising the House, in the proper place, I think, that I have no authority. I am not going to permit him to have a licence in 1961.

An hon. member: It is up to him.

Mr. Lawrence: Is the hon. Minister now saying that there has been no hearing of the energy board to determine whether or not this man's licence should be lifted?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is correct. I am saying that.

Mr. Lawrence: He can still operate in the Windsor area, can he?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is correct. I might say, however, that the Windsor people, as I understand it, have taken back his licence.

Mr. MacDonald: Quite apart from the point that the hon. Minister has raised, which is very interesting and I think it has been rather enlightening, I want to get back to re-establish the point I was making: whether or not the hon. Minister had the power, he was willing to exercise it and did attempt to exercise it against the plumber. But he did not attempt to exercise it against the Union Gas Company.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Oh, I am sorry. I got part way through what I was going to say. The reason I did not was because I was expressing my own view. At that time I was not there for the hearing, as the hon.

member knows. There was a hearing called for the purpose of seeing what the ramifications of this matter were, and it occurred to me—it seemed to be apparent to me and to the energy board on whose recommendations I was acting—that patently the plumber here, the fitter himself, the contractor had broken one or two of the provisions of the code.

It was not apparent to the energy board that the company had broken any provision of the code. It is now essential to obtain the evidence from the hearing to find out exactly what provisions of the code have been broken in order to lay a prosecution, and that will be done if the company has broken the provisions of the code. I said that at the time and I repeat it now.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going into the details of the specific proposals that were raised because the hon. Minister has touched on them. I refer now to proposals for changing the code—such, for example, as the supplementing of what is delightfully referred to as the human sniff test with an explosimeter, because, apparently, natural gas is not always detectable by the human sniff test. Presumably there will be an opportunity in the energy committee to review some of these proposed changes.

However, the most important thing that emerges out of all this—and, I think, the government is here open to criticism—is on the inspection end of it. Rightly or wrongly, enough inspection was not done on this job—whether by local inspectors, by inspectors who come under the department; or whether by some of the inspectors who did not follow through after they had issued the licence from the city hall in Windsor, and who came in for a bit of a rap over the knuckles.

The thing that concerns me about this inspection problem was a story carried in the Windsor Star, the exact date of which I am not certain, at the moment, on the inspection situation. One of the local inspectors was commenting on the task they have in Windsor. He was quoted as follows:

The task of inspecting the uncounted and unknown number of heating installations made prior to the 1954 bylaw, as well as the unknown number of sneak installations made without applying for a building permit, and consequently without the benefits of inspection, makes the problem one of lack of enough inspectors for the job.

If I may just interpolate here; apparently they have had a bylaw since 1954, which means that all new installations must be inspected. But there is a backlog on which they have not caught up, quite apart from the do-it-yourself efforts about which they do not hear. This is the comment:

“At present the inspectors, swamped with work, are 3 weeks behind in the inspections of new permits, much less having the time to dig into the pre-1954 era,” Mr. Maguire said, in reply to the reporter’s questions. “Windsor is in good shape, but it could be a lot better,” commented Victor Hewit, one of the two inspectors.

The question I am curious about, Mr. Chairman, is to what extent that kind of situation obtains elsewhere across the province. If I understand it correctly, this department has municipal inspectors working in conjunction with them—or do they take over an area from this department?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In addition to.

Mr. MacDonald: In addition to this department? In other words, the hon. Minister has a responsibility there, too.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, this brings it right down on his doorstep. If he has this kind of situation in Windsor, with such a backlog of inspections that have to be made, as well as the so-called “sneak” installations with no inspections, I wonder whether the 35 men he has sitting up in the gallery today should not be multiplied by many, many times if we are going to be able to catch up on the potential destructive situation that could result in other similar explosions with loss of life and property. I wonder if, before he is finished, the hon. Minister would care to comment on that.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We passed a provision last year in the Act that every distributor must reinspect each installation every 3 years, which means that even if something is inspected on its installation today, it has to be reinspected within 3 years. This means that there was a great deal of this backlog in Windsor, to which reference has been made—I have not read those quotations and am therefore unable to vouch for their accuracy or otherwise—because these companies, since the passage of this Act, are now, of course, in the process of not only inspecting the new installations but also reinspecting the old.

As far as the municipalities are concerned, there are a number—not many, 4 or 5, I think—that have their own bylaw and their own inspection service. The province of Ontario has its inspection service. The distributing companies upon whom the basic responsibility for inspection—although not the ultimate responsibility, but the inspection in the first instance—lies, have large inspection staffs. And now, under the provisions of the Act, section 5, no person shall install or have installed any appliance to be supplied with gas by the distributor without giving notice to the distributor of the address of the premises at which the installation is to be made, and the type of appliance to be installed.

In addition, where the supply of gas to a meter is turned on, no person shall use any appliance connected thereto until the distributor that supplies gas to the meter has inspected all the appliances, and every distributor shall inspect at least once every 3 years all appliances to which gas is supplied.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, it is not my desire to attempt to embarrass either the government or the hon. Minister on this matter. It is, however, as we all know, an extremely serious problem.

I would like to point out that there is a broader context to this whole question of safety.

It would not be in order, at this time, to refer to The Department of Labour or The Department of Mines in any detail, but I think it is relevant to mention them in order to place the unfortunate occurrence in Windsor in its total context, which is one of apparent widespread negligence on the part of the government on the whole question of safety. This has resulted in some very serious tragedies; not only resulting from gas explosions but from other calamities as well.

It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that it is time the government pulled up its socks on this issue; that it got down to business on the question of safety. I am quite prepared to recognize that it is up against a lot of difficulties; that new processes are developing, for one thing, that are hard to keep abreast of. The hon. Minister of Energy Resources has stated that his department has devised the finest regulations in North America, I believe he said, with regard to safe handling of gas.

Mr. Chairman, the finest regulations in the world are totally useless if they are not observed. It certainly seems pretty clear that there is inadequate machinery to ensure that these regulations will be observed. This seems to be the weakness.

I am in no position to deal with the adequacy of the regulations; I am not qualified to deal with that at all. I accept the hon. Minister's word that they are the latest thing.

But there still seems to be widespread negligence in the government service on this question of safety and, Mr. Chairman, it is time there was a drastic change in the attitude and in the practice of the government, not only as it affects this particular department, but as it affects the total question of safety in all its ramifications.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on this question of the explosion at the Metropolitan store in Windsor which occurred on Tuesday, October 25, at 2.10 in the afternoon.

I say to this House that, to me, it is the most tragic incident in the history of the city of Windsor. It killed 10 people and injured 83. Now I certainly do not want to wish on any hon. members of this House a similar happening because to me it is certainly a sad affair. It has caused chaos in Windsor. The people there are still talking about it. I do want to show some of the things that happened because I was on the scene quite a few times during the rescue work.

The work that was done by the fire department, by the police department, by the civil defence department, by the hospitals and the citizens at large was indeed tremendous. It showed the true spirit of the Windsorites under such a tragic circumstance.

I want to say also, that the province also took a hand in the matter. Following the explosion, the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) was on the scene the following day, then the fire marshal followed by the Deputy Minister of Planning and Development (Mr. Tyrrell). He stayed with our leader of civilian defence, Mr. Bird, for three days until they were sure that there were no more victims in the building.

On Friday, about noon—I happened to be on the scene—the hon. Minister of Energy Resources arrived. I went down because I wanted to hear what the hon. Minister was going to say.

The first thing that he did when he arrived in Windsor was to put on a little tin hat that the people around there were wearing so that they could go into the building. I do not begrudge that at all.

He did a little bit of inspection and then had a few pictures taken by the press. Then

I happened to be very close to him when the reporters of the press asked him, "Mr. Minister, have you a statement to make?" He said, "I will make my statement in a room at the hotel." Then he departed.

The Deputy Minister of Planning and Development told the mayor of the city of Windsor that he was satisfied the rescue work had been completed. The mayor along with our own leader of civil defence, Mr. Bird, agreed to this. The rescue operations had been completed.

Now, I went back to my classes that afternoon. That evening when I opened the paper and read that, as a result of the visit of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, a man who had been in the contracting business in the city of Windsor for 38 years had his licence suspended. I certainly felt at the time, and I still feel, that the action of the hon. Minister at that time was certainly far too quick and drastic.

Why, especially, did he pick on the plumber himself, who was just a sub-contractor, since the contract was given to the gas company. They should have been the ones penalized in this affair because they also had an obligation to see that the work was done according to the code. I must agree with the hon. Minister that the code had to be observed. But this was too drastic an accident to say that only one party was to be found negligent.

There followed a gathering of quite a bit of information. On November 29 the investigation started in the council chambers of the city of Windsor where they heard, I think, in the neighbourhood of 150 witnesses.

Then on last Friday, December 2, the Assistant Deputy Attorney-General (Mr. Silk), who acted as counsel at the inquest, was given the report of the coroner's jury. And I would like to show to this House that the very first name that is mentioned in this headline is not the plumber, it is the gas company. The plumbers also were found negligent.

I might again ask this House and the hon. Minister why he took the action that he did at the time. For myself, I have felt this—and my opinion has not changed—that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources came there and he wanted the citizens of Windsor to know that he had some authority and was going to use that authority. I know that he left that same afternoon after he made a statement to the press and suspended a man's licence. To me, that is certainly a wrong action.

And, then, I have heard this afternoon that he did not have the authority. Why he did that, then, I do not know. I feel that there has been enough unpleasantness—the people who have suffered in this, the people who were hurt, the people who were killed, the bereft families and others. Added to this, the ones who should have been doing some supervising were let off scot-free. That, again, I say, Mr. Chairman, is too drastic an action.

Now, I want to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister that, in the findings of the jury, there have been some worthwhile suggestions. There have been 12 recommendations which are certainly worthy of consideration and I do hope they will be taken into consideration because they certainly show that there has to be a very, very close supervision of this type of work. I am not going to read them all, but I do want to say that one of them was mentioned here this afternoon, and I certainly agree with it, that when new heating units have been energized in buildings where the public are likely to be present, that work should be done after closing hours, or the building closed to the public.

This explosion brought nationwide attention. In the city of Detroit, it was pointed out that they have had a city ordinance for years and years covering this type of installation and they were quite surprised to see that in the province of Ontario that had not been included in the code.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister said it was the best in the world, the best in the world.

Mr. Belanger: That is what we were told this afternoon, a very, very good code. Another recommendation states that: Any person or company operating under The Energy Act of 1960, province of Ontario, pertaining to gas transmission and pipe line codes and installation code for gas-burning appliances and equipment of the Canadian standard association, must strictly adhere to the above code.

I would certainly agree.

It was mentioned that we have a backlog of work in the city of Windsor—municipalities can only do so much. Sometimes though, some of these contractors know that the code has not been lived up to and they just go along saying, "Well, we got away with it in the past, let us try it again, let us try it again." I do happen to know that quite a few times people install or change their furnaces and the permit is applied for after the furnace has been in operation for quite a few months.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Would the hon. member care to tell me the names? I can have them looked into?

Mr. Belanger: Well, I would say to the hon. Minister that I had an experience myself, a personal experience, this year. The permit was applied for after the furnace had been installed.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Whose was that? The hon. member's own home?

Mr. Belanger: I did not install it myself because I am not capable of doing that.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No. But I mean, the hon. member says he has a personal experience. What experience is he talking about?

Mr. Belanger: I mean to say I changed my furnace in my home this year and I know the permit to install the furnace was obtained after the furnace had been installed.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Did the hon. member let the contract to the contractor who put it in?

Mr. Belanger: I left it up to the contractor. It is not up to me to get the permit, it is up to the contractor, not up to me.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think the hon. member will find in law it is up to him.

Mr. Belanger: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think the hon. member will find in law it is up to him.

Mr. Belanger: Well, if this is true from that viewpoint, then I think quite a few people are going to have to be prosecuted in the province of Ontario. Because, after all, a layman is a layman. I am not a plumber, a technician. I know nothing of these things. I depend on contractors—goodness gracious, when a man builds a home, when he hires a contractor, does he have to go out and get the permit himself? Let us be realistic in this affair.

There have been some worthwhile recommendations in the jury's verdict, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to take too much time, but I do hope they are going to be considered and that the people who are guilty in this affair will be punished. I stress this because we certainly do not want to see a recurrence of this in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Lawrence: I wonder if I might take a contrary view on what the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich just said. I want to commend very heartily the hon. Minister for his prompt action in going down to the scene of the Windsor tragedy. Instead of any petty remarks about public relations or anything like that, I think hon. members of this House should commend the hon. Minister very, very strongly for going down there and taking the very personal interest in the tragedy that he did, which I think it is his duty to take. Regardless of what is said on the other side of the House, I want to commend him for it.

There is one matter that does alarm me. It is a question I brought up earlier, concerning any contractor, or for that matter any person, involved in the installation of any piece of equipment such as has been referred to. I would urge the hon. Minister to bring an amendment to the Act giving him discretionary power in an emergency such as this to cancel the licence—cancel the licence absolutely. I think the common law rights of individuals must be safeguarded. There should be some provision in the Act whereby a hearing of the energy board must be called, soon after, to either confirm or reject the decision of the Minister in cancelling a licence such as that.

But I think he acted in a way that should be commended by the hon. members of this House.

I find it most alarming, especially in view of the coroner's verdict and the judgment of the jury that the contractor in the Windsor area is still on the loose and can still legally take part in installations such as this. If a hearing of the energy board has not yet been held to cancel that man's licence and to go into the matter very thoroughly, and also perhaps cancel a few other licences, then the energy board should hold a hearing for such a purpose at the very earliest opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I say to the hon. member that first of all the reason why a hearing did not take place before the energy board of the province of Ontario was, firstly, the man was in the hospital and at that time it looked as if there was a possibility of the man dying. It seemed to me that this was a rather inappropriate time for a hearing. On the other hand, safety certainly was involved.

Secondly, I understand also that the city of Windsor cancelled his licence. His rights do not extend beyond the city limits anyhow, and with the cancellation of his city licence there is no question of him being able to use the provincial licence.

The third point is that there was a hearing by the coroner's jury at that time into this very point, and until the coroner's jury brought down its verdict it seemed rather brutum fulmen to be having two hearings on the same point.

Fourthly, notices are in the process of going out for a hearing in relation to this particular transaction.

I would like to say to the hon. member who has sort of made fun of my efforts about going down there and putting on a white hat, and so forth, firstly, I heard about this explosion, I think, at about 5.45 of the day it happened. I do not remember the hour it happened. What hour was it?

Mr. Belanger: It happened at 2.10.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: At 2.10. I heard of it around 5.15 to 5.30. I was on my way north at that particular time.

I got off at a station and asked the chairman of the energy board to get there with all of our chief inspectors. Our people were on the scene by 10 o'clock that night, before the fire marshal or anybody else.

I kept in constant contact with my own executive assistant who was there. The Deputy Minister flew back from Washington to be there; and I came down on Friday. The reason I did not come before Friday was the civil defence people were in charge of bringing out the bodies and it was infinitely more important, it seemed to me, to bring out people who might still be living than to stand around sucking one's thumb trying to decide who caused the accident.

The only thing I could have done if I had arrived there sooner was to stop the rescue of bodies and try to find out how the accident took place. I had the best men in the country, some of them are here in the gallery now, the chief inspectors of our distribution and our utilization branch, and so on. There are engineers, there are some of the most highly qualified and eminent men—

Mr. Belanger: I am not criticizing that viewpoint at all.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member said I did not get there soon enough. I not only feel that we did enough, but I got there as soon as I had any right to say or do anything.

On the last point, the hon. member is quite wrong to say that I said in his presence that I did not have any statement to make, that I would make it in some hotel room. I said no such thing. There was a radio there at the time, and they asked me whether I would like to make a statement on the radio and I said no. The hon. member then went over and implied that he would like to make a statement to which I judge that they did not say yes. I thereupon left.

Mr. Belanger: Wait a minute. The hon. Minister can certainly twist things around. I see the hon. Prime Minister is not the only one in this House who can twist things around, because I recall when the reporters went up to the hon. Minister he was not even by the public address system. He was down by the alley, at the back of the building, and when they asked him if he had a statement to make he said, "No, I will make a statement in the hotel." Then they asked him what room and he said he did not know, they should ask his assistant.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, before we leave this inspection matter, I wonder if I might ask the hon. Minister one question? We have been talking about the inadequacy of the inspection staff and I note the seventh recommendation of the coroner's jury is that an inspector with authority shall be present when a new installation is being energized. The hon. Minister gave us some rather impressive figures before about the number of installations that are made in this province, quite apart from reinspection.

Now, seriously, does the hon. Minister think that the kind of inspection requirements that we have been attempting up until now, plus the further ones suggested by this coroner's jury, can be met with the inspection staff he envisages in the estimate that is before us?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would draw to the hon. member's attention that the jury refers to an inspector—an inspector—not any particular inspector but an inspector, either of the distributing company or of the municipality or of the province. Now, the law says that no gas shall be turned on until it has been inspected by the distribution company. That was not done in this particular case. The code requires it to be done. Now, the day we get inspectors on inspectors on inspectors, there are going to be more inspectors than there are going to be taxpayers in this country.

Mr. MacDonald: No trouble about that at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I say to the hon. member, quite seriously, the basic responsibility for inspection lies with the distribution company, and that is where it has been placed. In this particular case there were at least 2 sections of the code, if not 3, that were broken, and I have referred to them today. One of them required that this gas, where it is turned on at the meter, shall not be used inside until it has been inspected.

Mr. MacDonald: Could the hon. Minister say that he would expect the official of the company to say the code had not been broken when he has 3 clear-cut cases of it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not know whether that company broke the code or not. I know that the jury says it did. I am going to have people read the evidence to see whether they did, and if they did they will be prosecuted. If they did not, they will not be. It is that simple.

All I said was that the hon. member seemed to be quite surprised that when the jury found that they had been guilty of gross negligence the man stood up and said he was not, or his company was not. All I am saying is that I do not know whether he was or not. But is it not human nature for the man to get up and say, "No, we were not"?

Mr. MacDonald: It sounded like the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Lavergne).

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is all I am saying about the situation.

It being 6 of the clock p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1960

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): I do not want to belabour this most unfortunate happening in Windsor's history by repeating everything that has been said by the hon. members of this House. However, I do hope that this misfortune will be a lesson to all and will lead to a much better series of rules and regulations respecting the gas industry in all its phases.

I must make the observation that, even though the coroner's jury in Windsor returned the verdict of gross negligence on the part of the heating and plumbing company—that is the installers and the Union Gas Company—I cannot help but mention that the action of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) in suspending the licence of the installing firm was irresponsible. He, himself, has admitted that he had no authority to do so.

His remarks at the time of this explosion naturally led to the suspension by the city of Windsor of the licence of the firm involved. The small man has been taken care of, but what of the big man?

Surely the hon. Minister, as a member of the bar, should have known the limitations of his powers. After all we are supposed to have the best code in the world.

The "nose and sniff" test seems to be the only method which the Union Gas Company, and its subcontractors, use to detect breaks. Surely the public should expect, and the government insist, that any organization as large as the Union Gas Company should have the latest and best of apparatus for gas detection—not only have them, but be required to use them.

In the speech from the Throne there is mention that the first stage of a programme of licensing and training for those who install gas appliances has been implemented. Yet when The Department of Energy Resources was set up approximately one year ago we understood that rules and regulations were being made to control gas installations. Now, one year later—10 deaths later, 80 injured persons later—I read that gas inspectors are taking courses, that all gas pipeline inspectors employed by the province have been summoned to Toronto for a 3-day review of the safety code and measures dealing with gas and other utility installations.

Is this not another case of locking the barn after the horses have been stolen? Does it always take disaster and misfortune to bring about proper rules and regulations?

I understand that both the hon. Minister and his Deputy will brief the inspectors on the laws relating to all heating equipment. I also understand that this is the first meeting ever called.

It certainly does look as if the episode back in the city of Windsor led to the calling of the meeting. Recent changes in laws governing pipeline installations will be stressed before the inspectors. I hope that such meetings will be held at much more frequent intervals.

In the city of Detroit, and I quote the mayor, Mr. Marianni:

We have insisted that installations such as the one where tragedy occurred—referring to Windsor —would never be done while a store is open to the public or while anyone but essential personnel is on the premises.

I realize that, no matter what precautions are taken to avert accidents, there is no hope of guaranteeing 100 per cent immunity from human error. However, the possible consequences of that error should be anticipated and guarded against. And I hope in the coming rules and regulations that the hon. Minister will see to it that all the recommendations—I should not say "all" but those recommendations that can be readily implemented—be so implemented in the new gas code.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Could I just say one word in relation to the hon. member's observations?

He has spoken about rules and regulations. The jury, in this case, has pointed out that 3 rules and regulations were broken and, if they had not been broken, there would have been no accident. The problem is obviously not a question of more rules and regulations.

The second point that my hon. friend mentions is that this is the first meeting, and that it was brought about by this unfortunate accident. It is quite correct that this is the first meeting. This department took over the responsibility of administering these Acts on September 1, some 80 days ago, and arrangements for the meeting were made as soon as the department took it over and somewhat ahead of this unfortunate accident.

All I can say is what I have said before, and to which a number of hon. members have referred, that the jury has made a number of recommendations and we intend to take the transcript of evidence and read it with great care, with two points in mind.

The first point is that of punishing the offenders whoever they may be, and the second point is that of carrying out whatever recommendations appear to be in the interests of our people.

I want to draw to the attention of the House that no other jurisdiction in Canada requires a building to be cleared before gas is connected in it.

Now, the Americans in some states have done this; in very many states they have not done it. Detroit has done it. This would not, however, have avoided the deaths or this accident. This accident took place simply because, despite the law, people were determined to drive on the wrong side of the street and, despite 30 years of experience, were prepared to disconnect a 2-inch main with an open fire in the corner.

I do not care how many years of experience the man has, how many laws or how many inspectors you have; if somebody does that in determination to accommodate those who may be pressing him, or whatever other reasons there may be, then we are up against one of the great problems of inspection that is very difficult to avoid. A man intent on breaking the law will break it.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, in spite of the fact that the jury made a recommendation that these be done, that such alterations be made when the store is not open for business, I do not see how the—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: We are perfectly prepared to entertain that; and if it needs to be done, it will be done. How much more do I need to say in that connection?

Mr. Sopha: I do not see how the hon. Minister can blithely stand there and say there is no use in making more rules and regulations when common sense demands that he add one, at least, that such alterations be done when the store is closed.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: All I say is, would one more law on top of one more law have prevented it when the first law, had it been obeyed, would have prevented it in the first place?

Mr. Sopha: But when the store is empty is fundamental.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: All that would have happened was that 5 or 6 people would have been killed. Would that have pleased the hon. member more?

Mr. Sopha: Well, I guess it would please the ones who survived. If only 5 or 6 had been killed instead of 10, I guess they would be pleased.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member can make all the facetious remarks he wishes to over these people's bodies. I am not prepared to do so.

Mr. Sopha: I say that common sense demands the implementation of that fundamental point, and I am not going to depart from that one iota.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to get the hon. Minister's opinion on a slightly different matter.

There has been some concern expressed to me by such people as civil defence personnel, firemen and policemen about lack of knowledge, lack of warning and lack of notice, in connection with industry which has begun to use uranium or fissionable material.

They have expressed a very serious concern that they might be called in to do rescue work or work of an emergency nature, and have no present notice or knowledge of factories or buildings that have fissionable material that might be turned loose.

In examining the Act I see that the hon. Minister presently has the power to pass regulations on this. It is a matter of grave concern to these people, and I wonder if the hon. Minister can tell us if he plans to do anything about it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Actually I would say to the hon. member for York Centre that this is a matter both for The Department of Labour and The Department of Health but, basically speaking, does not affect my department.

However, to this date the fundamental experience in terms of nuclear energy has been with the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and their control board who administer every aspect of safety in the field of nuclear energy.

Although the hon. member may look up and find that I have power to deal with it, or The Department of Energy Resources has some powers, the basic responsibility in connection with nuclear energy and the safety related thereto is under a board which was specifically set up for this very reason. There is very little experience in this province to deal with it, as I do. These people have the experience and at this particular stage it is to them that we look in relation to this matter.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it is very fine to say that it may be the responsibility of The Department of Labour or some other department. The fact remains that there are many factories across this province using nuclear material, and that at any time a fire or explosion could take place in one of them and firemen or policemen or civil defence people could be called upon to go in.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is quite incorrect. There is no factory in this province that has enough uranium or refined plutonium to have an explosion. The hon. member is quite incorrect in that connection and in any event I draw to his attention, and I say this in a friendly way, that there is nothing in my estimate dealing with this matter. Perhaps we should therefore keep to that.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. Minister understood me and I will go over it again. I did not say there was enough nuclear material to form an explosion. I said that there could be a fire or an explosion or some other sort of a disaster affecting that building which could turn loose this—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Name one.

Mr. Singer: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Name one.

Mr. Singer: Any place that has it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What place is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. Singer: Any building is liable to catch fire. The hon. Prime Minister knows that as well as I do.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is talking through his hat.

Mr. Singer: Nonsense, nonsense. Mr. Chairman, surely the hon. Prime Minister can just be patient the same as any other hon. member of the House. You can have a fire in any building, a warehouse or any other building. When a fire gets hold of a building and beams come tumbling down, certainly fissionable material can be turned loose.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member is quite incorrect that fissionable materials could be turned loose on account of a fire. That is incorrect.

Mr. Singer: If beams or heavy structural material came crashing down on this material, why—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It would not make the slightest difference how much machinery came crashing down on any amount of uranium. It has nothing to do with the possibility of an explosion or isotopes which could do damage.

Mr. Singer: I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he should get together with his colleague, the federal hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees), under whose department comes civil defence, and immediately send out a directive to all the civil defence instructors, who are going out and instructing firemen, that this is a very serious danger about which something should be done. It is about time these various departments of government got together and agreed on something.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If it is the federal government that is making these pronouncements, and I do not accept them as being accurate, then perhaps they are the people to appeal to.

Mr. Singer: Sloughing off responsibility.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would like to call to the attention of the hon. Minister a matter which is admittedly much less serious than the very grave matter that we discussed for some time this afternoon and the beginning of this evening, but which is, nevertheless, important in its own way. It relates to the installation of gas appliances—that is, major gas-burning appliances, such as furnaces—in residential properties and other similar properties.

As I understand it, if one is to have a gas furnace or other substantial gas-burning appliance in his home, it is necessary that his chimney be lined, otherwise there is a danger of—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member is incorrect.

Mr. Bryden: Apparently the hon. Minister considers that nobody knows anything except himself. I will admit that I am no expert in this field but I have acquired a certain amount of knowledge in the school of bitter experience.

It was in the metropolitan city of Toronto in relation to a property which my wife and I own as junior partners with a mortgage company.

We installed an appliance and discovered that the chimney was being eroded by the gas fumes. Furthermore, a certain amount of shale, or whatever you want to call it, fell down inside the chimney and partially blocked the vent creating what could have been a serious hazard. If the hon. Minister says that could not happen, well, it did happen.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I did not. I said that is not part of the laws of the province of Ontario. Any municipality may require a certain thing but it has nothing to do with this Legislature.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am saying that in the interests of safety and in the interests of the protection of property it is necessary that a chimney be lined—if a gas furnace or other similar appliance is to be installed and used.

I am not the only one who ran into this difficulty. I know of at least 3 other people who ran into the same thing. One of them, as a matter of fact—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Does the hon. member suggest that every chimney of this province be torn down and relined?

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Has the hon. member inquired into the city of Toronto building bylaws? He will find the answer there.

Mr. Bryden: There is more to it than this. The hon. Minister apparently insists on making a public display of his ignorance. It is not necessary to tear the chimney down, but it is necessary to line it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: How would the hon. member line it if he did not tear it down?

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister is in a very ugly mood very early in the evening.

I am telling him, again from personal experience, that a chimney can be lined for the purpose without being torn down, and that it is essential.

An hon. member: What do they line it with?

Mr. Bryden: They have a certain product—I do not know what the name of it is, but it is a tile that is inserted in the chimney.

This is apparently a matter of great levity to the hon. government supporters but I will complete my point more quickly if they will merely let me proceed. I still insist that it is a serious problem, and that dealers in gas appliances and also the Consumers' Gas Company permit consumers to go ahead and purchase gas-burning appliances without warning them of the necessity of getting the chimney lined.

In my own case, which I will again cite, there was no gas on the premises. The Consumers' Gas Company had to put in a line.

They knew that I was installing this appliance. The dealer knew. Neither of them told me of the necessity of lining the chimney.

I can only assume that the reason they did not do so was that it was going to cost me extra money, a not insignificant sum, to get the chimney lined. They are apparently so anxious to increase the sale of gas, and the sale of gas appliances, that they will let a consumer proceed without warning him of the danger he is incurring. They let him find out the hard way, as I found out myself when some damage was caused to my chimney.

Though not serious, a hazard was created.

I know of the case of another man who had seepage in the inside walls of his house. The seepage ran into the rooms of his house. He suffered quite serious damage, both to his chimney and to some of the walls. That may be a laughing matter to the hon. government supporters. I do not consider it to be a laughing matter.

The most recent case I have run into—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): We are laughing about the hon. member being a partner in a mortgage company.

Mr. Bryden: The most recent instance I have encountered occurred just this fall. The man in question had installed a gas furnace but he had not actually put it into operation. I was in a position to warn him of the danger he was incurring so that he was able to take steps before he ran into any serious trouble. But not all people are that lucky.

I submit to the hon. Minister, whether he wants to consider it or not, that it is unfortunate and wrong that the Consumers' Gas Company or any other gas company or dealers in gas appliances should proceed to install these appliances without letting the consumer know what he is getting into.

To let him find out the hard way, when it is very likely going to cost him considerably more money than it would have done in the first instance, is certainly a practice that should not be condoned by the department or anyone else.

I do not know if the regulations make any provision with regard to taking adequate precautions to protect chimneys from erosion caused by the fumes from gas-burning appliances, but I submit to the hon. Minister that is a matter that should be considered. There should be some steps that can be taken against someone installing an appliance who does so knowing full well that the chimney is not properly equipped to handle the fumes.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, this is not politic. These are the building bylaws of the city of Toronto he is talking about. If they have modern bylaws, which they have, when they take the permit out to install that gas furnace, that is taken care of. This is ridiculous.

Mr. Bryden: It is not ridiculous! It is happening, and I submit it is a matter relating to gas installations. It may also be a matter relating to building bylaws, but it certainly relates to the safe operation of gas appliances, because they cannot be operated safely if adequate precautions are not taken with regard to the chimney.

Now I can see that the hon. Minister is totally unconcerned about this problem. But nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I would like to assure him, through you, that it is a serious problem and is one that ought to receive some attention from him and his department.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I do not know why it was necessary for the hon. member to make that rude remark about me being entirely unconcerned about this. If I must say the things the hon. member wants me to say as well as look the way he wants me to look, there will not be much left in this world for individual decision. I would, however, draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that, on page 34 of our code, there is a provision:

Unlined chimneys shall not be used unless approved by the enforcing authority.

This decision is one that is made by the municipality of the city of Toronto.

Mr. Bryden: Just before we leave that point, Mr. Chairman, what procedure should a consumer take? One of the difficulties—I will speak for myself and others I have talked to—is that the consumer has no idea of the need to have his chimney lined until he finds out the hard way. Now, can he lay a complaint? What steps can be taken when he suffers this unfortunate experience?

Votes 601 to 603, inclusive, agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay moves that the committee do now rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, before you place the motion, may I ask the hon. Minister whether it is his intention to pursue either immediately, or some other time during the session, the Hydro report that he filed a few days ago?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that we will now, as I understand it, report what progress we have made after which there will be some other proceedings in the House. Then we will go back to the committee decision of the report.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Can the hon. Minister tell us when we will receive a copy of the Hydro report?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I was instructed that every hon. member was mailed a copy last August.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like your permission to revert to the orders of the day and to introduce to this House the member-elect for the electoral district of Temiskaming (Mr. Hoffman).

I might make this explanation to the House. I understand that, this afternoon, the third reading was given to the bill amending The Legislative Assembly Act. The introduction of this member, according to the legal opinions I have, was not dependent upon that Act. But it seemed to me it was proper, for the matters to which we gave consideration in this House, arising from a situation connected with the member-elect, that I should not introduce him to the House and have him take part in the deliberations until the matter was resolved.

Now that may seem to be remote, but I felt it was in keeping with the rights and dignity of this House.

The bill has reached third reading and it only awaits Royal assent, along with other bills which will reach that stage in due course. So, sir, at this stage, where the House has reached the end of its deliberations on the relevant stages of that bill, I think now it would be proper that I should introduce the member. I would ask your permission so to do.

I beg leave to present Mr. Philip Hoffman, who has taken the oath and signed the roll. Will Mr. Speaker revert to that order?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sir, may I have permission to escort the member to this House?

Philip Hoffman, esquire, member for the electoral district of Temiskaming, having taken the oath and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you, Mr. Philip Hoffman, the hon. member for the electoral district of Temiskaming, who has taken the oath and subscribed the roll, and now claims his right to take his seat.

Mr. Speaker: Let the member take his seat.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move that you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

I might explain to the House that this is for the purposes of going into that portion of the estimates which would affect the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, of which the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) is a member.

I think, in connection with what we agreed, we should give the House the opportunity of discussing the matters based generally, as I understand it, upon the reports of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. W. E. Johnston in the chair.

ESTIMATES, HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER COMMISSION OF ONTARIO

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources and Vice-Chairman of Hydro): Mr. Chairman, the report of Ontario Hydro was tabled two days ago after circulation, last August, as I was advised, to all the hon. members of the Legislature. I would like, if I might have the permission of the House, to report briefly on the major activities of the commission during the early and latter part of 1960. After this, if the hon. members opposite or any hon. members in this House have questions which I may answer, I would be very happy to do so.

Mr. Chairman, Ontario Hydro at the beginning of 1960 had available for operation 66 hydro-electric and two major thermal generating stations.

It is responsible for approximately 90 per cent of the electrical energy supplied for consumption in Ontario.

Ontario Hydro's capacity has been increased from 1,842,500 kw in 1943, by 234 per cent, to some 6.1 million kw at the beginning of 1960. It will be an estimated 9 million kw at the end of 1965. These figures are rounded; actually they are a little more or a little less, in certain cases.

Mr. Chairman, the demand for electricity has grown from 1.7 million kw in 1943 to approximately 5.5 million kw at the beginning of 1960. This is an increase of approximately 218 per cent and, by 1965, we estimate that the amount will be somewhere in the neighbourhood of 8 million kw.

Higher standards of living, Mr. Chairman, are enjoyed by the people of Ontario. The number of appliances which can make use of electricity, as a result of the abundance of electricity at reasonable prices, has increased greatly since the end of World War II.

There has been an increase in the annual average municipal domestic consumption of electric energy from about 2,100 kwh a customer in 1943, to something like 5,500 kwh in 1959. This is an increase in the use of electricity in this province of approximately 152 per cent for a person living in a municipality.

It has been estimated that a healthy man, working for 8 hours, can produce the equivalent of .75 kwh. This means that, in terms of electric energy at current rates, the work done by a man labouring steadily for an average work day would cost less than one cent.

Ontario Hydro last year supplied more than 16 billion kwh to industries in the province.

If we take the working year as 240 days, we find that this is equal to a work force of approximately 90 million people.

It has often been said that the per capita consumption of electricity is a fair indication of the prosperity and high standard of living of the people.

As I indicated this afternoon, normally one can trace economic history throughout this country, and throughout other countries, and find that where there has been a high standard of living this is accompanied by abundant energy and at reasonable rates. But in places such as India and many Asian countries, where there is a low standard of living, there is either very expensive energy or it is in quite short supply.

Now by this measuring stick, few areas in the world actually can compare with this province of Ontario in terms of consumption of electricity.

We, per person, consume in the province of Ontario approximately 6,000 kwh a year. This is higher than the rest of Canada, this is higher than any area in the United States, this is higher than Great Britain and it is 4 times as high as in France.

There is only one other country in the world which consumes as much electricity as that consumed in the province of Ontario and that is Norway; and Norway has no other energy resources, such as coal, gas or oil, in any quantity to take the place of those which are consumed in quantity in this province.

It is interesting—and I think it would be thought to be significant by this House—to note these advantages which the people of Ontario enjoy in relation to those less fortunate ones living in other nations in the world. Some 6 million citizens in the province of Ontario consume more electricity than 670 million people living in China.

In terms of the development of load trends—that is, the development of power consumption in this province—the growth of the power demands in this province have been in the neighbourhood of 8 per cent. They were in the neighbourhood of 8 per cent in 1959 and they were somewhat lower this year, although it is not yet complete—nevertheless, the average over 55 or 54 years has been in the neighbourhood of 6 or 6.5 per cent, which is a tremendous increase.

I think that this nation as a whole would be satisfied if our gross national product could keep pace with the development of the consumption of electricity in this jurisdiction.

In terms of new generation—that is generation which is now under way, or will be under way this winter, or is about to come under the advances of our construction project—I would want to say this—because these things add to and are important in relation to winter works projects, unemployment and general development of this province: Today, in 1960, we have added approximately 420,000 kw of electricity to our load.

We have, as I indicated at the beginning, something in the neighbourhood of 6.1 million kw and we have added, in one year, 420,000 kw of new generation. An additional 20,000 kw is scheduled at the end of this year, within the next few days, at Red Rock falls.

In this year, in January, 200,000 kw of electricity were put into service at the Richard L. Hearn plant in the city of Toronto; and, in September, an additional 200,000 kw of the 420,000.

Some 20,000 kw are going into play very shortly and 20,000 kw went into play from Red Rock in the fall.

The current plans call for 2.25 million kw to be added during the next 6 years. That is one of the points to which I would like to make reference, because this affects a great many hon. members in this House, some on one side, some on the other. But we are all equally devoted to the even and fair, just and equitable, development of this province. Certainly it cannot be said but that electricity in abundance and at reasonable rates, or certainly as reasonable as is possible, is one of the greatest and most noble contributing factors to the even development of our industry.

Therefore some of these sites, whereas they may not be of compelling interest to certain hon. members, may be of very great interest to others.

I would now like to refer to a programme, which is under way, involving about $1 billion of the money of the people of this province.

First, there is an extension to the Hearn plant in the city of Toronto—four 20,000 kw units which will bring the ultimate capacity of this plant to 1.2 million kw, one of the largest plants of its kind in the world.

The first unit was placed in service in 1959, and two more were placed in 1960. The final one will be in September, I believe, or perhaps the spring or summer—it is a little difficult to be accurate in these predictions—in any event, in 1961.

The second programme which is of great interest to a number of hon. members is the one which is nearing completion at Red Rock falls, on the Mississagi river. This is a generating station which will produce when it is finished about 40,000 kw in two units.

One unit was placed in service this fall in November, 1960, and the remaining one will be placed in service in January of 1961.

The third programme, which is of interest to the hon. members from the Ottawa valley, is NPD 2, the nuclear power demonstration plant at Des Joachims.

This is a hallmark really of progress in Canada, in terms of nuclear energy. This is a great stride towards breaking the bonds which have bound traditional energy resources in the free-speaking world, the English-speaking world.

The generating station will come into force, or on to the line as the engineers say, we hope some time in the summer of 1961. It will produce about 20,000 kw of electricity.

This has been a co-operative effort between Hydro and one of the manufacturers, the Canadian General Electric Company, and the federal government. Some 20,000 kw of electricity will be produced, enough to carry on the normal electrical business of a fair-sized city.

The fourth is the Lakeview generating station which, when it is completed—and I referred to it this afternoon—will be one of the largest of its kind in the world, if not the largest.

This is a thermal plant; that is to say, it burns coal. It will have 4 generators, each of which is rated at some 300,000 kw. One unit is scheduled for service in the fall of 1961, the others for 1962, 1963, and 1964.

The ultimate capacity of 1.8 million kw is expected to be reached somewhere in the neighbourhood of 1965.

This station is also capable of increase to an even greater rating than 1.8 million kw. This is twice the kilowatt production which is obtained by Ontario Hydro from the St. Lawrence river. Or, put another way, this single plant to burn coal outside of the city of Toronto—which will cost some $250 million—is capable of producing electricity equal to the whole flow of the Niagara river.

An additional plant is the one which we have been building now for some few months at Otter rapids on the Abitibi river. This is scheduled to go into service in the fall of 1961 and its ultimate capacity by 1963 will be about 172,000 kw in 4 units.

I mention these units because we had some opportunity this afternoon of speaking about the size of units. I would want the House to know that there are certain size units for certain jobs, and although certain units such as 40,000 kw or 50,000 kw, or 60,000 kw in 1947 and 1948 were an admirable size, today 500,000 is a rateable figure in the United States, and we are approaching it here very quickly in our own jurisdiction.

An additional generating station is that of the Little Long rapids generating station on the Mattagami river.

There are 3 stations on the Mattagami river which we are now undertaking. They will become basically efficient only when they are all integrated, because the head ponds must be related to get the maximum benefit of the flow between the 3.

The Little Long rapids generating station which is now being constructed on the Mattagami river will produce about 114,000 kw of electricity and will come into production in 1963 in two units.

Farther down the Mattagami river will be the Harmon generating station. It will come into service in 1965 and it will have 110,000 kw in 3 units.

The last of this set of triplets is the Kipling generating station, again on the Mattagami river. This will come into service in 1966, with 132,000 kw in 3 units.

Now there are two others which are of very great significance. One is the Thunder Bay generating station which is interesting, I know, to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple) and the hon. Minister from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope), as well as to other hon. members from northwestern Ontario.

The Thunder Bay generating station is perhaps one of the most unique in the system of Ontario Hydro. It is being built at the head of the lakes and its capacity is 100,000 kw.

It is scheduled to come into production in the summer of 1961, and its site is suitable to produce ultimately about one million kw of electricity. It is a very large station indeed.

It is unique in that it can be fired either by gas or by coal.

There are rates by the hour, by the minute, and so forth, in relation to gas; and the fuel which is the least expensive at any given moment will be the fuel consumed in this generating station. It is a most interesting generating station in the sense that it can be alternately or simultaneously fueled this way.

The last generating station forming part of this approximately $750 million programme, now adding to the economic prosperity of this province, is the Douglas Point nuclear power station. This is sometimes known as CANDU. The "Can" stands for Canadian and the "du" stands for deuterium. Deuterium oxide is another term for heavy water, therefore, CANDU stands for the Canadian plant using deuterium oxide.

This is a generating station which will produce about 200,000 kw of electricity. It will be the largest of its kind in the world, and will be the only one of its kind so far, apart from the NPD plant on the Ottawa river at Des Joachims. It is scheduled to come into production at the end of 1964, or the beginning of 1965.

It is being constructed by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, in co-operation with Ontario Hydro—which will purchase the plant after the plant has been in operation, and has proven to be of equally efficient value to a thermal plant of similar capacity.

This total programme, Mr. Chairman, is one which is providing many thousands of jobs quite apart from the 15,000 employees of Ontario Hydro.

It will involve an expenditure, ultimately, of $600 million to $750 million, not including a number of other associated capital expenditures such as the extra high voltage transmission line necessary to carry power down from the Mattagami river to Sudbury. This will be of great interest to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), whose sentiments I reciprocate.

Another point to which I would like to make reference is that of the St. Lawrence power project. The hon. members of this House followed—with great interest, I believe—the development of the St. Lawrence power project because it was unique of its kind in the world; and, completed as it was in 1959, there is still work going on in relation to the generating system. As the tailrace—that is, the downstream side of the generating station—is scooped out, the water will fall faster; and as it falls faster we will have the capacity of creating greater energy. This work we expect to be finished in 1961.

There is work going on in relation to the riding of the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley), in terms of the waterfront at Ingle-side; and it may be that the hon. member will want to ask some questions in relation to that.

I think he realizes that the work is very near completion and we are hoping, if it cannot be completed in this winter period, that the sodding, and so on, will be completed by the spring. I am very hopeful it will meet the hon. member's wishes on behalf of his constituents, and that it will seem to be a job which has been done well.

I would like to make reference to the extra high voltage transmission line which is necessary to carry the power from some of these sites in the far northern portions of Ontario down to the areas of Sudbury, and other areas where the demand for power is great.

During 1960, Mr. Chairman, it was decided to proceed with the development of generation on the Moose river system, and plans began to crystallize for the first stage in the development and incorporation of this generation into the transmission system.

This was a very imaginative programme, and one that was very challenging to the engineers, because where traditionally in Ontario, we had carried power at some 230 volts, it was necessary to avoid too great a loss to carry this power at a very much higher rate.

The experience, which was obtained by visits to other jurisdictions in the world by those who had the responsibility engineering-wise and administratively was of very great significance. As a matter of fact, we are pioneering, in this province, for the North American continent in terms of extra high voltage transmission.

In any event, this first stage comprises the development of a total of some 528,000 kw of dependable capacity by 1966, on the Otter rapids area, on the Abitibi river and the other generating stations to which I have made reference—Little Long rapids, Harmon and Kipling on the Mattagami river.

Mr. Chairman, the output of these plants will be gathered over a 230,000-volt transmission line to a new terminal station at Pinard, to be built near the Abitibi canyon station. Because of the large potential capacity for economic development on the Moose river system, a 460,000-volt extra high voltage transmission line will be constructed to deliver power, from the areas where it has been gathered, towards southern Ontario, commencing at Sudbury.

This may sound like something quite ordinary, but it is quite extraordinary from an engineering point of view. This is pioneering at the highest and most admirable level in this country.

For the initial stage, a single-current, 460,000-volt line will be constructed to Sudbury. The transmission line south from Sudbury will be of special design which will permit it to be used as a double-circuit, 230,000-volt line initially, and to be changed to a single-current, 460,000-volt line.

The line from these 3 or 4 stations will be scheduled for service in the fall of 1963, and will be initially operated at 230,000 volts—which is traditional for Ontario Hydro in its high voltage—and, ultimately by 1965, at quite the unusual voltage for this continent, 460,000 volts.

Mr. Chairman, leaving the high voltage and extra high voltage transmission in northern Ontario, I would like to make reference to certain other matters including rural transmission, farms that have been added to our system, numbers of customers and so on.

The increase in transmission lines in 1960 is not as great as that in 1959. However, it is significant—some 115 to 120 miles of high tension line.

In terms of rural supply, which of course is of great consequence in this province, the rural construction in 1960 has been extensive. There have been 415 miles of line built, and 15,800 customers added, compared to the 697 miles and 20,000 customers for the same period in 1959.

The total programme for 1960 provides for the addition of 22,700 customers and 800 miles of line, which will exceed that of 1959. We are always a few weeks behind in indicating these figures, and I am only able to give the most recent figures I have.

I think the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon)—and others who have been in this House for a number of years and served it with great distinction—as he looks back on the history of Ontario Hydro—and he as well as every hon. member in this House has made his major contribution to the benefit of this system—will look with great satisfaction upon something that happened this year.

I think it is rather significant that this year, for the first time, farm customers consumed, on the average per customer more than was consumed in the municipalities. This is a rather significant feature because it indicates the rising use of electricity on the farm. In fact the amount that the farm customer has consumed is in the neighbourhood of 5,700 kwh; and the “city slickers,” so-called, have consumed 5,400 kwh. For the first time in the history of this province the farm consumer on the average has consumed more power than the city dweller.

Rural construction in 1960 was important, and as I have indicated to you, Mr. Chairman, a great number of customers have been added to the line.

Mr. Chairman, at the end of 1960 there were nearly 500,000 rural customers and the miles of line which have been erected to serve these customers is very close to 48,000 miles—the greatest number of rural customers supplied in any comparable jurisdiction over such a large number of miles of line.

In addition, Ontario Hydro, while expanding this service to the outlying districts of this province where the load is approaching 99 per cent, has been successful, I believe, in keeping power rates low in relation to the rising cost of its operation. Indeed it is not as low as many would want, but indeed as low as any other jurisdiction is able to boast and in fact lower than any comparative figures that I can find. Since 1940, in fact, the consumer price index has risen by 93 per cent in this province, whereas the unit cost of electricity to our farm customers in the same period has decreased by 20 per cent, and that is an extremely significant figure.

The consumption of power by the farmer has doubled in the last 10 years. This is a situation not unrelated to the fact that the average cost per kwh to our farm customers, at 2.01 cents per kwh, is among the lowest in the world and less than the average cost per kwh to many residential customers in the great majority of the important cities in the United States.

In terms of capital construction, Mr. Chairman, in 1960 the commission will spend in the neighbourhood of $142 million. These are some isolated matters which, although important to the administration of the Ontario Hydro, I felt would be equally important to the House and perhaps might obviate some questions which otherwise might most properly have been asked.

With the rise in interest rates, efforts have been made to reduce borrowings and, in 1960, $100 million was borrowed by Ontario Hydro as opposed to $125 million last year, although the capital programme is almost the same size.

In terms of rates, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, if I may, that rising costs and the aim of distributing these equitably among our customers resulted in adjusting rates in 1960 to some customers—firstly to municipal customers as a result of higher costs of a continuing nature as opposed to a higher cost trend which could be anticipated to stop, such as bad weather conditions, stream flow conditions, or some other temporary economic conditions. In terms of continuing upward costs, an interim charge for power to many municipalities in southern Ontario became effective in 1960, increasing their rates.

In terms of rural rates, the nature of electrical service to summer cottages has meant that the cost of installed facilities must be paid from revenues obtained during a very few months.

Now this seems to many cottage owners to be a difficult situation. They leave the city where their rates are low and they go to the cottage where their rates seem considerably higher. What they overlook is that the lines leading to their homes and the service to their homes in the cities is a continuous project and the costs are written off over a 12-month period.

In terms of summer cottages these have to be written off over a 4-, 6-, or 8-week period because the costs of the line are just the same. For this reason, rates for summer cottages obviously cannot be similar to the same favourable rates which obtain on farms where the power is consumed over the whole year.

In relation to direct industrial customers—of which Ontario Hydro has a number—effective November 1, the rates to a number of mines, pulp and paper companies in northern Ontario were increased, as were rates to industries in southern Ontario, to municipalities, and summer cottage power users.

Now in terms of employees, Mr. Chairman, the number of employees of Ontario Hydro has dropped in recent years. The amount today as compared to last year, is something in the neighbourhood of 15,100, as opposed to 15,800 last year. This is accounted for in a number of ways, particularly in terms of the number of contracts which are let to outside contracting firms as opposed to carrying out the construction work internally.

I think I have an obligation which I am more than happy to honour by making reference to the tremendous efforts which were made by many hundreds of Hydro employees who worked around the clock last winter during the two most severe ice storms Ontario Hydro has ever sustained.

The first was on December 27, followed by another on January 22, almost a month later, when the system had hardly recovered from the first ice storm. Some 48,000 commission customers and some 60,000 municipal customers were affected—over 100,000 in all. And the total cost of repairing this damage was over $1.5 million.

We had hundreds of men who worked around the clock, who worked 8, 10, 12 hours over the time that they normally would have worked. They worked on weekends to do what was not expected of them but which had been asked, because they had a great belief that this system could not be defeated by the problems involved in ice storms. And it was really a great tribute to be associated with these people. I could not help very much with their labours, but at least I could be on the scene and on the job with them, because they were determined that Hydro during these circumstances should not fail.

Although we were flooded with requests to assist many areas, I think that most of the hon. members of this House will agree that the men and women acquitted themselves with great honour and great dignity.

I would want just in closing to make some short reference to 2 or 3 other isolated matters.

The first is the Carillon power development at Hawkesbury. In 1943 an agreement was entered into by the then government of this province and the then government in the province of Quebec for the division of water sites on the Ottawa river. Certain sites were allocated to the province of Ontario and certain sites were allocated to the province of Quebec. Ontario immediately carried out the development of its own site and the last site to be developed is the one under discussion, at Carillon near Hawkesbury which is a site allocated to the province of Quebec. This is a large generating station which will produce a large amount of electricity for the province of Quebec.

When these agreements were entered into in 1943, it became generally known that a large area of Hawkesbury and the Ottawa river would be flooded in order to provide the head pond, that is the back-up water behind the dam on the Ottawa river, for this Carillon site. As a result of that, in 1959 when Ontario Hydro was advised by Quebec Hydro that it wished us to acquire the land which would be flooded by this back-up of water, it was necessary to make one of two decisions: First, whether it would be more proper to see whether a dike could be built to save some of this land, or whether in accordance with the agreement it should be flooded.

It was ultimately decided that in view of the fact that these lands had been "condemned," or in any event that is the word that lawyers frequently use, certainly in Quebec—condemned or notice given of their expropriation—as much as 17 or more years ago, and the communities having developed upon this information and having been based upon it, that the proper procedure was to honour these agreements. After all, they were the subject of considerable controversy some 17 years ago and it seemed unwise to rehash this matter all over again.

Therefore, the agreements are to be carried out and as a result of it a portion of the city of Hawkesbury is to be flooded and Ontario Hydro is proceeding now to acquire this land and the land downstream necessary to provide the head pond.

I would just conclude with two observations. One, Mr. Chairman, is of very great importance, and I hope that every person in this province finds some satisfaction in it. While the annual consumption of electricity in Ontario for people in the cities has gone up about 150 per cent in the last 15 years and on the farm about 207 per cent, nevertheless the average cost per unit of electricity in the cities has gone down in the last 15 to 17 years about 7 per cent, and on the farms about 18 per cent.

This is a rather remarkable figure in the face of the fact that the cost of living in this country has gone up in the neighbourhood of 93 per cent.

Now, the last matter to which I wish to make reference is in terms of the high voltage lines on farms and farm easements. For many years Ontario Hydro has had a programme of easement payments for high voltage lines and other lines in the country. A year and a half or more ago the federation of agriculture, led by a number of hon. members of this House on both sides, approached us with reference to the increase in the payments which should be made for these easements.

The hon. member for Brant has spoken about this. He felt that the payments were not sufficient. I do not know whether he would feel they are sufficient now. In any event they are considerably better, and I had very much sympathy for the position which he very ably spoke of in this House.

When the federation of agriculture representatives came to the commission, the commission was sympathetic and understanding of the position which they represented. Ultimately a new agreement for easements was enacted which I know has met with the approval and support of the federation of agriculture and I believe of the hon. members of this House.

In that connection I want very much to thank a number of hon. members without mentioning them—they will know that I appreciate what they have done without my mentioning their names—who were very instrumental in assisting me in bringing about such an agreement. Not that it was a hard thing to bring about with the balance of the commission, but the advice and recommendations of hon. member of this House in all parties who are farmers was of very great importance.

I can only say to this House that these are some of the points which occurred to me which may be of significance. If there are others, I assure hon. members I shall do my best to answer anything they may have to ask.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate the opportunity firstly to commend the hon. Minister for his presentation tonight and the introduction of this particular subject matter which I feel is of great importance to this Legislature. The hon. Minister has been commended many times and I gladly join in again offering my congratulations to him for the manner in which he is conducting his department. His intelligence and his ability are known to all hon. members of this House, and I think are something that we all appreciate.

Secondly, I would make the observation that it is a pleasure for the Opposition particularly to have the opportunity, I think for the first time, of debating this very important subject in this Legislature. I think it was the Gordon commission last year which suggested that a closer check—if I might speak very simply—should be exercised by this legislative body. How that is to be accomplished is difficult to know. It is a complex matter, but I think this at least is one step in the right direction. For introducing this method of discussing Hydro and its economic contribution and its economic significance, I again commend the hon. Minister.

Mr. Chairman, there will be many hon. members who will wish to speak on this subject, I am sure, and without further introductory remarks I would like to get down to the substance of what I want to say this evening.

I would tell you that I would like to talk for a little while about the matter of foreign purchases by Hydro. I would like to talk about CANDU, about the Carillon project, and about the industrial cost of Hydro in this province.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister has ably outlined the fact that, as I understand it today, the generating capacity of Hydro is in the approximate amount of 6 million kw per year. I believe that the hon. Minister on other occasions has suggested that by 1980 we will be consuming about 21 million kw, of which approximately 7 million kw, or a third, will be developed by hydro-electric energy, one-third or 7 million kw by thermal power, and one-third by nuclear power.

I am not an engineer and I am not as schooled in this subject as the hon. Minister—but I think at least it gives me an opportunity to grasp the magnitude of this project. By 1980, which is 20 years from now, we will be consuming 3 times the electrical energy that we are consuming at the present time, and of course will have to generate it.

Apparently in the development of hydro-electric energy in Ontario we will no longer rely on hydro-electric methods, water power. We will rely on thermal or heat methods of developing energy, and nuclear fission.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the first point I would make is this. I believe the hon. Minister advises that the immediate stress will be on thermal development. He talked about the Lakeview project, he talked about the Richard L. Hearn project. These are fabulous projects, projects that will develop as much as, in his words, that which is being developed at Niagara at the present time or the St. Lawrence.

Now my understanding, Mr. Chairman, is that with respect to these projects the capital cost involves the generator and the construction of the generator—construction costs of extraordinary amounts. I think at Richard L. Hearn the generators are something like 150,000 kw and there are something like 6 generators. At Lakeview 4 generators will cost about $5 million each.

The first point I want to make is simply this, that to the best of my knowledge all of these generators have been purchased abroad, they have not been purchased in Ontario nor in Canada. To give some concept of the significance of the magnitude of this work, I would point out they did not only cost $5 million apiece, for each 300,000 kw—am I right?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: In thermal generation I think the hon. leader of the Opposition can take as a rough guide something like $200 per kw.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, all right. But let us translate that. My understanding, Mr. Chairman, is this: When we translate it on that line it does not sound like very much, but am I not right that the thermal project at Lakeview will cost in the neighbourhood of $384 million?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would think that was a fair figure. I marked it down here. I think Lakeview was closer to the figure of $250 million.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Quarter of a billion, per generator?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, $250 million for the whole station. The price of $200 kw, times 300,000 would be $60 million, would it not?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Chairman, the first question that I would ask of the hon. Minister is, whether or not any of these generators have been constructed or built in Ontario? Or Canada?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think the generators which are going into the Hearn plant and the Lakeview plant have been on the whole English purchases. The question of whether they can be purchased in Canada is the other matter to which the hon. leader of the Opposition will no doubt refer.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I will try to give to the House in very simple language the information that I have accumulated. I must introduce this by saying it is a technical subject and I am not as familiar with the technical terms as the hon. Minister is. To the best of my knowledge and information, these units have basically been acquired in England, from the English Electric Company, I think, and maybe one other company.

To give some idea of the work that goes into one unit, I am told that they would require about 2 million hours of manual labour each to actually make, and then about 2 million man hours of work to wire and put into operation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when you think that our winter works programme last year provided work for 9,000 men, over an average period of 40 weeks, we have a total of about 2.9 million work hours. One of these generators will produce as much work in Ontario as our entire winter works programme, and yet, to the best of my knowledge at the present time, none of these generators has been built in Ontario or Canada. Several orders are immediately up for bids and tender.

I would think that the House should have the advice of the hon. Minister to know whether or not the government is prepared to undertake publicly to reject all orders except Canadian orders.

Now, remember this, I know that the Canadians will bid a little bit higher than the English, but I would point out that it is my understanding that, with respect to some of the generators that have been constructed in Canada, the English domestic price was literally higher than the Canadian domestic price.

To reduce it to simplicity I think it is related to a kilowatt hour again. The English domestic price on the generators was $22 per kw. The Canadian quotation was $17 per kw. But the English firm, knowing that it could sell in Canada in a subsidized fashion, yes, actually sold to Hydro for less than the $17.

In other words, they were doing what we normally complain of. "Dumping"—in plain language.

In England, they would have had to charge $22. The Canadian price was $17 and they sold to Hydro for something less than $17.

Now I ask you, Mr. Chairman, is that the sort of economic development that we want at a time when we have unemployment, at a time when we are looking for development here in Ontario? And, I say, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister, the government, should take a stand on this.

It is my understanding that 2 or 3 additional generators are going to be bid on in the near future. My personal opinion is that this House should insist that the government give those orders to Canadian manufacturers.

Remember this: Until the Canadian electrical industry has an opportunity to really build a generator—and these are fabulous jobs—they are never going to gain the experience and they are never going to be in a position to improve on their know-how and their ability to actually build these generators.

I do not think there is any reason why they cannot do so. I think they have the technical knowledge and the skill, and when we think of the man hours—2 million man hours per generator going into a project of this sort—what would it mean to General Electric or Westinghouse in this very province to add 2 million man hours of work to their labour force during the next year or two years?

It seems to me that price is not all determinate. This is people's money we are using. These companies are expected to pay taxes, these companies are expected to contribute to our industrial development. And yet, we hand the project to an English firm or a foreign firm that pays no taxes here, makes no real contribution and hires labour other than Canadian labour.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the things that I think we should debate very seriously in this House. I am very much concerned about it. It seems to me that it is fundamental to the concern of this House to know the position and the attitude of the government in regard to the generators that are going to be constructed in the near future for Lakeview and the Richard L. Hearn locations.

I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, exactly how you wish to proceed. I told you there are a number of subjects I wish to touch on. This is one of them.

It may well be that at this stage the hon. Minister might make a statement and advise me whether or not my computation of figures is accurate. I would like to know at this stage whether or not I am right when I say there are 2 or 3 generators to be called for tender in the near future.

If that information is correct, then I would like to know of the hon. Minister whether it is the government's intention to confine those tenders to Canadian companies exclusively or not.

Mr. Chairman, I wish your instructions in this respect. It may add to the discussion to permit the hon. Minister to make these answers as we go along rather than wait until the end. That, however, is in your determination and the discretion and wishes of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think perhaps it might be best if the hon. leader of the Opposition finished his observations because there may be other hon. members following. I know the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has indicated that he wanted to refer to this precise point—and it might be best if all of the hon. members finished their comments and I shall do my best to answer them as I can.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, this is an informal proceeding and I am quite prepared to proceed in that fashion. But I simply reiterate this first point, that my understanding is that two additional generators are up for tender at the present time; very large generators. These generators are in the neighbourhood of 300,000 kw, generators that will require about two million work hours each; generators that would require as much additional labour and man-hour contribution to construction as our entire winter works programme.

It is my recommendation, therefore, that this government should confine the opportunity to bid on these generators to Canadian firms if Canadian firms can do the jobs at prices that are at all reasonable. I do not think that the prices that the English firms have been bidding on heretofore have been reasonable, in view of the fact that they have been bidding for less than they would have to charge on the domestic English market. And the only reason, I presume, that they are bidding for less here than in England is the fact that in England they are required to produce a certain volume of work and industrial development, as, I think, the case should be here.

Mr. Chairman, the second point that I wish to touch on is the Carillon project to which the hon. Minister made reference a few moments ago. My understanding is that it involves the area of Hawkesbury, as he said. In 1943, or thereabouts, an arrangement was made between the governments of Quebec and Ontario—is that right?—whereby Ontario made available to Quebec Hydro certain lands, and Quebec made available to Ontario certain Quebec lands.

In pursuance of that agreement Ontario must undertake to make available to Quebec certain lands on the Ontario side which will be flooded when the dam east of Hawkesbury is built.

As the hon. Minister has said, that flooding means that a certain number of people—I think about 1,700—will have their homes flooded and will be required to move. The question in my mind is: Is it wise to build a dike? The hon. Minister apparently feels that is not wise and that it would be better to let these lands be flooded and compensate the individuals.

I think another question comes to the fore and that is simply this: If we are going to flood the lands, how should these people be compensated? My understanding is that if we compensate them at the present value of their homes we will give them nothing like the amount of money that is required to build comparable homes in the neighbourhood.

That is a factor to be considered, and I would like to know whether the hon. Minister will extend to the residents of Hawkesbury the same privileges as were extended in the seaway valley when homes were physically moved to other sites at the discretion and wish of the individual resident and homeowner.

It may well be that there are many people who will feel that the compensation in dollars that will be offered is insufficient to duplicate the accommodation that they have. I think this is the pertinent question that should be asked of the hon. Minister at this time in conjunction with the Carillon project.

Now relating to the CANDU project at Point Douglas, Mr. Chairman, I would point out—as I tried to point out last year—that if our generating capacity in electricity over the next 15 or 20 years is going to be primarily thermal in nature—that is, heat and coal—then we will be required to import about $300 million worth of coal each year. Is that reasonable? Is it not better that we go ahead with the nuclear programme as hurriedly as we can?

My understanding is that Hydro is not making any financial contribution to the CANDU project up on Lake Huron, but it is the atomic energy commission which is actually putting up the money. Subsequently Hydro will buy the property back, but at the present time I think they are making no other contribution than to buy the land and provide the personnel.

If we can get ahead with this heavy water generator or thermal nuclear process, and demonstrate its economic efficiency, we can do something for Ontario that will be really worthwhile. We can even provide portable generators if they can produce electricity in competition with the other forms of electrical energy. We can provide cheap industrial power throughout the province, and assure, Mr. Chairman, that we use a Canadian product, that we use uranium which we all know is found in abundance in several localities in Ontario and currently finds no market.

It seems to me that if Hydro really wants to do something extraordinary for this province and for the economy of the province, and if it wants to be a pioneer in a new form of electrical energy—the development of electrical energy for all the world—it should use money now to speed up this project.

I do not know when the determination will be made as to whether or not the CANDU project at Point Douglas is demonstrated to be economically feasible or not, but presumably it will be in a number of years. Why can we not speed that time up? Why can we not get on with this project, invest the money that we are bound to invest sooner or later in any event, and make this determination very quickly?

I suggest this because that determination, Mr. Chairman, means that we will not be required to buy American coal as we are required to buy today. It means that the millions and millions and millions of dollars that we are putting into thermal plants could instead be invested in nuclear plants; in plants that would employ Canadians; in plants that would use Canadian uranium oxide; in plants that would give Canadians an opportunity to develop for themselves the type of electrical energy that is most natural to Ontario.

Mr. Chairman, this is the third question I would ask of the hon. Minister. I know that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission is a big institution. Certainly it is a matter we should scrutinize very carefully, and I think that the hon. Minister is to be commended for bringing the policies to the fore in this Legislature. But I think that we, particularly in the Opposition, must look at them and look at them very carefully.

The third criticism I have, then, is that the commission has not pursued the opportunity to use nuclear energy for the development of electrical energy as much as one would hope in Ontario.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the fourth question I have relates to a fundamental, and that is industrial cost of power in Ontario. My simple question is this: What is the policy of Ontario Hydro with respect to the cost of industrial power? How is industrial power costed? Does the industrial consumer bear the cost or a portion of the cost for the transmission lines that feed power to the domestic and rural user as well, or does the industrial user have his own transmission line?

I am not sure about these things. They may be very elementary questions. But I think they are the sort of thing that should be brought out and debated. Time and again in the course of the last 4 or 5 months I have talked with industrialists throughout this province who complained bitterly that we are losing the battle for power in power costs in Ontario.

I have talked to industrialists in the Niagara district who tell me that they located large plants in that area with the understanding—and on the understanding—that they would get cheap power because of their proximity to Niagara. And they are now, at the expiration of the contracts, told that their power costs are going to go up to such a degree that, frankly, they tell me—and I must believe them—that it would be better for them to move to Quebec where power costs are cheaper.

I am likewise advised that some of the smaller plants are already contemplating that move.

In northern Ontario, Mr. Chairman, I can make reference to the chamber of commerce meeting at Dryden. There, as the vice-president of Steep Rock pointed out, the power increase to the industrial user in northwestern Ontario—and particularly Steep Rock—means about $7,300 a month, and for all iron companies there over the period of a year, about $200,000.

For the whole of northwestern Ontario the additional industrial cost will be about $1 million.

Now, as he pointed out, at a time when we are trying to encourage industry into that area, and give it a chance to breathe and develop, we are adding this additional cost.

Mr. Chairman, my simple question is: Why? And what portion of the industrial costs do the residents, do the other consumers in Ontario, bear? Or, do the industrial consumers bear a portion of the cost that is allocated to the rural and the domestic user?

It seems to me that in regard to industrial costs we have not done what has been done in other provinces. There, I understand, they have used the inducement of low industrial hydro-electric power energy as an inducement to industries that come and grow up and develop. Across from Cornwall, where the hon. Minister pointed with pride to the seaway development, they have, in Massena in New York state, an area of industrial expansion unparalleled in most parts of Ontario. Why? Because they sold power in cheap form at that particular location.

Why can we not do the same here in Ontario? And what is the policy in this respect? Is it one of equalizing all industrial cost throughout all of Ontario? Is the cost for each industry exactly the same? Are special arrangements made? Is it wise to make special arrangements? These are the questions we would like to ask.

Now, I must admit that, in conjunction with this particular part of my presentation, I am not familiar with the basic information that we should have and I think this is the time and the place to get it, so that we can make intelligent determinations of whether or not Hydro is following a sound policy for economical industrial development in this province.

I, for one, must say that I have been depressed by the observations of businessmen, particularly in the province, who have come and said, quite frankly, that they feel our power costs are higher than they are in our neighbouring province. I think that the government of Quebec has made visits to Ontario and made this very argument to industrialists, suggesting that they move to Quebec where their costs will be lower.

Now, this is a fact to be considered, Mr. Chairman. I think it was one of the intents of Hydro, at the very outset, to provide the low power costs that would encourage industry. I am not trying to encourage industry for the sake of making a few people wealthy or anything of the sort. But, I think, we all realize, Mr. Chairman, that the economic and social success and development of this province depends in a large measure upon the development and creation of jobs in Ontario.

One of the ways to create jobs is to keep our cost of production down and one of the fundamental ways to keep the cost of production down is to keep the cost of power as low as possible.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the fifth question that I would ask is a question related again to northern Ontario in the matter of the brief that was presented, I understand, by the mining fraternity to the hon. Minister. This brief suggested that, at this particular time, when a good many mines are marginal in operation, this additional cost of industrial power to the mining fraternity and to the mining industry may mean that some mines will be required to close. Now certainly, this is not a desirable thing. So my question simply is: What is the policy of the government in this respect? Is it the intention of the government to make special concessions where it can be demonstrated that the additional cost of power will mean more unemployment?

Mr. Chairman, these are the major points that I wish to make. I do not want to take an unnecessary amount of time. On all of these points, I think, we could elaborate in great detail, and I would like to see some real debate on the subjects that I have tried to bring forward. I consider them to be very important points for the economic development of this province.

I think that we, in this Legislature, bear the responsibility of determining the policy of Hydro. I think we should make the determination rather than the commission as such.

As for myself, I certainly would hope that this House will agree with me before the debate is over that one of the primary things we should do, at this particular time, is to insist that Hydro use Canadian companies and institutions for the construction of all future generating plants.

The fact, as I said at the outset, that two million labour man hours of work are required for the construction of each generator, means that we could do as much by changing Hydro's policy as our whole winter works programme.

Now, these are the questions I had in mind at this particular juncture, Mr. Chairman. Rather than go into more detail I would ask your indulgence to have the opportunity to speak a second time in conjunction with this particular estimate.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, as hon. members of the House listened to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources sketch the picture of the achievements of Hydro, I am certain that they must have all felt a very great sense of pride. This is our institution in a very real sense. It belongs to the people of Ontario and we, as the elected representatives of the people of Ontario, are responsible for laying down its general policies—we are the administrators for carrying them out.

When the hon. Minister, for example, can tell us that we have achieved a position which is unique in the world in that those in rural areas are consuming more electric power than in the cities; when he can tell us that the cost of Hydro in the last 20 years has dropped 7 per cent in the cities and dropped 18 per cent in the rural areas, at a time when all other costs have been skyrocketing; here, surely, is a remarkable story.

It reminded me of a telecast that the hon. Minister gave in the last election campaign, in which he summed up all that he has now spelled out in these details, including the fact that in the province of Ontario as compared with the average in the United States, the average consumer in Canada uses twice as much electricity and is paying half as much for it.

Now I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there is a very close connection between those. The consumer in Ontario is using twice as much electricity as the American consumer is using on an average; he is doing it because he is getting it at half price.

Now what I cannot understand when I listen to the Tory of 1960 get up and talk about this magnificent achievement, is why we should have to listen to all the specious argument on the other side of the House when we have an opportunity to do for this and future generations the same kind of thing with a new source of power—natural gas. Because we have built the industrial complex of the province of Ontario on the cornerstone of power and costs, the Tories get up and brag about it, and we share their pride. But why have they not got the courage of their convictions—the courage to buck the private interests as Sir Adam Beck bucked the private interests a generation ago—to assure the future of this province in that new source of power, namely, natural gas?

I am not going to belabour the question. I have asked it and got no reply from the other side because the government is the victim of its doctrinal free enterprise beliefs.

I know the government has given its argument as to why there are competing sources of power. Sir Adam Beck listened to the same sort of argument as to why all private power could not be brought under the Ontario hydro-electric system. But Sir Adam Beck at least had the courage of his convictions and when the Tories in the cabinet bucked him, he went out into the hustings and he let them know that if they did not heed the people in the hustings they would get trimmed in the next election. He knew where the source of power was and he licked even the friends in his own party.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): My hon. friend—

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Prime Minister wants to speak to these estimates, let him speak—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why make incorrect—

Mr. MacDonald: I am not making incorrect statements.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why, of course, the hon. member is. He knows that!

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Prime Minister wants to speak to these estimates, let him get up and speak on the point.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is so wrong—

Mr. MacDonald: Not at all.

Hon. Mr. Frost: If my hon. friend would give me one minute, I would tell him how.

Mr. MacDonald: I have listened to the hon. Prime Minister tell the story before.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Can I, Mr. Chairman, arise on a point of order?

Mr. MacDonald: There is a doctrine of free enterprise. They place the private interests of the people in the natural gas industry against the future welfare of this province. However, I said I am not going to belabour the issue.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could I, Mr. Chairman, rise on a point of order? There is a rule in this House that an hon. member will not reflect on a vote which has been taken. A vote was taken on the question of public ownership of natural gas and that, according to the rules of the House, should end the matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, Little Lord Fauntleroy had better trot out another argument. Hon. members can speak any number of times during subsequent sessions.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is so utterly wrong.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not utterly wrong. The rules of the House are that an hon. member cannot speak on something that has been voted on in that session, but the Tories over there think, Mr. Chairman, that they are going to—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the point of order?

Hon. Mr. Frost: My point of order is this: I am really not so much concerned with the technical point raised as I am with the violation of common sense that my good friend—

An hon. member: That is a good point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: These are the people who presumably know the rules of the House and the traditions of Parliament and get up and violate them, from the hon. Prime Minister down, and then preach to other people about trying to live up to the traditions! That was no more a rule or a point of order than—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into an argument with the other hon. members on the Tory benches. I just want to make a passing comment on the general argument that was advanced by the hon. leader of the Opposition in the concluding part of his remarks.

He wants, and I made a note of it, to keep costs as low as possible. He wants to get down to the fundamentals. Mr. Chairman, if you want to get down to the fundamentals, the fundamental for power at cost is public ownership and these hon. members over here joined with the Tory hon. members on the other side to frustrate the establishment of public ownership for natural gas.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, how is the hon. member going to bring hydro costs down? The hon. member is no more interested in creating jobs in this province than the man in the moon.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, let the hon. leader of the Opposition just take off his halo, polish it up and put it on the desk there. He thinks he is the only person who has any sincerity in an approach to this issue. If he wants to get to the fundamentals, then the fundamental in terms of power costs is public ownership. And surely in the province of Ontario this is self-evident.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Will the hon. member tell us how he is going to handle this particular publicly owned institution to help create jobs? Then we will—

Mr. MacDonald: I will just mention a few points and then I will look forward to the hon. Minister's reply, because I am not going to elaborate any further on it.

I know this. For years some of the industry in northwestern Ontario, in the region of Port Arthur for example, was subsidized by the people in the city of Port Arthur. One of the gentlemen—a former member of this House—documented, time and time again, the fact that when contracts were given to some of the industries in this area they were given at a price far below the cost so that the work was subsidized by the domestic consumer. I will be interested to hear what the hon. Minister has to say as to whether the domestic consumer is subsidizing the industry or the industry is subsidizing the consumer. I say this because I do not think it is a fair principle that the domestic consumer should be subsidizing industry. Let industry stand on its own feet.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Does the hon. member care about jobs?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure I care about jobs!

Mr. Wintermeyer: The hon. member is certainly not demonstrating it tonight.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. leader of the Opposition's suggestion that his particular approach is the sincere approach that is going to solve the problems, and that anybody who disagrees is not sincere about it is the kind of self-righteousness that gets just a little bit sickening.

Now, having dealt with—

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): The hon. member is great on economic disasters, and that is all he wants.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, against that general economic background I want to deal with a couple of issues which are unrelated to the one I have just discussed.

One of them, Mr. Chairman, happens to be a decision of Hydro this past summer with regard to the civil rights of its own employees: Namely, a directive dated August 10 in which the 15,000 employees of Hydro were suddenly faced with a directive from their own management, their own bosses, interpreted as—and quite rightly, though this is now disputed by the same people who sent out the directive—as saying that they could not participate in politics.

Let me quote a couple of paragraphs from this directive of August 10. They draw attention to the fact that a previous statement on this subject was issued, back in 1934 no less, when a memorandum was sent to all the employees by the secretary of the commission at that time.

The 1934 memorandum reads in part as follows:

Recently not a few complaints have been made that officials and employees of the commission have taken quite prominent part in the discussion of political matters, especially municipal and provincial, which, in some cases, directly affects the department of the service in which they themselves are employed. It should hardly be necessary to point out to any employee of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission that he ought not to hold a provincial or municipal office in which he might be required to consider and perhaps even condemn the actions of the commission in whose service he is.

In other words, one of the reasons advanced against him taking part in political office and becoming a municipal official is that he might be required to "consider" the actions of the commission, and this he should not do.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: His own commission—the commission to which he is elected?

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no! He might be elected to the municipal council and he might be—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: He might be elected to the local municipal commission too.

Mr. MacDonald: So what?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, that is a very important job.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute now, just a minute now! The hon. Minister is taking the one case where the possible conflict might be greater.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am thinking of the case we had in mind when we wrote the letter.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to read one more paragraph from this.

And this is not the 1934 memorandum reproduced, this is a bright, shining new 1960 comment:

The commission is still of the opinion that it is not in the public interest for an employee to place himself in a position where his responsibilities as an employee might conflict with his responsibilities as a holder of political office. An employee of the commission is in the unique position in the community in that he must endeavour to serve all members of the public to the best of his ability without favour or bias. The commission believes that the public will not accept a person who runs for elective political office as being without bias.

That is an intriguing sentence.

For this reason it is felt the employees of the commission should not seek active political office in either Dominion or provincial governments, nor should the employees become candidates for municipal council. Similarly, it is desirable that employees refrain from actively participating in such political campaigns.

I draw to the attention of the hon. Minister that there is no suggestion in this of barring them from participation on local hydro public commissions, none at all. So this is a new wrinkle to the only argument they have, namely, that there might be a conflict of interest. He is going to have them all sitting on local hydro. He is trying to make his weak case as strong as possible.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. member is helping me tremendously and I am very grateful to him.

Mr. MacDonald: What I want to draw to the attention of the House is that all this took place back on August 10 and quite a furor arose among the 15,000 employees. I know there were some who accepted what I would choose to describe as the old party line that one should not participate in politics. But the general reaction among Hydro employees was that this was an affront. And the thing that made it so much of an affront was the fact that this edict came from a commission headed by a man who is meddling in politics all the time, if this is the way you want to describe it.

Before my attitude becomes confused with that of the hon. leader of the Opposition, I am not criticizing James S. Duncan. I think a few more people should take an interest in public affairs.

The question of whether he is doing it on Hydro time to an undue extent is another matter. But as to the head of a publicly owned institution expressing his views on matters that are of great concern to the people of Canada and the world, I have no objection at all. This is a democracy—something I wonder whether those hon. members on the other side of the House have a real appreciation of, on occasion.

What I do object to is that a commission headed by Mr. Duncan should put out an edict that has such a twisted form of logic. While its head is meddling in politics all the time, these little lowly people must not dirty themselves in this nasty game of politics. They must not expose themselves to the possibility of a conflict of interest and all the rest of it. I suggest to the hon. members that this is not a defensible kind of argument.

However, I think there was enough of a storm behind the scenes that they decided to retreat into some delightful verbiage. For example, the union of the Hydro employees sought to clarify the situation because they were under pressure from their membership. They got a letter on September 29 signed by W. H. Barnes, director of industrial relations, and sent to Mr. Cummings, the president of the union.

The second paragraph reads as follows:

Careful perusal of the letter should make it apparent that it contains no prohibition and it was not intended to be interpreted as a directive to this effect but rather an answer to many inquiries to bring the views of the commission to the attention of the employees.

Now there, surely, is another case of specious argument. There is no prohibition! It is just a directive! Hydro says to the employees, "We are not telling you you should not, but do not meddle in politics."

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: If they want to do otherwise, as 2 or 3 have done, they have a perfect right to do so and they have done it.

Mr. MacDonald: If they have a perfect right to do so, why are they told they should not do it?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Because we expressed a view that we felt it would—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister expressed a view which was literally none of his business. It is the civil right of a civil servant, or somebody in this position, to seek elective office—the highest position that he might seek in a democracy. So what right has the hon. Minister to say to him that he cannot exercise this right?

However, on November 10 another letter came. The union was trying to seek further clarification. Mr. Barnes, writing to Mr. Cummings, again, said in the opening paragraph:

It is my belief that, upon careful reading of the general manager's letter of August 10, it will be understood by all to be a general statement of the commission's policy regarding employee participation in politics rather than a directive with prohibition behind it.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Who said that?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. W. H. Barnes.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Is the hon. member objecting to that?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I am not objecting to it. All I am saying is that it was laid down very clearly, so that all people who operate with the normal kind of logic—the newspapers, the 15,000 employees and a lot of other people—came to the conclusion they had been told: "You cannot go into politics." Then the furor arose. They took another look at it. And conceivably when they took a second look at it they took a look at the basic principle and they beat as much of a retreat as the circumstances could possibly and gracefully permit them.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What does the hon. member think the circumstances are today as they are generally understood that the people can or cannot go into politics?

Mr. MacDonald: On the basis of the commission's letter, I am not certain.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: There are several in and they are employees. So would the hon. member not conclude that it was a request not to, but if they wanted to they had the right to do so? And they have done so. One, I think, is quite a supporter of the hon. member, as I understand it.

Mr. MacDonald: If they have the right to do so, why did the hon. Minister get up and try to tell them not to exercise that right?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Who tried to tell them not to? We wanted them to avoid the possibility of a conflict of interests. A person can be elected to sit on a commission and he has certain instructions from the Ontario commission to carry out. On the other hand, he may have quite a different point of view from his own municipal interest.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I come back to the point that the hon. Minister, in seeking to bolster this incredibly weak case, is now pinning it all on, that it might involve sitting on the local hydro commission where, I would agree, there might be a possibility of a conflict of interests. But this is in terms of federal elections, provincial elections and municipal elections. The only one they exempted was school boards, as presumably no conflict would arise there.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is quite right. But there are contracts negotiated every day between municipalities as to lines, purchases of materials, and so forth, and these things can arise.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister does not like the appearance of conflict of interests. I just want to clarify the conflicts of interests and to protect the civil rights of the people. The hon. Minister wants to confuse conflict of interest and destroy and take away the civil rights of these 15,000 people.

Here is the dangerous thing, Mr. Chairman, and I will just conclude with this and leave it. Where is all this going to end? Civil servants cannot participate in politics! All the employees of a growing range of government agencies cannot participate in politics! Why did Hydro do this?

When Mr. Duncan was put on the spot, last summer, he said: "We are only doing what many corporations are doing. We are following the policy of many corporations." So, all the employees of corporations, presumably, in principle, should not participate in politics. All I am saying is that we will end up having very few people participating in politics. This, I suspect, is precisely what the hon. Minister wants.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Surely the hon. member is not serious.

Mr. MacDonald: It is just possible they would all be Tories, and that is what he would like too. In other words, he wants it narrowed down to a small enough group that he can control and manipulate things even more effectively than he has been able to until now.

My plea, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Ministers of this Legislature, is just to have faith in the people. Have faith in the 15,000 employees of Hydro.

Certainly there may be one of them, some time or other who will not recognize it, and not live up to the principle, and get into a conflict of interest. But are they going to deny the whole 15,000 because one of these people some time may have a conflict of interest and not lay his cards on the table? Just have faith in the people, and that is obviously what the hon. Prime Minister has not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I ask the hon. member if he would mind adjourning the debate at this time? I think we will go ahead with this item tomorrow morning.

If he would do that, I have another matter that I want to deal with.

Mr. MacDonald: I am very glad to accept directions as long as they are not prohibitions.

Mr. MacDonald moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the committee rise and report progress, and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to call item No. 3, the Throne debate. I do that for this reason: It is now 10.14 p.m. One of the hon. members of the House who expected to speak today, due to some misunderstanding, gave his address to one of the papers and I think it would be highly desirable if we regularize procedure. I would call that item, please.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. Belisle (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on the speech from the Throne, I do so with a deep feeling of humility brought about by the responsibility I owe to the good people of my riding of Nickel Belt, and also by the fact that my role with this government under our great leader, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), will have some effect on the lives of some 150,000 people who are living in the greater Nickel Belt.

I would like to say at the outset of these remarks that I do not belong to that class of people known as pessimists. This fall session of the Ontario Legislature, which brings together the hon. members, is one of the reasons for my optimism. It is the proof that we are interested in the welfare of our province. And that, I might add, goes for hon. members of all political parties—even though we may differ in our political views, or the methods we use.

Mr. Speaker, please accept my sincere thanks for the good performance of your daily duties, and may I add my congratulations to the hon. Deputy Speaker (Mr. W. E. Johnston), and to the hon. mover (Mr. Gomme) and hon. seconder (Mr. Evans) of the motion for an address in reply to the Throne speech.

It is a great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, at this time, to congratulate the number of my hon. colleagues who have been honoured by elevation to the cabinet, and those appointed to commissions. It is also a pleasure to extend my good wishes to the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. A. Johnston) and the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) on their appointment to the Ontario northland transportation commission.

The experience of these hon. members in the House, and their profound knowledge of the affairs of northern Ontario, will aid them in their duties and, undoubtedly, will be of assistance in the guidance and expansion of our publicly owned enterprise.

Mr. Speaker, I extend my best wishes to the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop) who guided so well The Department of Education.

The hon. Prime Minister must be complimented for the appointment of the hon. member for Eglinton to the chairmanship of the committee of university. Here he will again be working in a field where his sage counsel and experience will be of the utmost value.

While I am on the subject of education, I would like to say that the Laurentian university, created at the last session, is doing very well. It has already embraced into a federation the university of Sudbury and Huntington university, and I am very pleased to ask all the hon. members of this House that the present bill for the creation of the Thorneloe university, the Anglican section, should receive the unanimous approval of the hon. members.

Its partnership in the Laurentian university will complete a happy and inspiring historical story of church zeal and co-operation, supported by business and community leaders. I would like to thank and commend the persons who have taken upon their shoulders the responsibilities of this federation.

As this was one of the hon. member for Eglinton's last great performances as Minister of Education, in guiding and directing its creation, we hope he will continue in his new position to be very generous with his counsel and advice and remind our great hon. Prime Minister that Laurentian university is greatly in need of assistance.

The birth of a new university in this new era of 1960 is much more costly than previous ones, and special financial assistance should be given to Laurentian even if it means sacrifices for the other 11 universities.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know yet whether the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) has had the time to grasp the problems that must be in existence in that very massive department of his, but I hope that, as a long-term objective, he is going to work towards more assistance for primary and secondary separate schools.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, the most vital problem facing this industrial expanding province is accelerated opportunity for education of our children—education equally and indiscriminately available to the child of every citizen of Ontario.

I do not seek to compromise any one person, I seek only the answer to a deep and fundamental problem, seriously affecting society as it is known today, and society as we shall find in 10 or 15 years.

Now, in recent years, I will acknowledge that this government has paid to separate schools many more dollars from the treasury without disturbing the picture at the municipal level. It is one thing to advocate better qualifications for teachers at the elementary level, but it is a fact that separate schools cannot pay the present levels for either qualified or unqualified teachers.

Relief of the present situation is urgent, compounded by increasing daily enrolments. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that some form of additional assistance is greatly needed, and I have faith that the present hon. Minister, with the help and assistance of his hon.

cabinet colleagues, will continue to make Ontario progressive in all spheres including education.

Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to listen to the TV address of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), explaining the scope and extent of the government programme, and the remarkable progress that his department has made towards the care of the mentally retarded. I was glad to hear that men from his department were sent to Nickel Belt to look at the possible sites available for the proposed construction of the hospital school.

We have all the required facilities of water, sewage and medical services needed, with the addition of technical training that the new Laurentian university can provide.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I did not agree with my hon. colleague from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) the other night when he wanted to give me a lesson in courtesy regarding the visit of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) to my riding. Apparently he was offended because he did not receive an invitation to attend the annual Progressive-Conservative dinner at which the hon. Attorney-General was the guest speaker.

Knowing that he comes from a good Progressive-Conservative family, and that he still has Conservative inclinations, I will see that he is invited to our next Progressive-Conservative rally.

I would like to say that he brought some 11 hon. members of Parliament to Sudbury over the weekend, and I was not offended because I was not invited.

According to the newspapers, there were less than 200 from all over the north in attendance, and this was well advertised all over the country. We had over 400 attend our annual meeting which was addressed by the hon. Attorney-General.

Mr. Speaker, in referring to The Department of Highways, first of all, I want to say that the hon. Minister (Mr. Cass) is doing a wonderful job. Only through the expansion of our highway system will the growth and prosperity of Nickel Belt continue.

Being the voice of my good people of Nickel Belt in this assembly, I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that they were quite surprised to learn that there was no mention of the Sudbury-Timmins highway in the Throne speech.

The local newspaper, the Sudbury Daily Star—which, by the way, has been the promoter of such a needed route and the reporter of promises from different governments during the last 30 years—had these editorial comments to make:

NORTH LOOKS FOR RECOGNITION IN SEEKING DEVELOPMENT AID

There is disappointment for Sudbury and district in the speech from the Throne read at the opening of the fall session of the Ontario Legislature. Most disappointing is lack of mention in the proposed highways programme for a start on a Sudbury-Chapleau or Sudbury-Timmins highway, two important highway links that are necessary to shorten the highway distance between south and north and to open up new areas for mineral and forestry development, as well as tourism.

These are more than regional interests. They are essential to northern development—and it is the north that supports the Ontario economy. In return for the millions of dollars taken out of the north we ask nothing more than that which is necessary to assist in northern development and expansion.

The speech from the Throne impressed me as a private member. The programme that was outlined in the speech means a great deal to the people of this province.

As a northern Ontario member—or perhaps, more rightly, a mid-north member—I am especially interested in what the programme contains for the mid-north.

There is no doubt we will benefit from the work planned in other parts of the province, but I must also admit that there is some concern in the mid-north in regard to proposed plans for highway development. This concern is felt most strongly around the north's largest city, Sudbury, and the riding I represent in the Legislature—the Nickel Belt.

The mid-north waited some 35 years for the completion of a highway from Parry Sound to Sudbury. This highway, also known as highway No. 69, is now one of the most-travelled of the highways leading into the north.

There is no doubt about its future. With the opening of the Lake Superior route of the trans-Canada highway last fall at Wawa, there will be much more traffic coming into the mid-north over highway No. 69.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me back again to the Throne speech. There is concern in the mid-north because the speech contained no mention of plans for either the Sudbury-Timmins highway or the Sudbury-Chapleau highway.

I must confess I share this concern. As a resident of the district I know how the people feel about the development of the area. The greatest hope for further development is in making the Sudbury area the great distribution and transportation centre in the north.

The Sudbury Star, which is northern Ontario's largest daily newspaper, has often commented on this in editorials. The geographical location of Sudbury means that almost everything from the south or east must go through Sudbury to reach western Canada. That is why there is special interest in a Chapleau-Sudbury highway to shorten the distance between highway No. 69 and the Lake Superior route of the trans-Canada highway.

As it now stands, the motor transport traffic coming into Sudbury must travel 200 miles west to Sault Ste. Marie before turning north to the Lakehead. In the opinion of many this is 200 miles of unnecessary driving which also adds to transportation costs.

A Chapleau-Sudbury highway would also open up new areas for mineral, forest and tourist development opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that a start could be made now on this highway. I believe it could become part of a winter works programme to survey and "brush out" the route. It would create employment and it would also assure the people of the mid-north that this government is a government of action.

It is only a matter of time until direct highways to Chapleau and Timmins from Sudbury must be built. The highway from Timmins to Chapleau, and highways from Chapleau to Sudbury and Timmins to Sudbury, encompass a great triangle of land rich in natural resources. They cannot be properly developed by a series of bush roads or mining access roads.

The pattern of resource development is changing. Already, huge trucks are hauling mineral ore that was previously carried on the railways. The trend is to highway transportation. It is part of the changing pattern. That is why these mid-north highways are essential.

There is a feeling among northerners that the south gets the cream and the north must beg for skimmed milk. But, as the Sudbury Star said, the north is not selfish. It does not begrudge the south its highways and skyways.

The north recognizes that new and better highways in the south are necessary to speed the flow of increased motor traffic. But it is also aware that motor traffic in the north has increased by leaps and bounds.

I would ask the government and all southern Ontario hon. members to take a look at the map of Ontario. They will see that Sudbury's geographical location is a "natural" for distribution and transportation.

If this area is unsuccessful in attracting secondary industry to relieve the tax burden on home-owners, it may get some relief from its problems as becoming the major distribution centre in Canada. This ambition can be realized by providing the best and shortest highway routes between the east, south and the north.

Mr. Speaker, this is the point I would like to emphasize at this time. Give us the highways. Let work be started now, knowing that 5 or more years will elapse before they can be utilized to their greatest extent.

All that the mid-north asks is that it be given the opportunity to take full advantage of the benefits of an expanding economy. As an optimist I am confident that Ontario is destined to go marching forward as a banner province. And I firmly believe that the future of this province lies in the north, and in northern development.

To paraphrase that great statesman, Sir Winston Churchill, give us the tools, so we can get on with the job.

Mr. J. H. White moves the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment I propose to go ahead tomorrow with the matter we were discussing—related to the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources pertaining to power. The House will meet tomorrow at 10.30 a.m.

I make this suggestion to the hon. members: I propose on Monday to go ahead with the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Sutton) which we discussed at length a few days ago.

I am not going to make any motion tonight, but I will leave this for the consideration of the hon. members.

Would it be possible to meet at two o'clock on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday?

On Wednesday we have the meeting of the committee on private bills in the morning. From 3 to 6 leaves an incredibly short time for business.

The hon. member who just adjourned the debate has been on the list for some time, as in fact others are, and I do not like to hold them up. I will make a motion concerning that tomorrow morning.

I think we should have a night session on Monday and Tuesday of next week. Monday, of course, we will be considering the matter of unemployment.

We did, I think, generally agree on night sessions on Tuesday and Thursday, but we can consider that when we reach the point next week.

As a matter of fact, as the hon. members know, a good deal of time is taken up in the various formalities relating to the sitting, and 3 hours does not give very much time.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House to reconvene at 10.30 tomorrow morning.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.30 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1960

10.30 O'CLOCK A.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. W. G. Davis, from the standing committee on legal bills, presents the committee's first report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act to amend The Absentees Act.

An Act to amend The Credit Unions Act, 1953.

An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act.

An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act.

An Act to amend The Hotel Fire Safety Act.

An Act to amend The Lightning Rods Act.

An Act to amend The Liquor Control Act.

An Act to amend The Trustee Act.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

An Act to amend The Law Society Act.

An Act to amend The Mortgages Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, moves that Mr. P. Hoffman (Temiskaming) be added to the following standing committees: (1) agriculture; (2) game and fish; (3) lands and forests; (4) mining; (5) public accounts; (6) standing orders.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, following what I said last night in connection with the meetings of the House next week, I suggest that we meet at 2 o'clock. Our committee meetings are not heavy at this time of year. As a matter of fact, I think there will be only one committee meeting next week and that will be private bills on Thursday at 10 o'clock. If we find that with that extra hour we can relieve ourselves of a night session or two, then we can let it run that way. It seems to me to be the reasonable thing to do.

With this I think I should announce a night session for Monday night, but we will leave Tuesday and Thursday open to see what the situation is.

I move, seconded by hon. Mr. Allan, that Monday to Thursday next week, December 12 to 15 inclusive, this House will meet at 2 o'clock p.m. and that rule 2 of the assembly be suspended so far as it may apply to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the report of the hon. Minister of Public Works of Ontario (Mr. Connell) for the 12 months ending March 31, 1960.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to ask a question of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), a copy of which went to him yesterday but due to his being in Kitchener his office suggested it might be better to hold it until today, which I have done.

There has been a development in the situation—I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will permit me to expand this briefly to include the development in the situation. Yesterday morning the so-called Barnes Investigation Bureau Limited, a federal incorporated agency whose concise statement of objectives as recorded in the Provincial Secretary's Department is protection of property, was used to escort workers through the picket lines of a strike at Industrial Wire and Cable on Index road in Etobicoke.

The development, Mr. Speaker, since yesterday, is that an afternoon story in the Toronto Telegram indicated that there is another similar agency operated by a former Metro police inspector, John Nimmo, supplying people to escort workers through the picket line in another strike at the Bury Lumber Company involving a carpenters' union.

I raise this, Mr. Speaker, because I am advised that the strike-breaking activities of these two different agencies are not within their legal powers as granted in their charters. Would the hon. Attorney-General give the House assurance that appropriate action will be taken to have these strike-breaking agencies withdrawn from these industrial situations?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I would say that I am not really in a position to answer that question fully at the moment. I was trying to get information this morning to give me something of a background of the case. I will make a qualified statement now and, if necessary, I can add to it after I have that information.

It is my understanding that this particular agency referred to in the question of yesterday is incorporated under a federal statute. It has a licence—an investigating licence—in relation to the work that is permitted under the statute provided for in that field. But, and this is my understanding only at the moment, these particular people are engaged as security officers in relation to a plant and, if they are operating as security officers, of course, as long as they are operating within the ordinary terms of their employment and as long as those terms of employment are not such as to be against the law in any way, there is nothing I can add at the moment unless there was some particular instance that would require the attention of the law officers.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may, just by way of a supplementary point, draw this to the attention of the hon. Attorney-General for his further examination. Everybody has been familiar with the operations of such companies as Barnes Agency supplying security officers down at Maple Leaf gardens and elsewhere. But surely it is an extension of their authority, and I would suggest an illegal extension, that they should become security officers to escort people through a picket line of a strike which is a legal strike at a time when we have great numbers of unemployed and people who are desperate for work. It seems to me that here we have a situation in which we are going to have in Canada the so-called "Pinkies" or the Pinkerton outfit in the United States, which would cause no end of trouble in industrial disputes.

However, if the hon. Attorney-General is looking into that I will leave it with him.

There is one other item I want to raise on the question of personal privilege. I have in my hand here the text of a speech which is to be delivered tonight on a province-wide network by the new hon. provincial Minister of Transport (Mr. Rowntree), and I want to draw to the attention of the House one paragraph in this speech. I am quoting:

Perhaps I should mention two other Royal commissions. In each case the Royal commissioner was a distinguished member of the judiciary with no political axe to grind. I refer to the investigation into a land purchase involving the Niagara parks commission and my capable and respected colleague, Labour Minister the Honourable Charles Daley. As is now well known, the parks commission and the Labour Minister came through the investigation with colours flying, notwithstanding the allegations by various members of the Opposition groups more interested in the political smear than in the cause of good government.

Mr. Speaker, there is no name here and the cap could be put on anybody it fits. I put the cap on, and I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that before this government has done anything to answer the documented statements that were made in this House last Thursday, that no hon. member of the House has a right to get up on a province-wide network and smear people across this House when they have not had the intestinal fortitude to answer the documented case.

The people who are bucking the establishment of good government in this country are the government, not us on this side, and I submit that it is a gross violation of privilege for an hon. Minister of the cabinet to get up and make a smear statement—I use his own term—when the government has not had the intestinal fortitude to answer the documented statement or comment on it in this House.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Objection noted.

The House, upon order, resolved itself into the committee of supply, Mr. W. E. Johnston in the chair.

ESTIMATES, HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER COMMISSION OF ONTARIO

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, there was just one other item in the discussion of Hydro that I wanted to raise, and I turn to it now. It is the question of Hydro's procedures in selling land.

Last year, I raised with the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) a question with regard to the sale of certain lands in St. Catharines. I have forgotten the exact day that I asked the question, but it was some time in the month of March and literally weeks went by before the hon. Minister replied.

He replied a day before the House ended so that there was no opportunity to debate this matter further.

The issue that I drew to his attention was the sale, without public tender, in the city of St. Catharines of a piece of property, the acreage of which was 166.59 acres, at approximately $1,500 an acre for a total sum of $249,897. Now this happens to be a choice piece of property for any real estate person.

It was sold to Mr. Frank A. Branscombe, and the particular features of the deal were that Mr. Branscombe paid $50,000 down, and the commission took back a 5-year mortgage for the balance bearing interest at 5 per cent, repayable $20,000 half-yearly on account of the principal, with the balance to fall due in 1963.

The reason I raised this, Mr. Chairman, was that it had been drawn to my attention that a number of people in St. Catharines had been interested in this property. And they had made approaches to Hydro and had been assured that when Hydro was going to dispose of this property it would be put up for public tender.

The hon. Minister gave an explanation of exactly what happened, and it can be found—for those who are interested in reading it in full—in Hansard of April 12, 1960, at the beginning of page 2655.

The hon. Minister's explanation, briefly, was this: That there had been 4 requests, 4 approaches recorded in the records of Hydro, of people who were interested in this property.

I will not bother naming the people. Two of them were approaches with no specific suggestion as to what they would offer. The third one was a man who offered $500 an acre. The fourth one was the gentleman, Mr. Branscombe, who offered $1,200 and Hydro entered into private negotiations with him, persuaded him to raise the price to $1,500 and sold him the property without any public tender.

Now the hon. Minister gives some very interesting examples of Hydro's reasoning as to why this procedure is an acceptable one. Some of the reasoning obviously reflects a little conscience.

For example, on two different occasions, the hon. Minister made statements. One was:

It was the judgment of the commission at the time that, despite the fact that failure to advertise might invite censure, it would not be in the best interest of Ontario Hydro to advertise.

And then, later, he makes this comment:

The commission was therefore faced with the necessity of making a decision as to whether it should follow a course which was politically prudent—namely, to call public tenders,

—or one which in its best judgment was better for Ontario Hydro; so it adopted the latter.

In other words, there is a tendency to adopt the argument that Hydro was being brave in taking a politically dangerous procedure in not calling for public tenders, and that it was really advancing the public interest in selling it this way because, they argue, they could have received more this way than if they had called for public tender.

Well, I think the flaws in that reasoning are so obvious that I will not dwell upon them.

However, in relation to another argument that was adopted by the hon. Minister, it was his contention that if they had called for public tenders, they would not have received any more, and he cites other lots sold in the immediate area and the price that they brought, and draws the conclusion that Hydro would not have received any more.

He even goes so far as to say that Mr. Branscombe is one of the largest realtors in the Niagara district, and he is going to know what other people were offering. It is always known in those circles what other people are offering.

In other words, if they had called for public tender, as the hon. Minister elaborates elsewhere in his statement, Mr. Branscombe then might have reduced his offer beyond the $1,500 that Hydro had received and Hydro, so the hon. Minister argues, with a logic that is really below par for him, would have received less, and the interests of the public would not have been protected.

Now, Mr. Chairman, all these tortuous explanations as to why the government should not call for tenders when they are selling property, I suggest, should be brought to an end. Surely this is a principle which has been generally accepted; that, if a public agency is selling property, they should do so by calling for public tender.

I bring, as my witness, the comment that

I have already mentioned in this House, namely, the report of Judge Ian Macdonell with regard to the Niagara parks commission—when he was referring to this particular aspect of the dealings of the Niagara parks commission in the sale of the Daley farm.

Judge Macdonell's comment, to be found on page 13 of his report, was:

It is, however, trite to say that a public body, in selling land, should generally advertise the lands for sale or at least call for tenders. It is also usual to obtain independent valuations, or list properties with a regular real estate broker. I think it is now conceded by all that, at least, some of these steps should have been taken, even though, in all probability, they would not have affected the result.

What Judge Macdonell has said, there, is that even though it does not affect the results, these procedures should be followed. In not following these procedures, the door is opened to the kind of abuse of which we have had far too much; and that, surely, we have to check some time soon.

The hon. Minister, himself, in the course of his explanation, concedes what surely is the pertinent point—if he really felt that by calling for tenders they were going to get less than through negotiation—that anybody calling for tenders can have a reserve bid in to protect himself from a sale that was below what was thought to be the genuine value of the property.

I do not know what can be done—with Hydro so adamant in this false statement of the principle involved, and the necessity of a public agency calling for tenders in selling lands, or if what the hon. Minister has laid down as the basic policy of Hydro, and they are going to call tenders when they please, and not call tenders when they please, in the future.

I think this House is entitled to some explanation from the hon. Minister on that point.

But, while he is on that point, I would like to ask him to give us a bit more information. I would like the hon. Minister to confirm or deny whether the gentleman, Mr. Frank A. Branscombe, at any time, and more particularly, at about the time of the sale, was an appraiser for Hydro in the sales of lands, both in the Niagara peninsula and elsewhere, where Hydro has been involved in extensive land sales.

My information—and I am not in a position to check it because I have not got the records of Hydro—is that Mr. Branscombe was an appraiser for Hydro. And, if it was true that he was, Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, I suggest that the case that the hon. Minister tried to defend is even more indefensible; not only on the basis of principle but on the basis that Hydro was selling land to a man who had direct business connections with Hydro, and selling him a property without giving others an opportunity to bid on it.

In this same connection of Hydro's land sales or rentals, there is another little item I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister for his comment. It is to be found in the September 14, 1960, edition of the Cornwall Standard Freeholder, and I am quoting from a letter to the editor which is in that issue of the paper, written by one George Russell of Cornwall. Let me start at the beginning of this paragraph:

I believe if a little probing was done in the Cornwall area the result would uncover some interesting and surprising information. Those taxpayers who follow the reports of the provincial Hansard will recall that in one case, namely the Louis Emard Petroleum Company, this company received from the Ontario Hydro the sum of $148,000 for the property situated at the corner of Emma and Pitt streets, near the overpass, with the understanding they, the Louis Emard Petroleum Company, could have the property back under lease, to be used as a truck storage depot for the monthly rental sum of $205.

Despite the fact that the Ontario Hydro paid such a large sum of money for this property, the Louis Emard Petroleum Company is still using this property as its headquarters with a staff of workers being located in this building and paying to Ontario Hydro the rental sum of $205 per month.

Ontario Hydro pays the city of Cornwall a grant in lieu of taxes at the rate of $1,020.50. The Emard Petroleum pays the city a business tax on this property amounting to $249.99. The total assessed value of this property as shown on the files of the city of Cornwall is $15,960.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): I am sorry, I missed that. What did the hon. member say?

Mr. MacDonald: Hydro is paying the city a $1,020.50 grant in lieu of taxes because they now own the property, and it says the company is paying $249.99 business tax to the city. I continue:

The point I wish to make clear is that Ontario Hydro did pay out in cash $148,000 and the Emard Petroleum Company is still in business on the same property, with total cost to them in rent and business taxes, the amount of $2,649.99. Taxes paid to the city by Ontario Hydro run to $1,020.50.

After reading Hansard, then looking over the facts as they actually exist, and in the interest of the taxpayer in general throughout the province, I believe this matter should be raised in the House and aired fully.

I would appreciate the hon. Minister's comments on that particular deal as well as the Branscombe one.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I have two points that I wish to bring up, and they are both words of congratulation. Firstly, I congratulate the hon. Minister, whose ability I have certainly grown to respect in this House. I want to go on record as saying that I think he is doing an exceptional job as the Minister of Energy Resources, and I wish him all the best in the continuance of his work.

The second point concerns the CANDU project in Bruce county, about which I wish to say a few words. Here, too, I want to go on record as saying that the Hydro officials, from top to bottom, co-operated with myself as the local member in every way possible.

Perhaps to the hon. members who come from Toronto or other city ridings, projects such as CANDU, with a cost of $80 million, do not mean too much to them because they are used to large figures and large building projects. But I assure the House that in a rural riding such as Bruce we consider ourselves very fortunate that CANDU is established in our county.

I say to the hon. members that this site was picked on the shores of Lake Huron at Douglas Point, as you might say, right out of the bush. Now we have seen the project started, and next spring there are going to be large numbers of workmen erecting the buildings and getting ready for this project which will be opening in 1964.

I asked the hon. Minister of Energy Resources the other day for some figures dealing with the costs, because people who live in my area are interested in these things. Although it may not be of too much interest to hon. members here, I will tell the hon. Minister that I was successful in finding some of them.

I have not received them from him as yet, but I would just like to mention some of these costs because, later on, I am going to say that in many instances I think that they are exceptionally low; and I want to congratulate the Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. who, with the co-operation of The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, have established this project.

I am quoting the cost that I found out later from a magazine—the Nuclear Canada issue that was sent to me by the hon. Minister some time ago. In case the other hon. members did not get it, I can assure them that it is very, very interesting. In this particular issue it deals to a large extent with the CANDU project.

To give the hon. members some idea of the costs and why they are so great, I will just run down the capital cost estimates for CANDU.

I find that the site, including land and improvements, is going to cost $877,000. So the cost of land and getting it ready for an $80 million project is very little indeed.

The buildings, structure and shielding will cost $5 million—and I am speaking, here, in round figures. The reactor, boiler and auxiliaries, $11,196,000; the turbo generator and auxiliary, $7,145,000; electrical instrumentation, $6,100,000; common processes—and I am really not familiar with what that means—$3,330,000; construction of the plant and indirect, $3,284,000; heavy water and helium, $11,677,000; purchasing, inspecting, accounts and insurance, $1,561,000; contingency, $8,567,000.

Then there is one item which might be of interest to the hon. members.

This project is going to take 2 or 3 years to build, and the escalation based on a 3 per cent price increase per annum—just imagine this figure, just on the increase Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. expects in costs in the next 2 or 3 years at 3 per cent per annum—is $4,163,000.

Engineering is $8,150,000; commissioning, including training, $1,250,000; and here is something—and I point this out since no one would appreciate it more than the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan)—the interest on this project during construction alone is $9,198,000. That, Mr. Chairman, is a great deal of money.

So the total estimated cost, as in the detailed breakdown that I have given, is $81,507,000.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that a project such as CANDU, being constructed in a rural riding such as Bruce, is an important matter indeed. The hon. members who come from rural ridings will appreciate the situation when numerous workmen move into a locality where there are firstly a limited number of people working and employed; most of the citizens live in small towns or are farmers.

There are a great number of problems for the local member. For some reason or other there are many workmen, particularly in a period of unemployment such as we have today, who feel that the only way they can get a job is to apply to their local member. That is quite incorrect as far as this project is concerned, I might say. But nevertheless I have had letters from all over the province asking me to use whatever influence I might have to get the person writing a job at CANDU when it opens up, as it is going to next spring.

I want to go on record as saying this, that the personnel officer of Ontario Hydro, who is looking after CANDU, has been most co-operative. The general manager, who is supervising the construction, took me around the site, explained to me what was going on, and he could not have been nicer.

I might just mention this: I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Energy Resources that as this project will be the world's largest atomic energy plant for the making of electricity, perhaps some time he might take all the hon. members of the House up there to see it when the construction has advanced.

Now I never knew before, for example, that Ontario Hydro or the people whom they hire to do a job such as this, have a machine that will actually plow through a foot-thick rock. It was explained to me by one of the engineers that this was one of the few machines—he may have said it was the only one—of its type in Canada. One of the reasons CANDU was established there is because of the tremendous amount of water that is available, and because the site suited Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. and Ontario Hydro. One of the things they have there is plenty of rock.

I do not mean by that this machine will go along rock 20 feet thick and plow a foot of it; that is not the idea at all. But I assure you, Mr. Chairman, because I saw it, that it will go to a field where there is one foot of rock and literally plow it as it goes along.

Another machine actually chews up a tree, and throws it out the rear as scrap. It is wonderful to see what our Hydro engineers are doing in this particular locality.

I might say that the magazine that I have referred to says that there will be approximately 100 employees at CANDU when it is finished. The estimated average salary to these employees will be $10,000 a year so we can see they are going to be highly trained personnel.

Another thing that should be mentioned is the fact that, after this is completed, it will be very easy to double the amount of power that is coming out of there providing that it proves to be economically feasible, of which I have not the slightest doubt at all. And if the power is doubled, if they bring in more generators and reactors, and the amount of power that is available is doubled, it will take only an extra 10 employees.

Now, the only thing that I would say to the hon. Minister, and I am sure that he has had this pointed out to him in letters from the local inhabitants and the various breeds of the locality, is this:

Next spring there are going to be a large number of workmen who no doubt will bring their wives and families into the area. And in the township of Bruce, in which Douglas Point is located and where CANDU is going to be located, we have very limited public school facilities.

I would be certainly remiss in my duty as a local member if I did not ask the hon. Minister of Energy Resources to remind Hydro of this, as I do not feel that the local people of Bruce township should be responsible for the education of these youngsters who are going to be moving in for perhaps only a two- or three-year period, or perhaps even a one-year period.

There is not a doubt in the world that they will be coming. Schools are going to have to be provided for these children, or they are going to have to be taken in buses somewhere else, and that is one thing that is certainly bothering the inhabitants of the township in which this great plant is located.

My sole reason, Mr. Chairman, in rising this morning up to the moment has been to congratulate the hon. Minister on what I consider to be a job extremely well done. I feel that Hydro, in co-operation with Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., have moved ahead in the right direction, because there is not a doubt in the world but what uranium is going to have to be used in years to come, not only in Ontario and Canada, but in the whole world, to provide the power that is necessary to make the wheels of industry turn round.

Now, I understand that, before the hon. Minister answers, he wants every hon. member who intends to speak to say what he has to say. So before I sit down, there is one thing that I would like to mention again, and I have done this on numerous occasions in this Legislature.

Last night it came back to me once more when the hon. Minister pointed out that during the next x number of years—I believe it was 10 years—in this province, Ontario Hydro were going to spend approximately $1 billion in projects of a capital nature. That means that we are going to have to borrow that $1 billion. As a matter of fact I think we now have already borrowed about $1.5 billion. This amount is owed by Ontario Hydro, and endorsed by the people of the province of Ontario.

While I agree that some of this is being paid off each year, and I think their system of accounting and getting rid of this debt is excellent, at the same time in the next number of years we are going to borrow a great deal more.

Incidentally, I got one of these books through the mail last August, and I am sure all of the hon. members did. I noticed, on page 1 of the foreword something that I think all the hon. members—and particularly the government hon. members—should take note of. It says:

In the conduct of the commission's affairs, the commissioners are responsible for and are the final authority in establishing policy.

Mr. Chairman, if that statement is correct, I disagree with it entirely. I think there are many hon. members on both sides of the House who would agree with me. I say this, that when we are going to have to borrow such a fantastic sum as $1 billion in the next number of years, and we as this government are going to have to endorse it, then we should have some say as to how it is going to be spent.

During the next number of months we are going to be talking about a great number of millions of dollars. I agree that last night we passed estimates of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources which, when one considers the total budget of the province of Ontario, were very limited.

When we scrutinize these things very diligently, when we on the Opposition side try to criticize the government constructively as to the spending of just a few millions of dollars, and then when one considers that not only we in the Opposition have nothing to say as to the spending of these billions of dollars by Hydro, but also none of the hon. members on the government side has anything to say about it, then I respectfully make a suggestion. I suggest that it is high time this Legislature shoved its nose into the business of Hydro. I suggest that when the commissioners want to spend huge sums such as that, they come before this Legislature, before we, as the representatives of the people, have to endorse it.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my idea to follow along with this point much longer, because those hon. members who have been here, in years gone by, know that I have spoken on the same subject before.

I believe that there are many hon. members on both sides of this assembly who will agree with me. I do hope that the committee which investigates government procedure, and has been sitting in the past and will again in the future, presses the point that they have now suggested, that we have more to say about this huge public utility in this province—which does more business really, owes more money anyway, as far as gross is concerned—than this whole province does.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I have just one question that perhaps the hon. Minister could answer at any time—it is not necessary that he do it today. I would like to know what the estimated cost of the power produced by CANDU is going to be, as compared to that in other plants—coal plants or electrical plants.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a few remarks to the hon. Minister through you, sir, in the matter of Hydro.

I might say at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that I regard the hon. Minister as one of the first, if not the first, Minister of the Crown to sit on Hydro who has taken the active personal interest he has in the affairs of the Hydro commission.

I think he must be a rather probing individual because, from time to time, I hear some rather unflattering comments from some of the officials of Hydro who are not too happy about some of the questions he asks, and about some of the information he requires from them.

By that very comment alone, it would seem to me that he is doing the job that the Legislature would expect him to do on that commission. Certainly, in recent months at least, it has had its results.

I must say too that I was rather interested to note the recommendations of the select committee on government organization, when they suggested that more control of the Legislature be exercised over Hydro and other government boards and commissions. I heartily concur with those recommendations, and I will be interested indeed to hear the expanded remarks of the hon. vice-chairman when this matter comes up on the order paper for further discussion.

One subject which was of great interest to the people of northwestern Ontario, particularly in the latter part of this year, was the increased Hydro rates to industry and the mines across the north. I had some rather lengthy correspondence with the hon. Minister on this subject which culminated, temporarily, in his reply to me of October 14.

As all hon. members will know, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. Minister writes a letter, he does not fool around. His letter is rather lengthy and rather detailed and, not being an engineering expert in the field of hydro and hydro matters, particularly in the production and transmission of power and its costing, I necessarily referred this to people who at least expect to be recognized as experts in the field.

I just got word this morning that a meeting has been arranged in the north during the Christmas recess when the hon. Minister's reply and the comments of people in the mining, and pulp and paper industries will be brought together to resolve opinion in the field concerning the hon. Minister's attitude.

I may say that I appreciate the trouble the hon. Minister took to outline Hydro's position, and I have been told, as I say, by those who claim to be experts in the field, that perhaps someone in Hydro has misinformed the hon. Minister on some of these particulars he outlined. It has been stated by some people in the industry that what he did not say in his reply was much more important in some respects than what he did say.

I expect to take this up further when the House resumes again in January, and I will be in a better position to outline the views of the industry to the hon. Minister. I will certainly apprise him of those views beforehand, so that a realistic solution can be found to this rather serious problem.

While I am on my feet today, I want to bring to his attention—and I do not necessarily ask for an answer today because I realize some of these things are not easily answered—some of the backwardness in Hydro, and Hydro's thinking, which is having its effect on the economy of the country, and particularly the economy of northern and northwestern Ontario.

I have before me some correspondence, the latest of which was dated at Port Arthur on December 7, 1960—about two days ago.

To set this matter out clearly, north of Kenora there is a rather extensive deposit of base metals, particularly nickel and copper. In 1957, the northwestern region of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, in a letter dated August 8, 1957, advised the companies concerned—which, at that time, were Norpex Oils and Mines, and Eastern Mining and Smelting—that it would cost an estimated $396,300 to build 22.5 miles of 44 t-v line into their properties.

After months and months of negotiation, and hassling back and forth about these estimates, it was not until November of 1960 that Hydro came up with another estimate which actually reduced the original estimate to $300,000. This is rather surprising, in view of the fact that we hear so much and actually we know, as a matter of fact, that goods and services have increased in cost over the years.

What we have been trying—and what the industry has been trying—to inculcate into the minds of people who make these estimates is that when they make the estimates, the figures they use are taken seriously by people in New York, and elsewhere, who are considering the purchase of bonds, debentures and stock to finance the operations concerned. And they regard an estimate of Ontario Hydro as being rather selective and being authoritative.

In this case, I am told by the companies concerned that they were prepared to build that line for less than $200,000, but could not come to any agreement on it because the Hydro engineers, at that time, refused to reduce their estimated cost.

Three years later, however, the engineers have done so, reducing it to $300,000. And the letter I have, dated November 25, 1960, said—and I quote in the second paragraph:

You will note that in 1957 the estimated cost for the 22.5 miles of line was $396,000, and now, in their latest estimate, they have reduced this to $300,000. Perhaps if we wait a few more years it will come down another $100,000.

Parallel with this was a request by a gold mining operation near the town of Kenora for a power line into that site. The company, in communication with me, expressed the opinion that it was fantastic—which was the word they used—that Hydro would require a deposit of over $200,000 to build 3.5 miles of power line.

I was interested, yesterday, to receive a letter from the northwestern region of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, which, Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I will read into the record.

With tongue in cheek, I had quoted the mining company's figures, and was very surprised indeed when the commission itself confirmed them. The letter reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Wren:

In a recent edition of the Red Lake District News I noticed an item attributed to you which ran in part as follows: "Estimates termed fantastic by mining executives, delay action on a gold property near Kenora, following Hydro's advice to company officials that a deposit of over $200,000 would be required to build a 3.5 mile power line."

In view of your interest in this matter I would like to make sure that you have certain information which was not mentioned perhaps in the news item. Our estimate was informal—

And I might add as an aside here, Mr. Chairman, that that is what I am complaining of: we have to get away from this informality in these important matters.

—our estimate was informal, based on previous experience in similar situations and was provided for preliminary studies only. The cost mentioned not only provided for approximately 3.5 miles of 110,000 volt line but also for a step-down transformer station. As you know, transmission line voltage must be transformed from 110,000 to 2,200 or 550 for use at the mines.

The figures quoted were not given as a condition of supply but rather as a service. The company could engage a consultant to prepare specifications and cost estimates and then award the contract to the electrical construction firm to build the line and transformer station. This is usually done after the preliminary studies indicate that there is sufficient merit to the property to justify detailed studies and cost estimates.

This letter is signed by Mr. K. N. Bodkin, consumers' service engineer in the north-western region.

Mr. Chairman, the point I am making here is simply that the employment of some 175 to 200 men has been held up, not entirely by Hydro but perhaps 75 per cent by Hydro, for 3 years because of the neglect of Hydro engineers to get down to reality in their estimates.

When the mining companies complained 3 years ago that there was something wrong with their estimating, they claimed that the mining companies' engineers were in error. But, as I have already pointed out, they have reduced those estimates now by $100,000, 3 years after their original quote.

The companies are still in some difficulties, shall we say, in financing their debentures, because other consulting engineers still insist that the estimate is $100,000 too high.

I must qualify that, Mr. Chairman, to be fair, by saying there is an added problem in the fact that, despite the solemn promise of the former Minister of Mines (Mr. Kelly) to build an access road into the area some years ago, that road has not been undertaken. The company, nevertheless, is going to go ahead and the problem now is simply one of reducing costs by the use of Hydro power, once the line is built, rather than having to haul fuel from Manitoba into the area to produce electric power through diesel engines and the like.

I do not expect the hon. Minister of Energy Resources to be able to answer these things in detail today, but I do say to him that, in the riding I have the honour to represent, these things and others—the Hydro alone is not to blame—are causing a great deal of concern. There are a great many people unemployed there and, for a small expenditure of money, some of them could be given work. Despite what the engineer says in his letter of December 7, 1960, I can show the hon. Minister correspondence where Hydro officials actually discourage mining companies from using independent consulting engineers, and going into the building of lines on their own.

I do not think any mining company has any objection to Hydro supervising, or even undertaking, the actual building of the lines and charging it back to the mines over a number of years, as they do in many cases. However, there is the problem of financing, and when the estimates and the processes of estimating are unrealistic and do not stand up with what independent consulting engineers say are standard estimating practices, then I respectfully suggest that that bears a great deal of careful consideration.

I would impress upon the hon. Minister the urgency of this matter for, as I say, this along with the other matters of increased costs of Hydro installation will be discussed during the Christmas recess, during which time I promised them I would keep them informed of discussions and the outcome of these meetings.

We are in a position up north where matters are getting rather desperate in employment. In addition to already falling employment levels, we are faced with some rather serious labour negotiation difficulties in the north, and it is urgent not only to keep that business on an even keel but to produce new jobs.

I repeat here, today, what I have repeated on many occasions: in the north we are not seeking charity, we are not seeking handouts; all we ask is a realistic application of the processes and services which is the function of government, and we will see to it that the government gets its return on its investment. Through this we will develop ourselves an economy which will look after our own people without public assistance.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: My hon. friend, may I just say this before the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) speaks?

Could I say to the hon. member for Kenora that I am concerned about the matters which he has raised; and as soon as Hansard is printed and I can use that as the basis of the inquiry, I shall do so.

He made reference to some correspondence. I would be grateful if we could discuss that, if he could get it for me, and let me have it some time.

Mr. Wren: I may say to the hon. Minister that I have some of it here which I have been asked to return—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, when he gets it.

Mr. Wren: If the hon. Minister wants to have his staff make a copy of it and return it—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That would be fine. I mean, if I can help the hon. member, I want to do so.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a matter I want to bring to the hon. Minister's attention. It is of no great importance or great moment.

I do not think it is in the category or the classification of warp and woof which the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) was throwing around in gay abandon the other night, although I also hope it would be on a higher level than the "mish mash" which I think the hon. member for York South is fond of using. But it does relate to the name of this mammoth organization and specifically to the word "Hydro" in the name of it.

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, if you have ever had occasion to speak to a stranger to Ontario about Ontario Hydro; but if you ever have, you will have had the experience I had, namely, that they really do not know what you are talking about unless you also tack on the words "Electric Power Commission."

There are very few other jurisdictions in the western world which now attach the word "hydro" to power corporations.

My understanding of the word "hydro"—specifically when it relates to the generation of electric power—means the generation of electric power by means of water power. Now, in the good old days, perhaps that was true; but, today, within 15 miles of where we sit here, we have two huge generating plants which do not use hydro power. We are not using hydro power from them—we are using power that is generated by means of coal.

We heard last night of a new plant that is going to be built at the Lakehead, where the generation could be by gas again, or coal. There are other plants, about which we heard a great deal, which use nuclear power as their energy generation.

I think it is about time that we politicians, and even perhaps an emanation of government—namely, a government agency—had enough nerve to call a spade a spade. I would like to bring to the urgent attention of the hon. Minister that he give very serious consideration to deleting the word "Hydro" from the name of this commission, and call it something like "Ontario Power" or "Ontario Electric Power Commission."

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Take it out of the hands of the politicians and put it into the hands of the professors like yourself.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, the procedure which the hon. Minister of Energy Resources is adopting with regard to the position of Hydro has certain definite advantages that I can see. On the other hand it does create certain difficulties for hon. members because the comments one may wish to make may depend on certain information that one would like to elicit from the hon. Minister. When he is holding all the answers to questions until the end, that makes it a little difficult to know where to proceed on points one might be interested in.

However, I will carry on as best I can on the basis of the information I now have. I would like first of all to direct a question to the hon. Minister which he can answer when he gets an opportunity. On pages 36 and 37 of the 1959 annual report of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, the funded debt situation is shown as at December 31, 1959, which is the period covered by the report.

I would be interested in knowing if the hon. Minister has the figures available as to the changes which took place in that situation during the year 1960 to date—specifically, what bond issues were floated either by or on behalf of Hydro and also what redemptions were made during the year. With respect to the bond issues floated, I would be interested in knowing the proportion or the amount that is payable in United States funds.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member, if this is any help to the additional questions that he wants to place, my recollection is that there was $100 million added to the indebtedness and it was all placed in Canada.

Mr. Bryden: And was that one issue or more than one?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I have an idea it was two, $60 million and $40 million. Does the hon. Provincial Treasurer recall the two loans that Hydro took, were they $60 million and $40 million respectively?

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): There were two, but not during the last—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I have an idea it was in that neighbourhood of $100 million. However, I will get that information for the hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: Thank you very much. I believe one of these issues was floated in June, 1960, and I have received certain complaints from individuals who wanted to buy the bonds issued at that time but could not get them except at a premium. I am not entirely familiar with Hydro's procedure, but I would judge that their method of floating this particular issue at any rate was to sell the entire issue to bond houses. The bond houses thereupon disposed of it to the public.

Any individual, any one of these shareholders of Hydro who consist of all the people of the province, who wanted to invest a sum of money in what is undoubtedly quite an attractive investment could do so only by paying a premium over and above the normal commission to bond houses.

My information is that the bond houses got the issue at $99.50. One man who spoke to me said he wanted to buy $25,000 worth; it was offered to him immediately at $100.50—in other words, at a one point premium.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I have the information if the hon. member would like it. There were two bond issues. They were $100 million. They were not 60 and 40, they were two 50's. The first one was on February 15, 1960, in two issues, and I will just give the first issue and then the second issue. The first issue was for $16 million with a coupon rate of 6 per cent, maturing on February 15, 1970. The issue price was $99.50 to yield 6.07 per cent; cost price was $98.50; the cost to Hydro is 6.20 per cent, and they were sold in Toronto.

The second part of the issue of February, 1960, was $34 million; coupon at 6 per cent, maturing of February 15, 1980; an issue price of $97.75; the yield, 6.20 per cent; cost price of $96.75; the cost to Hydro 6.28 per cent; issued in Toronto.

The issue of $50 million on July 15, 1960, was again broken up into the 10- and 20-year maturity. Taking the 10-year maturity first, in the sum of $5.4 million with a coupon rate of 5.25 per cent—one can see that the interest rate had dropped three-quarters of one per cent in a matter of a few months—it is due in July 15, 1970; the issue price, $1; the yield thereon, 5.25 per cent; the cost price $99; the cost to Hydro, 5.38 per cent; issued in Toronto.

The second part of the same $50 million loan was for $44.6 million; a coupon rate of 5.5 per cent; a quarter per cent higher than the 10-year maturity; maturing on July 15, 1980; with an issue price of $99.50; yield of 5.54 per cent; cost price $98.50; and cost to Hydro 5.62 per cent; and that also was issued in Toronto.

Mr. Bryden: Were all of these issues disposed of in total to bond houses?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes. There is a syndicate. As the hon. member will recall, a number of the bond houses are in a syndicate, and when Hydro needs to raise money on an issue it calls in the bond houses and has a conference with them as to what rate they think would attract the market at this particular time. It is very variable from morning till afternoon. You can place yourself a little too high or a little too low. You have no real yardsticks to go by except from experience, and these people are the largest of their kind in the country and certainly in the Ontario market. For that matter, they deal in the world market.

These people are really a committee which advises the finance side of Hydro as to what the going rate is today, what will attract money. We always try, of course, to get the most favourable return that we can and try to place them just exactly right. That is very hard to do.

Sometimes they will go to a premium instantly, which means that we have underestimated the anxiety of the market. Sometimes they may not go well enough, in which case we have overestimated the anxiety of the market. A bad loan can be a black eye both to the province and to Ontario Hydro. Therefore, it is a very skilled matter to be able to place these loans on the market at exactly the right amount.

Mr. Bryden: I can appreciate the hon. Minister's claim that this is a highly technical and difficult business. There is, nevertheless, a point that I think should be borne in mind. Certainly in at least one of these issues there was an immediate premium available to the bond dealers, and the average fellow who wanted to buy in had to buy in at premium price.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: What sometimes happens, if we can just discuss this back and forth for a minute, is that the syndicate agrees that they do not know whether the public will buy. They say, "We will buy it from you," and if they cannot turn around and sell it they are stuck with it. We have the money in the meantime.

That is why they have an interest in disposing of the bonds to the public and we, on the other hand, have our interest in trying to get as much money in from the issue as possible.

So, the hon. member can see, there is this struggle to make sure that a fair amount is allocated for the bonds. The syndicate buys the bonds, in many cases gives us a firm commitment for all of the issue or a very large part of it, and if they do not sell it to anybody at all we still have our money.

The point I am trying to make to the hon. member is that there has, in effect, to be some commission to them, otherwise they would just handle it on our account. They have to have some incentive to sell it, and certainly they have to have some incentive to buy the whole issue from us before they have sold it to any one.

Mr. Bryden: Do they not get some commission on the quoted price, even so? They do not depend entirely on any profit they can make on the market?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would say to the hon. member that I am not an expert on these matters. But now that he has raised it, and I realize my inadequacy in this connection, I will be able to give him a much fuller answer the next time he questions me on it.

It is a procedure that Hydro will undoubtedly be engaged in for a long time, and there is no doubt further discussions will be in order at other sessions. The committee will meet and, if the hon. member would like, I will see that the controller or the treasurer or our finance people are there so he can discuss it with them. I think this is an important matter, and it was raised by the hon. member for Bruce and I would like the hon. member to be satisfied about the procedure.

Mr. Whicher: The point is that I think they could very well lose money. The next day they sell these bonds to the public and it is not every day that they make it. It is true that they try to make it, and in the majority of instances they would make that point or half a point, but it is quite possible to lose. I know a fellow who bought a huge amount of them and lost a great deal of money the next day because he had to dispose of them.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I know that people can lose money on bonds but I have not noticed that the bond houses are usually the heavy losers in the field. In the entertainment world, when somebody buys a ticket to an exhibition of some kind or other and then sells it immediately at a premium, that practice is referred to as scalping, and the police take a very low view of it.

It seems to me there is a certain amount of scalping going on in regard to these bonds. They are bought at one price and cornered and immediately there is a higher price. I have said already, and I will repeat, that I know it is a very difficult and complicated field, but I think consideration might be given to making some proportion of an issue available through the provincial savings offices or in some other way so that the public could get it directly.

I realize that on that basis Hydro would not have the money in the till. But perhaps a small proportion of the bonds sold in this way might satisfy the requirements, particularly of people in rural areas who do not have easy access to these bond houses.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think that is a very good idea.

Mr. Bryden: It is a matter that can be considered and I am certainly not trying to imply that there is any easy solution.

One other matter I would like to raise, Mr. Chairman, relates to the Little Long rapids hydro project and specifically to the men engaged in slashing operations on that project. Some time ago, on August 29 of this year, I called public attention to what I considered to be the very undesirable conditions under which these men were working.

At the time, the Hydro representative said there was absolutely nothing in what I said, it was completely false, even though I was making my statements on the basis of observations I made on the spot and discussions I had with the men.

Notwithstanding the fact that there was allegedly absolutely nothing in what I said, an announcement was made by Hydro a short time afterwards to the effect that they were cleaning up these conditions. I do not know at the moment to what extent the conditions have been cleaned up. I would certainly hope that at least some of them have been straightened out. Perhaps the hon. Minister will be able to advise me about that.

The time I went to this particular project, which was on August 28, I can certainly say that the conditions were disgraceful. One spot in particular I would particularly like to mention was a camp known as the Ouellette camp.

This was a camp in which the men were not actually engaged in slashing, they were engaged in the operation that follows slashing, namely, cutting the logs and piling them. The contract for this work had been let out, I believe, to a man called John W. Fogg and he in turn subcontracted to Ouellette.

Ouellette had a camp where he provided accommodation, if one could call it that, for the men whom he hired to do the actual cutting and piling.

I hope that, in its clean-up operation, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission wiped this Ouellette camp out altogether, because it was a disgrace to the province of Ontario.

The sleeping accommodation was disgraceful. In some of the tents the stench was so bad it was impossible for a tenderfoot like me to even go into them. The tents were badly overcrowded, and were in very poor condition. The condition of the grounds was terrible, with garbage all over the place.

There was just nothing favourable one could say about this camp. It made one think of the bad old days in the bush when men were treated little better than horses. Ouellette also paid them very low wages and charged them high rates for board and lodging. I hope this Ouellette camp has vanished off the face of the earth. Perhaps the hon. Minister can advise me on that when the time comes for him to make his final statement.

Leaving aside the Ouellette camp and turning now to the men actually engaged in slashing operations—that is, clearing the bush so that work can proceed—these men were then, and I believe still are, in the euphemistic category of independent contractors.

In other words, a man, or more usually a group of 2 or 3 or 4 men, would enter into a contract with the Hydro-Electric Power Commission to clear the bush off a certain section of land. Then, when they complete that contract, they enter into another contract.

They were required to sign contracts covering their work, and I have a copy of one of those contracts here. As will be apparent to hon. members, it is on a sheet of paper that is approximately two feet long. It is in two columns of quite small type. It is, as any contract would be expected to be, in highly technical legal language.

The men who are working on this job are bushworkers. Most of them have very little schooling. They have the knowledge and training that is necessary for their occupation, and that does not involve much book learning. Some of them—I would not care to estimate the proportion but certainly a substantial number of the men I met there were French speaking—could not understand English at all, certainly could not read it. They also were required to sign these contracts written in English.

I am certain that none of them knew what they were committing themselves to. I would like to read just one paragraph from one of these contracts. In doing so, I will illustrate both the kind of language that is used and also some of the things the men committed themselves to. The contractor referred to is the actual man or group of men who are doing the work. The contract reads:

The contractor covenants and agrees:

(iv) That he will assume all risk of and liability for any and all injury, damage and loss to property—including that of the commission—or persons—including loss of life—occasioned by or attributable either directly or indirectly to the work being performed under this agreement, to the extent that such injury, damage and loss shall have been caused by the negligence or default of the contractor, his servant, agents and workmen, and that he will indemnify and save harmless the commission from and against all actions, claims and demands for injury, damage or loss arising from or attributable to such negligence or default.

This would undoubtedly be a very interesting clause for some of the legal hon. members of the House. To the men who were asked to sign this contract it was mish-mash. I may say that all of the contracts are in the same type of language. I will not call it gobbledy gook—I suppose that expression could be used, but the contract has to be in very specific language, and lawyers would certainly not make much of a living if all contracts could be stated in very simple terms. But this is the sort of thing these men were asked to sign.

Furthermore—I do not know if this condition still exists—but at the time I was there, when they signed the contract the rate of remuneration they were to get—or the amount of money they were to get—for the specific job they were to perform was not entered in the contract. They signed a contract that was blank on that point. That was entered afterwards—arbitrarily. There was no negotiated rate at all, although these men are ostensibly independent contractors. Moreover, most of them told me that they did not have copies of the contracts they signed. Each contract is stated to have been signed in triplicate, but the men did not get copies of it.

These men were required under their contracts—this is all set forth there, I will not inflict any more of the wording of this contract upon the hon. members of the House, but it is all set forth there—they were required to provide everything for themselves. Not only were they required to provide tools, but their own living accommodation and everything else. They were not men with capital resources behind them, they were just ordinary working men.

They were not able to provide proper living conditions. The conditions under which some of them lived were absolutely disgraceful; but it was the best they could do. They could not afford the capital investment necessary to establish a proper bush camp.

I understand that after this matter became a subject of considerable controversy—after I raised it last August, and after the commission had stated that there was nothing in my statement at all—they subsequently relaxed a rule they had and permitted these men to enter Hydro camps if they wished.

When I was there, these men were not even allowed to go into the Hydro camp. In one location there was a well-kept Hydro camp and right beside it, across a mud-hole, there was a slum where the slashers lived and they were not allowed into the camp. I understand that this has been changed and those who want to go into the camp may do so.

But I would submit to the hon. Minister that this whole approach to the employment of labour—and that is really what it is—is a wrong approach. It is strictly phoney to suggest that men, who are ordinary working men doing manual labour without any significant capital resources behind them, are independent contractors in any meaningful sense of the word. They are employees.

This device of making them legally independent contractors, and making them enter into this type of contract, is an age-old device for exploiting them. The employer thereby escapes legitimate obligations to them. They are unprotected and unable to defend themselves and the employer is able to take advantage of them in any way he sees fit.

I am ashamed to say that, according to my observations, this great public utility of Ontario, the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, was taking advantage of these men—and for all I know may still be doing so—in a most disgraceful manner and, furthermore, it permitted other people to take advantage of them, particularly a merchant in Kapuskasing who was really taking them for a ride, because—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Have they got their workmen's compensation?

Mr. Bryden: I really could not say. I would say that technically they would not be under The Workmen's Compensation Act. My impression is that Hydro has covered them for purposes of workmen's compensation. As far as I know, they are not covered for unemployment insurance, but I could be wrong. If I am wrong, the hon. Minister will no doubt correct me.

An hon. member: What about their union?

Mr. Bryden: That is really the basic point—and it is an old, old dodge—you make people independent contractors and they are no longer employees within the meaning of The Labour Relations Act. Therefore it is impossible for them to get the protection of that Act and almost impossible for them to organize, whether they want to or not.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Let us be fair, that is the way they want to work.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I was going to come to that. I thought it would be the hon. Minister who would tell me that, rather than the hon. member for Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: He knows a lot about the area, that is why.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, I know he knows a lot about the area and I happen to know a little bit about labour conditions too, having spent most of my life working on labour matters.

It has been my experience in dealing with labour matters that whenever there is a group of men who are being exploited, the employer will always say that they want to be exploited. He will even get them to sign statements to the effect that they want to be exploited, and that they are perfectly happy at their jobs.

They often sign such statements. Sometimes it may be a matter of pressure, not necessarily consciously exercised by an employer, and sometimes it may be simply that they do not know any better. These are the conditions under which they have always worked and they consider them as normal.

But I submit that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission should not take advantage of people in this way. When it wants to hire men to work in the bush, it should provide proper living accommodation for them and, according to my observations, proper living accommodation can be provided only in organized camps which these men could not possibly provide for themselves. Furthermore, Hydro should not resort to this type of device.

I can quite agree that in this kind of work it may be necessary to have some kind of a piece rate or incentive rate—some sort of a rate for a particular job so that the employee will get so much for doing a specific amount and can do the job quickly or slowly as he sees fit. That sort of principle for establishing remuneration may be quite necessary in this kind of work where close supervision is not possible. In other words, I certainly do not suggest that these men should be put on hourly rates and then sent out to the bush and told to go and clear a certain section of bush.

Certainly on matters of remuneration some sort of incentive or piecework system would undoubtedly be in order. But that is a matter than can be taken care of within the normal employer-employee relationship. It is not necessary to make independent contractors, so-called, of these men, in order to provide a specific system of remuneration. The effect of the device of making them independent contractors is that they are deprived of all sorts of other rights and protections which properly belong to an employee.

I have already made public statements on this issue. I will not belabour it any further now. I would merely suggest to the hon. Minister that the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission should reconsider its policy, wherever it is in effect, of treating what are really ordinary employees as independent contractors and thereby escaping obligation towards them.

Hydro—of all employers in this province—should be a model employer. It should not in any way help to perpetuate some of those terrible conditions that at one time existed in the bush. It should be providing better conditions, if anything. If it still is continuing with the device of treating certain employees as independent contractors, I submit that in its responsibility to the public of this province it should cease that practice. It is an undesirable practice that should be abolished, and Hydro should be the first to abolish it.

That, Mr. Chairman, I would like to leave with the hon. Minister for his consideration. I know there are all sorts of arguments that can be put up on the other side. But when we get down to brass tacks, none of them holds water. The basic fact is that in all essentials these people are employees and should be treated as employees. And an employer like Hydro should be a good employer and ought to give them good treatment.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Might I just make reference to this point that has been raised by the hon. member for Woodbine? I will come back to it when I ultimately deal with all of the questions that have been asked of me, but I would just like to say a couple of words in connection with it so that these two matters—both sides—can perhaps appear at the same time.

The hon. member has said that any employer can obtain statements favourable to the employer by applying indirect or direct pressure, but I would just like to draw to the attention of the House a few statements which were reported in the Toronto Daily Star on September 6, 1960, as a result of questions put by a reporter to certain men.

John Landry said to the Daily Star reporter: "I have been with Hydro for 5 years. I am well satisfied."

Andre Normandeau said: "I got no interest in any strike or any union, I get good money."

Joseph Roy said: "The union should mind its own business, not mine."

Eugene Brazeau said: "The union is just trying to cause trouble where there isn't any."

Pat Cataford added: "I have a contract to cut wood, I am not quitting."

And Alonso Drouin said: "Would I stay 20 years with Hydro if I did not like it?"

Now, those are not the employer's statements, they are statements in reply to questions asked by a reporter of men on the job.

In relation to a couple of points which the hon. member has made as to the status of these people, I will come back and deal with the specific charges at a later time, or perhaps today, but whenever I rise to answer these questions generally.

In terms of status, the labour relations board of Ontario in February, 1959, ruled that the slashers were individual contractors and not employees within The Labour Relations Act. As far as their remuneration is concerned, they can make up to something in the neighbourhood of $20 to $30 a day, and $150 a week is not uncommon.

As far as the satisfaction of the employees is concerned, the labour turnover has been very low and these contracts have been eagerly sought. There has been no illness this year and, as far as we are concerned, these slashers are fine, rugged, independent individuals, mostly of French-Canadian origin. They want to do work this way, and if they want to do work this way that is the way we are going to work with them.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: As I have said, that is the kind of answer one always gets from an employer who is exploiting labour. I would like to make one or two comments on what the hon. Minister has said.

Hydro has cited the tremendous amounts of money these men are making. I would point out, first of all, that the amounts stated are gross and out of them the men have to pay all expenses incurred on the job.

Hydro is not responsible for anything, not even providing a nail, as one man said.

Furthermore, I saw a good many of their invoices—I certainly did not see all of them, but I saw a good many—and I was not able to find one case where men were getting the sort of remuneration that the hon. Minister has just stated.

I am not saying there are not any such cases, but certainly there are a great many others where the rate of remuneration and the net amount the man gets is quite low indeed—I would say disgracefully low.

With respect to the hon. Minister's reference to the Toronto Daily Star, I was not going to raise this matter but, now that it has been raised, I might as well speak about it.

The Toronto Daily Star muffed this story. They were scooped by the Toronto Telegram. There was a Toronto Daily Star reporter sitting up there and I am not holding him responsible in any way, but his city desk muffed the story.

The Toronto Telegram scooped the Toronto Daily Star on this story, even though the Star had the story at exactly the same time as the Telegram—I gave it to both simultaneously. The Star took the attitude of trying to pooh-pooh the story, since it was a Telegram story.

An hon. member: Oh, no, no.

Mr. Bryden: This is the way our great news agencies work. If one fellow gets a scoop, the other fellow has to kill it or try to get another scoop.

So they went up, and they interviewed 5 people, and out of the very substantial number of men working there, they found 5 whom they could quote to pooh-pooh the story—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I quoted 6 to the hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: Well, 6 then, 5 or 6, out of a very large number—I could quote to the hon. Minister all sorts of men there who gave me entirely different stories.

The Telegram quoted men who gave their reporter all sorts of different stories, so the hon. Minister is really in pretty bad shape if, in this situation, he has to rely on the Toronto Daily Star to bolster his weak case.

However, I will make a deal with him if he—

Interjections by some hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: If the hon. Minister wants to rely on what the Toronto Daily Star says on this, I will go along with him if he will agree that he will rely on what the Toronto Daily Star says on all matters respecting Hydro. He has tried to bolster up a weak case with a few statements—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I think the hon. member was—

Mr. Bryden: —obtained from a small proportion of the working force. And, in any working force, I would say that one will always find some men who will make statements of that kind; but if that is the best he can do, I suggest it is very urgent that he should reconsider, and have Hydro reconsider, this antiquated and most undesirable practice.

An hon. member: Will the hon. member let the Toronto Daily Star reporter reply?

Mr. MacDonald: He gets more opportunity than almost anybody.

An hon. member: Yes, the press is not going to be very good from here on in.

Another hon. member: The hon. member did not say anything about proving it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, after the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) a few days ago, I determined in this House I would try to conduct myself as an honourable member. I determined that I would try to accept the sincerity of all hon. members, and try to believe that their comments are given in the spirit of sincerity. After listening to some of the comments which have come from my left I sometimes wonder if these hon. members really believe in anybody.

Several hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: A statement comes out, and even if they are quite willing to report the statements of the press when it suits their purpose, we have these ridiculous statements that when a newspaper makes some observations which do not fall in line with their thinking, then the newspaper was scooped and its staff were bitter.

I am quite willing to agree with the hon. member of the CCF party, but I do not understand him, and I would be glad to be enlightened sometime at his convenience.

Mr. Chairman, the point that I really rose to speak about is that I understand there has been some considerable debate in the House today about the matter of the very substantial amount of money which is being raised by Ontario Hydro, and which has been guaranteed by the Ontario government.

I understand this money is being raised in the form of loans which are floated and sold to the public.

I think we are all aware that many of the industrial leaders in the province of Ontario have been proclaiming—perhaps a better word would be to say they have been complaining—about the increasing rise in the rates of Hydro to industry. I think that as these rates of the cost of Hydro or the cost of electrical energy rise, the only end result can be a discouragement to industry in the capital expansion which is required to ensure economic growth in the province of Ontario.

The question I would like to direct to the hon. Minister is this: I would like to know what basis the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission uses for calculating depreciation of capital expenditures for book purposes. It may be that this information is available to me in some publication that I have not yet seen.

But it seems to me that it might possibly be that, because of this very substantial expansion in the capital cost by Hydro which has been necessary, this unprecedented rate of expansion is such that the cost of depreciating this equipment is having an effect on the cost of Hydro which might be unrealistic. In other words, Mr. Chairman, it may be they are amortizing the repayment of this capital cost at too rapid a rate. Thus the end result would be a considerable increase in the cost of Hydro to the industrial users.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Would the hon. member permit me to say it is done on a 40-year basis?

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, like some hon. members of the House, I do not pretend to be an expert on everything, and it may be that this rate is very realistic. I am merely suggesting to the hon. Minister that possibly even 40 years might be too short a time to amortize the cost of this capital expansion.

I think we are all aware of the fact that the unemployment situation which exists in Ontario today and in Canada today is a very real problem. I am sure that every hon. member of the House is genuinely concerned with this unemployment, and I am only suggesting that possibly, if there was some way of finding a method of supplying Hydro to these industrial users at a lower rate, it might stimulate this capital expansion which is necessary for the economic growth of the province.

I think the hon. Minister, in stating that the time of amortization is 40 years, has more or less taken the sense out of the next question I had intended to ask, but perhaps he would clarify it for the record.

Would the hon. Minister tell us whether or not these Hydro bonds which are floated are self-liquidating?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, they are. The rate charged for power is calculated to retire the debt in 40 years.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, Mr. Chairman, my point in rising was merely to put this thought before the hon. Minister. I am concerned about the unemployment situation. I am concerned about the fact that industry tell us today they are thinking of moving to other areas because of the lower costs of power, and I felt that anything which the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission could do to lower these rates might be of advantage.

The hon. leader of the CCF party (Mr. MacDonald) stated that industry should stand on its own feet, and that any change would automatically result in a higher rate to domestic users. I am not advocating that the rate to domestic users be increased, but I would also like to know from the hon. Minister what basis is used to calculate the division between the cost of industrial power and the cost of domestic power.

What is the yardstick used? How do they break down the amount of the cost that is attributable to industry as opposed to the domestic market?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am sure the hon. member is not finished, but if I may, I will say just this: In Hansard he will find either last year or the year before—I think two years ago perhaps—a speech that I gave on how rates are calculated. It ran for nearly an hour and a half, but it is a very complicated subject, and if the hon. member would like to have a look at that, and if it does not answer all his questions—and it very well may not—I would be happy to discuss this with him.

In fact, if he would like to come in some time, I would be happy to discuss it with him, and I will also speak about it here in the House. But may I make one comment? The cost of power to industrial users is based upon the exact cost of laying the power down to the industrial user.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: It would seem to me, as a layman, that the cost of laying the power down from the source to the industrial user would be made up in part by these transmission lines which would in turn service both the domestic and industrial markets. Now, I am asking, is it broken down on a proportionate basis?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: That is correct, yes.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: In other words, it is calculated on a pro rata consumption of the total power that you use?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, I could give the hon. member an example. This is not a good example, but let us say we had a streetcar running from the top to the bottom of Toronto; and it cost $100 to carry the streetcar down; and it had 8 employees or passengers of industry on it; and it had 92 passengers of municipalities on it; then he would have some idea of the proportion that the municipal employees would have to pay of the $100.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: Well, I just want to make one other comment, Mr. Chairman, and that is this: As a layman, it seems to me difficult to understand the method which is used in Ontario in the calculation of depreciation.

It seems to me that when it is a business corporation such as the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, we do have a sensible, systematic method of depreciation. Yet when it comes to the assets of the province in another form, such as roads, public buildings and the like, we do not seem to have a consistent method of depreciating those assets in the same manner as we do for the Crown corporations.

It seems to me that possibly the hon. Minister could take a serious look at this, and possibly give some thought to increasing the time of depreciation allowed for capital assets in the hydro-electric system so as to, I would hope, bring the cost of hydro down to the user in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would just point this out to the hon. member. He and I are both struggling in a similar sea.

These are very involved things and they are hard for a layman to understand. But I would draw to his attention the fact that when an asset of Ontario Hydro is depreciated, the depreciation is reinvested into plant, and when it is reinvested into plant it simply means that you do not have to borrow to buy the plant in which it is reinvested. Therefore, you do not have to be paying interest on the borrowing, so the net effect on the rate can very well be the same.

However, the point of the hon. member is well made, and I will speak about it.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks in regard to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

First of all I want to join with the previous hon. members who complimented the hon. Minister for the way he made his presentations yesterday and last evening.

I do think he is one of the hon. Ministers who have a very great grasp of their departments, and he does go into great detail in trying to bring to the House the problems that confront development in the province at the present time.

Now I know that the hour is getting late, Mr. Chairman, but there are a few subjects that I would like to talk about.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I would not want, and I know the hon. Prime Minister would not want, and the hon. House leader at the moment would not want, the hon. member to cut his remarks short. I shall not be able to reply today to all of the comments that have been raised; in which case when it comes time to adjourn, I will adjourn the debate and we will continue it on another occasion.

So would the hon. member please say what he would like to say? In short, do not hurry it.

Mr. Manley: Thank you.

One of the first things that I want to touch upon, and the hon. Minister mentioned it last evening, is the project going on at Hawkesbury. He did say that they did look at the former agreement, and the possibility of changing that particular agreement, but they came to the conclusion that it was better to go ahead with the agreement as drawn up some 17 years ago.

I did notice in the great French-Canadian paper that covers the eastern part of the province, Le Droit, an article reporting a meeting that took place last Thursday evening in Hawkesbury—and I am sure that the hon. Minister of Public Welfare from Prescott (Mr. Cecile) would know more about this than I do—where some 200 citizens attended, with the municipal council and Mr. Harry Hustler, representative of Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Hustler said that evening that they were going to proceed with expropriation, that the land could not be salvaged. Now, whenever we talk about expropriations, Mr. Chairman, I think it is a word that the majority of citizens fear. I think that I can speak with a little experience from my own area because we have gone through that procedure and we are going through it at the present time.

Mr. Hustler made the remark, according to the report I have here, that there would be a fair and equitable price put on those properties.

I am wondering just what the people in Hawkesbury think a fair and equitable price would be for their properties. We must realize, Mr. Chairman, that whenever we have a project of this kind hanging over a community for a period of 15, 16, 17 years, properties that are going to be involved certainly do not have a comparable value to properties in other communities.

I know the area quite well. I have been in Hawkesbury a number of times, and while some of those properties from the outside do not look maybe as good as they might if this project was not hanging over them, still the inside of those homes are comparable with some of the latest and most modern homes anywhere in the province.

Whenever we talk of market value plus forceful taking, I do not think such could really be considered a fair and equitable price. I do not know what Hydro is going to consider as fair and equitable in the Hawkesbury district, but I do want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the hon. Minister, that I think if those people are going to sacrifice their homes and their property, then they must have something in the form of replacement value.

One of the questions as reported in the paper last evening was that if any of those buildings were going to be moved to another site, people there would want to know well in advance when it was going to be done.

Another thing I think concerns us all is that if there is going to be a rehabilitation programme of this kind, then the people should be protected. The land around should not be gobbled up by people who are in the business of acquiring land and developing it for sites and for lots.

That is all I am going to say about Hawkesbury at the moment.

I want to pass on to the problem that the hon. Minister mentioned yesterday when he referred to me, and that is the Ingleside shoreline that we heard so much about in the Legislature on other occasions.

I want to say to the hon. Minister that I am very thankful, as the member for Stormont, that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission saw fit to improve this shoreline. I have been there and they are endeavouring to do a good job.

But I wonder sometimes why it takes persistence and needling before necessary work like this is undertaken.

I well remember whenever I brought it up in the Legislature here before that the hon. Minister said that it could not be done. But after all I think that if there is a will there is a way, and this has been demonstrated in this particular case.

Of course, we have had a great development in Seaway valley, and I think the hon. Minister should tell the House, whenever he is making his reply, how many final settlements have been made in Seaway valley and how many of those people who have been moved to new townsites have the deeds to their properties. I think this is very important. If they have not got the deeds to the properties, just what is the reason? I think it is something which concerns this House and it concerns the people of the province as well.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister was very accurate in giving his summary of the department yesterday, and I listened quite attentively to him. But I do not know whether he mentioned to the House the fact that they applied to the national energy board for permits to export power out of the province. I have the clipping before me here at this time, Mr. Chairman, and I would like to read a little of it. This is from the November 7 edition of the Toronto Globe and Mail. It reads:

Ontario is asking the national energy board for licences under the new policy of the government. Instead of granting export licences on a one-year basis the board is asking to export power on a long-term basis.

The Ontario utility asked for a licence to export interruptible power to the Detroit Edison Company, Niagara Mohawk Corporation, and the power authority of New York state. This application sets a limit, in any one-year period, of 7 billion kwh.

Quite a sizeable amount of power!

In a second application, Ontario Hydro asked for a licence to export firm power to the Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation in New York state. It asked permission to transmit up to 394.2 million kwh in any consecutive 12-month period. The licences would expire December 31, 1965.

In the hon. Minister's remarks yesterday, Mr. Chairman, he did say that we were not able to produce enough power in Ontario to provide the wants of the citizens of this province.

What concerns me, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that we have in eastern Ontario, in the city of Cornwall, one of the greatest unemployment situations that can be found anywhere in the province.

According to this very illustrious report that was put on our desks a few days ago—put out by The Department of Economics of this province—it looks as if we are going to have an increase of population in eastern Ontario, and I am just wondering what is going to take place. The city of Cornwall at the present time is being supplied with power by two private companies. The one is the St. Lawrence Power Company and the other is the Cornwall Street Railway, Light and Power Company.

In addition to the Cornwall Street Railway, Light and Power Company furnishing power to the city of Cornwall, it also provides a freight service and it has contributed a great deal to industry in the city of Cornwall. It delivers freight from the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am sorry, I missed the name the hon. member said.

Mr. Manley: It is the Cornwall Street Railway, Light and Power Company.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Thank you.

Mr. Manley: They transport freight from the yards of both the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railways to the different industries, and likewise transport goods from one industry to another. Now, those companies have informed the city of Cornwall—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Do they cross the river, too?

Mr. Manley: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Does that line cross over the bridge there? Does it cross the river on the old bridge?

Mr. Manley: I would not be sure whether that is right or not.

Those companies informed the city a couple of years ago that if there was any great increase in population of the city of Cornwall, that they were just about exhausted as far as their supply of power was concerned, and that they would not be able to fulfill the needs of the city. In addition to that, if any secondary industries came in, we would be in a very bad position as far as hydro to those industries is concerned.

I was wondering, Mr. Chairman, what the situation is going to be, or what the policy is going to be, because those companies did approach Hydro, and the city of Cornwall approached Hydro, and they were told that it was their policy that they could not sell power to private companies. The only way in which Cornwall can increase their supply of power would be to set up a public utility commission. In that way they could secure power from Ontario Hydro.

Here are two companies with all the facilities to provide the power. It is a sad day, indeed, if those companies cannot purchase the additional power they need to provide those services to the city of Cornwall with which the citizens are satisfied, as was demonstrated by their vote Monday last to extend those companies' franchise for another 3 years.

If Ontario Hydro is able to grant a permit—and I do not know if a permit has been granted or not; I hope the hon. Minister will tell us—to export power to the power authority of the state of New York, then I think that Hydro should do likewise for the area in which this great development has taken place. Hydro has refused to do that; they say it has all to go into the grid.

The power authority of the state of New York set aside a block of power and we see industry coming into that area. It is building up that little hamlet of Massena into a city.

So I do think there is discrimination against the city of Cornwall and eastern Ontario—and we have heard the hon. Prime Minister say so often that this is the gateway into this great province—and I think that not enough attention has been paid to the people in that area that did so much—sacrificed so much—in order to make this project possible.

This is something I would like the hon. Minister to comment on.

There are other things in regard to Hydro, and to the situation in that particular part of the province which I represent, into which I will go a little later.

I wanted to make those few comments at this time and I will be interested to know how the hon. Minister feels on some of the points I have brought before him.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I am going to be brief. I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. From time to time, in the rural areas, there are buildings being moved from one area to the other.

Of course, before these buildings can be moved, the district Hydro office has to be contacted, together with the local Hydro office, and the Bell Telephone Company.

It has been brought to my attention that the occupiers of the buildings were told that there were charges made for looking after the wires and the moving of the building. So, when the building is moved, they receive notice of the charges, and it has been indicated to me that the charges which have been made by the Ontario Hydro office to the individual or to the owner are 3 times as great as those of the Bell Telephone Company.

I would like to know if the schedule of charges is arranged here in the head office at Toronto, or whether the local Hydro office sets out the charge?

It has also been brought to my attention that Ontario Hydro is owned by the people, and yet they charge us 3 times as much as the other company, the Bell Telephone Company.

I would like the hon. Minister to look into this and see if he could give me an answer.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Could my hon. friend tell me? I had some correspondence with an hon. member of this House on this very subject and discussed with him why the costs were different from the Bell Telephone. But my correspondence was not with the hon. member, is that correct?

Mr. Spence: No, it was not with me; but it was in my area.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: No, but did I not have any correspondence with the hon. member directly on this point?

Mr. Spence: The hon. Minister may have sent a letter in this regard, but it was not to me—yes, I believe it was through me that the letter was written.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, it was a 3- or 4-page letter to explain why there is no comparison between the lifting of Hydro wires and telephone wires. In fact, the letter pointed out just the number of angle wires, the number of anchors, and the number of brackets and so on, that had to be raised, and pointed out the hourly rate that it was calculated on and so forth.

But this may not have been the letter that went to the hon. member. I will look it up.

In any event, would it be possible for the hon. member to tell me in relation to which building this is? We have requests to—

Mr. Spence: In the Highgate area.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Pardon me?

Mr. Spence: It is in the Highgate area, in the township of Oxford, the county of Kent.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Can the hon. member tell me what building it was that was desired to be moved and down what highway?

Mr. Spence: Well, I cannot tell the hon. Minister the road offhand, but I can give him—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Would the hon. member be kind enough to send it to me?

Mr. Spence: Yes, I will.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Thank you.

Mr. Spence: I would like to know if these charges are uniform over the province?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Yes, they are. But I will get the details for my hon. friend, and if it was him with whom I had correspondence I will get out the file. If it was not, I will get the information for him.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, like everyone else apparently who has been on his feet this afternoon, I have a little bit of criticism to make towards the policies which Hydro is following. Before I enlarge on this I would like to go through some material which will, I think, more or less prove my point.

At the beginning of the last session I came down to see Mr. James Duncan, chairman of Hydro, and had a talk to him about the situation we faced up in the northern part of my riding around the village of Upsala where they need hydro very badly. Also there is a 100-mile stretch there which I think should have access to hydro because it is a section of the trans-Canada highway. This is very important.

Now, I was told by Mr. Duncan, of course, in the first instance that I had a good case. But after he thought it over and wrote me a 3-page letter, I found out that my case was not so good because if power is to be secured by any area, the people in that area must use enough power so that the capital cost is returned over a reasonable period. I understand that it is all based on the idea of making the thing pay.

Another instance: Mr. Lloyd Campbell, who works in an area east of Shebandowan, where he has a gas station, approached me claiming that there are 200 people in the area who are very anxious to get hydro. The same problem came up. Because of the fact that there were not sufficient users he was denied the access to power lines which were actually very close to where his buildings are located.

Now, in the third instance, I have here a letter which I would like to read:

November 26, 1960

DEAR MR. CHAPPLE:

I am enclosing herewith a petition for hydro signed by property owners and renters from Kashabowie. This list is not complete as to tenants and property owners but it is a start. We are all very anxious to have hydro, and I believe you will appreciate the fact that most anyone does need hydro.

Our community has increased in the past year due to the Coldstream copper mine. With this increase there comes a sanitary problem. If we had hydro here much of this could be eliminated.

Mr. Jaipolos, the bearer, has been selected by us to appeal to you and to ask that you, as our member of Parliament for the district of Thunder Bay, help us to live better electrically.

I believe the hon. Minister has heard that term before.

If there is anything else which must be done in order for you to go ahead on this project, you may contact the writer of this letter by phoning Burchell Lake 918 or by post, Kashabowie post office, Ontario.

We are all counting on you, please help us.

Yours truly,

(signed)

(Mrs.) EMILY MANDELL.

Now here is the covering letter which I received:

MR. JOHN CHAPPLE, MPP
PAIPOONE, ONTARIO.

DEAR SIR:

It is most unfortunate that I do not have the opportunity to meet you in person as per the personal letter enclosed. However, as the matter is somewhat of a pressing nature, I am taking the liberty of approaching you in this manner.

Mrs. Mandell's letter sets out our position so that there is not a great deal that I can add to it, other than to say that Hydro has been approached on the subject matter, but they have expressed the view that the distance from their nearest feeder line is too great, and the project for that reason is not sound economically speaking.

This may well be so, but possibly the matter is worthy of further study when the welfare of the local citizenry is considered.

In view of the request that is being made, you may be sure that anything you may be able to accomplish in the matter will certainly be appreciated.

(signed)

SOLOMON JAIPOLOS.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): May I say to my hon. friend, Mr. Chairman, that I am sure this matter will be answered by the hon. Minister shortly.

I would like to adjourn this discussion at this time, sir, and accordingly, if my hon. friend has further comments to make we will adjourn the debate.

Mr. Chapple moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment I would like to revert to orders of the day so that the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) could refer to the question asked by one of the hon. members.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, when the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) asked a question this morning I said that I did not have the complete answer, and I gave a partial answer and undertook that I would follow it further.

Now I have received additional information through inquiries through Ontario provincial police sources.

I am advised that the particular strike that was referred to has been in progress since October 24, 1960, and about 100 employees are involved—or rather there are 100 employees of which about 80 are on strike.

On Tuesday, December 6, so I am informed here, the company hired one man of Barnes Investigation Bureau Limited, and he took an employee into the plant in his Barnes automobile and remained in the plant the remainder of the day. The Barnes agency was not used, so I am instructed, prior to December 6, and has not been used since that date.

The head office of the Barnes agency in Montreal has today advised its Toronto office that its men are not to be used in connection with it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, I again point out that on Monday there will be a night session and we deal with the resolution standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Sutton). If there is any further time on Monday we probably will use that in connection with the Throne debate.

On Tuesday we shall deal with the estimates of The Department of Economics and also the Throne debate, plus items which are on the order paper, such as private bills. I think perhaps we will try to fit in one of the private members' bills or resolutions at that time.

Regarding the other estimates, if at all possible, we will deal with the estimates of The Department of Mines on Thursday. One of the purposes is this: Mr. Rickaby, the Deputy Minister, who is a very valued employee of the government, retires and it might be nice to deal with the estimates while he is still here.

Now that might not be possible, but if there are changes I will let hon. members know. The objective is however, that we would deal with the estimates of The Department of Mines on Thursday, as things stand at the moment.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Prime Minister advise us whether or not it is his intention to finish the estimates of The Department of Energy Resources before starting on some other department?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, the difficulty is this. The estimates of The Department of Energy Resources, as such, are actually passed. What we are dealing with is an item which is more or less informally related to Hydro.

The hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) is going to be away for several days next week and I do not know if it is going to be practical to call that again. If it is, it would be certainly towards the end of the week.

It may be that this will have to stand over to the renewed session in January. Although I will do my best, I think he would agree that it would not be reasonable to go ahead without the hon. Minister being here.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister would care to tell us the date that we might expect to come back in January.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I have given this some consideration, sir, and I think the best would be to adjourn the sittings at the call of the Speaker. Now, as a matter of fact there is nothing to be gained in bringing the hon. members here a week early or a week late. This matter will clarify itself over the New Year period, and we can give the hon. members sufficient notice, probably 10 days' notice, of the reconvening of the session.

On Friday, a week from today, we might adjourn to say January 17 or January 24—actually speaking it is only guesswork as to whether that is a date which is going to fit in with the work of the House. Much depends upon what date the budget can be brought down.

For that reason, I think it would be best to adjourn to a date at the call of the Speaker which then would allow the date to be fixed by order-in-council in plenty of time.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): May I ask a question? Is it hoped that the speech from the Throne debate will be concluded before the adjournment?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not think so. No. I do not think we should rush that. It gives the opportunity for hon. members to speak, and I do not want to reduce the orders on the order papers which would give them a full opportunity of speaking. I think, therefore, even if we were through it might be better to carry the item over on the order paper to the beginning of the renewed session.

But I would say this to my hon. friend. I think we should dispose of it this year before the budget address.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Will the hon. Prime Minister say that the House is not likely to come back before a certain date? That would help some of us to make some future plans.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will tell the hon. members about that next week. I will have to think that one over.

Mr. Thomas: The House will adjourn on the Friday and then the announcement of the opening will be made in the fullness of time?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say, in the ordinary course, that if the House adjourned on Friday we should, by the beginning of the year, be able to send out the notices under the name of the Speaker for the reconvening of the session. However, I will try to accommodate the House and not leave it up in the air, but I think hon. members will agree that if we say we will meet on January 24, for instance, it might be a week later than we might be able to meet. As a matter of fact it might be a week too early, and there is not any use in inconveniencing the hon. members that way.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1960

2 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome, as guests, members of the Nelson high school student parliament.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. W. G. Noden, from the standing committee on standing orders, presents the committee's second report and moves its adoption.

Your committee has carefully examined the following petitions, and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

Of the corporation of the city of Niagara Falls and the township of Stamford, praying that an Act may pass authorizing the establishment of the Greater Niagara transit commission.

Of the corporation of the city of Peterborough, praying that an Act may pass enlarging the Peterborough public utilities commission and providing for its election and term of office.

Of the corporation of the city of London, praying that an Act may pass authorizing by-laws to regulate laundromats and so on; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the township of Calvert, praying that an Act may pass authorizing a debenture issue for school construction.

For the establishment of the Reuben Edwin Cleghorn foundation.

Of the public utilities commission of the corporation of the city of Sault Ste. Marie, praying that an Act may pass authorizing a new pension plan for its employees.

Of the Sault Ste. Marie board of education, praying that an Act may pass authorizing a new pension plan for its employees.

Of the Young Men's Christian Association of Sault Ste. Marie and Steelton, praying that an Act may pass changing its name to The Young Men's Christian Association of Sault Ste. Marie, exempting certain of its lands from taxation other than for local improvements; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Ottawa, praying that an Act may pass establishing an active treatment hospital, or convalescent hospital, or both in the city of Ottawa; and for related purposes.

Of the corporation of the city of Toronto, praying that an Act may pass providing for instalment collection of taxes, validating a grant to the tunnel tragedy fund; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the county of Ontario, praying that an Act may pass confirming by-law 2057 of the corporation for the purpose of assisting local municipalities in the county in granting aid to public hospitals.

Of the corporation of the Capuchin Fathers of Ottawa, praying that an Act may pass reincorporating it as The Capuchin Fathers of Ontario and defining its powers.

Of the incorporated synod of the diocese of Algoma (Anglican), praying that an Act may pass incorporating Thorneloe university, having power to federate with another or other universities, either church-related or non-denominational.

Of the corporation of the city of Peterborough, praying that an Act may pass permitting the corporation to order the removal or demolition of premises closed by order of the medical officer of health, under section 97 of The Public Health Act, when circumstances warrant such action.

Of the corporation of the city of Hamilton, praying that an Act may pass authorizing the regulation of the manufacture, transport and storage of dangerous gases, liquids and substances; and for other purposes.

Of the corporation of the town of Cochrane, praying that an Act may pass authorizing a debenture issue for high school construction.

Of the corporation of the township of St. Joseph, praying that an Act may pass authorizing a debenture issue for high school construction.

Of the corporation of the city of Chatham, praying that an Act may pass ratifying an agreement with J. I. DeNure, Chatham, Limited, for a bus franchise.

Your committee recommends that the petition of the corporation of the city of Chatham, praying that an Act may pass ratifying an agreement with J. I. DeNure, Chatham, Limited, for the granting of a bus franchise, be received notwithstanding the provisions of rule 63 of the assembly.

Your committee further recommends that as the petition of the corporation of the city of Sarnia is withdrawn, the fees less the cost of printing be remitted.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

SYNOD OF TORONTO AND KINGSTON GLEN MHOR CAMP

In the absence of Mr. L. Letherby, Mr. Cowling moves second reading of Bill No. Pr32, "An Act respecting the synod of Toronto and Kingston Glen Mhor camp."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

ON RESOLUTION RE UNEMPLOYMENT (Continued)

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, when I adjourned the debate last week on the eleventh order, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and I were in some disagreement as to what should be said. I think we had a good rest over the weekend, so that probably we can get along with this motion today and complete my submission, particularly as it affects northern and northwestern Ontario.

The substance of the motion, Mr. Speaker, and the relevant clause, begins:

THAT in view of mounting world competition and its effects on industry, particularly secondary industry, with its incidence of unemployment,

BE IT RESOLVED THAT, while trade and commerce are within the competence of the federal Parliament, every effort be made in every sector of the provincial economy to co-operate with federal departments, —and so on. I was attempting, prior to the adjournment of the debate last week, Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate how co-operation with some of the federal departments was very difficult at this time under the political philosophies and attitudes prevalent at Ottawa today. This weekend, during the interim between the adjournment of the debate and today, some events happened which are of serious consequence to the economy, and consequently to employment, in northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, the people of northern and northwestern Ontario are visibly disturbed, after weekend pronouncements by the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) and others.

Speaking at Fredericton, he said, and I quote from a Canadian Press dispatch:

The current imbalance of trade with the United States could not go on, and there was a very great need for increased export to the United States. The United States should realize that an increase in purchase of Canadian goods is necessary.

Now that is what the Rt. hon. Prime Minister said.

But, then, in the very next breath, other hon. members of the Canadian government state categorically that Canada is eager to boost trade with Cuba in the face of United States economic reprisals against that country.

It is all very well to state, Mr. Speaker, that trade is a federal matter; but, when Ottawa pronouncements affect Canada, they affect Ontario to a very great degree because we are the nation's leading industrial province. Northern Ontario is particularly anxious when her gold, iron ore, nickel, pulp and paper, and other resources products are sold almost entirely in the United States.

If it should become necessary that the United States attempt any economic reprisals against Canada—and what, today, is not military material?—northern Ontario would feel the first catastrophic impact of any action of that kind.

Naturally, two people living side by side will have disagreements—it happens in the best regulated families—but when a friend is in peril, or believes himself to be in peril, from a dangerous force without, it is time, then, to act as a friend.

If the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada wants more ghost towns like Sudbury, the Lakehead, Atikokan, Fort Frances, Kenora, Red Lake and others, then let his government continue to boast that he will trade with real or imagined enemies of our friend.

Even as a Congressional committee in the United States, long before this Cuban thing boiled out, was studying the possibility of imposing tariffs on our iron ore—which, as my hon. friend from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope) will agree, is a future lifeblood of our northern economy—we have a government at Ottawa not even content to be quiet about these things.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it would be a real price to pay for a few millions in trade with Cuba if, in doing it, we lose a friend. I suggest also that, if the government of Canada wants to kill northern Ontario's economy, I can think of no better way of doing it.

In this debate, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that there are 3 essential economic problems—aside from those of the national political character—which face us.

First of all, it seems to me that areas with more than two per cent of unemployment over the national average should be declared distress areas, and special measures employed in the economy of those areas.

Secondly, we must determine whether this is a temporary recession or a general recession.

And, thirdly, we must establish what we believe to be a desirable economic growth factor for the province and for Canada, and then work on the possibility of its attainment.

In respect of my first submission, there are areas in northern Ontario where we have distress situations both declared and undeclared. I would submit that Elliot Lake and the Lakehead area are two prime examples, where a simple upturn of business or a crash programme of public works would achieve no permanent solution.

Rather early in 1960, unemployment at the Lakehead reached the unprecedented level of 20 per cent of the work force, according to a survey prepared by the mayor-elect and council of the city of Fort William, and supported by statistics from the unemployment insurance commission.

So far, the seaway has had no appreciable effect on the Lakehead business index, and the absence of a completed trans-Canada highway to the Manitoba border has focused transfer of western goods to Duluth, on to the western tip of Lake Superior and to the western States and western Canada. Our combined lake and highway policy has been both too little and too late.

I recall, at a meeting in Fort William many months ago, the hon. former Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko) assuring the people there that a reciprocal truck licensing agreement with the west was in the immediate offing, and that as quickly as he could get back in an aeroplane from the west he would land and tell the people the results.

I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that the airport at Fort William must have been fogbound ever since, because they are still awaiting the news of these reciprocal truck licensing agreements.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship): Mr. Speaker, it takes two parties to make an agreement; and there is an agreement that has to be signed by the western provinces and Manitoba, as well as Ontario. That is being proceeded with at the present time.

Mr. Wren: I appreciate the hon. Minister's remarks.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): We are very agreeable people.

Mr. Wren: But the hon. Minister, I repeat, assured that the agreements were immediately forthcoming.

A public works project, for example, at the Lakehead, of the magnitude of the one now being carried on in my hon. friend's riding for the new mental hospital, employs but 225 people. The proposed teachers' college will employ a few more but the point I am making is that it is no significant portion of the total unemployed.

The shipbuilding industry, once a great industry, carries on with a fraction of the employment of former years. The general business picture is down, and merchants are complaining and consequently retrenching in hiring and expansion.

The pulp and paper industry faces a somewhat better prospect, though that industry is not operating to capacity and is faced, in its wood operations, with the dire possibility of economic weapons being brought to play in its labour relations. If a strike should occur in our woodlands it would spell serious problems for a host of communities, even though present inventories could keep some of the mills operating for several weeks.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to submit that this area, and others in northern Ontario, be declared areas requiring special attention; and that appropriate action be taken to provide employment immediately for the unskilled and semi-skilled trades and then plans made for stabilization of the economic future of the area.

It goes without saying that this condition is not a temporary matter, and not one to be treated lightly, nor to be treated with expansive oratory. It is a problem which has to be met head-on, by examination of present policy and determination of future policy, to produce jobs and excite business.

To charge anyone with gloom and doom is not an answer at all. The answer to "jobs now and stability in the future" rest with a number of fundamental needs which I shall set forth this afternoon.

For example, two years ago, the Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company, among others, appealed to the 4 hon. members of this House from northwestern Ontario to resist tax increases—applicable to the industry—which would have the effect, not necessarily then but very soon now, of crippling the several pulp and paper companies' contributions to labour relations, to charity and to worthy public projects.

The appeal of the industry was ignored, Mr. Speaker, and I, the member for Kenora, was the only member from northern Ontario—from the Quebec border to the Manitoba border—to vote against this regressive taxation. The vote is recorded in Hansard.

The madness of those increases becomes apparent today, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, even at this late date, I recommend that corporation tax on these industries be reduced to the level of competing industry in Canada.

Secondly, I submit that the logging tax be repealed; thirdly, that the ridiculously high tax on diesel fuel and the tax on aircraft gasoline be removed at once.

Fourthly, I submit that unrealistic trucking regulations imposed by The Department of Transport of Ontario should be removed to permit of the most economic means of transport of the raw material to the mill.

I make these proposals, not in a spirit of carping criticism, but to maintain the job picture in the bush today; and to enable management and labour to bargain collectively for and resolve a reasonable wage picture for employees in the woods, and in the mills, wherever applicable.

I make these proposals to enable our major industry to keep itself competitive in the pulp and paper markets, and to enable it to prepare to fill any increased demands for the product of the mills.

I make these proposals, too, to offer encouragement for new capital to erect new mills in northwestern Ontario; for it is a well-known and well-defined opinion in the newsprint world today that Ontario, under present taxing conditions, present cost of wood, present cost of hydro, would be the last jurisdiction under which new major capital works would be undertaken in the field of pulp and paper.

And I can cite, Mr. Speaker, the example of the industry which has been potentially possible in my own home area of Sioux Lookout for these many years.

They have, as this House well knows, an option on large tracts of land. This terminates, or comes up for renewal, as the case may be, in 1962. Due to a number of factors, among which are the regressive tax policies in the industry today, the company concerned and its affiliates are no nearer to commencing construction of the mill than they were 2 or 3 years ago.

These same general conditions apply to the lumber industry, or the secondary industry, if you want to call it that, in the forests. We have already lost industry and lost jobs through unrealistic tax measures, and unrealistic allocation of raw materials. And it is not beyond expectation that other industries will soon go down the drain unless we move now to maintain, and then increase, both production and employment.

I can cite some examples where, this year, we were fortunate in acquiring new industry in the village of Hudson where I live; where, in that community, a company was able to establish itself. But, in establishing this very welcome industry there, it did not create new jobs nor create new employment, for it took the place of an industry, with like payrolls, that had existed there for many years.

At the same time, due to the non-allocation of timber and other factors, another industry of similar size has since closed down.

The town of Sioux Lookout this year saw the closing of an industry, using raw materials of the forest, which had been in operation there for many years. It had to cease its operations due to the fact that its raw forest material was coming, in the main, from the province of Alberta, instead of from the province of Ontario at its own back door.

Now these policies and attitudes, Mr. Speaker, will have to be resolved, and they will have to be changed.

Another industry—and I will repeat what I said last year about this industry—is the one at the Lakehead known as the Northern Wood Preservers Limited. From the chamber of commerce, and from company officials, I understand they employ an average of something like 250 men the year round.

Now any community in Ontario, or elsewhere in Canada, would be turning hand-springs to get an industry of that size to come into its community or go into its province. And yet this industry, despite repeated promises, cannot secure, even today, more than one year's guarantee of supply of raw materials.

With the difficulties under which an industry like this is operating, it must, of necessity, plan its production, its financing and its marketing—especially in that kind of business—one or two years ahead of time. And I repeat: in spite of repeated promises, there is still, as far as I know, up until a few days ago, no agreement which would give them a long-term, or at least a reasonably long-term, supply of raw material.

Now, industry—

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister of Planning and Development): Who made these promises mentioned by the hon. member?

Mr. Wren: Well, the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, for one, Mr. Speaker. I recall him very well, in a meeting with chamber of commerce groups, and so on—which meet regularly each year here—saying to Mr. Prettie, who is president of the company: “Now, we are going to fix that up, and we are going to see you get a long-term supply of raw material.”

I do not think he could get a promise from a better source.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: We all agree on that.

Mr. Wren: Yes. But he is still waiting for it.

Now, industry, Mr. Speaker, across the north, has been assessed additional Hydro costs. Hydro has failed to fully utilize a reserve fund for that purpose.

These matters the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) is going to discuss later on in the session. But, in this part of my address, I want to say that few stones have been left unturned to discourage, rather than encourage, industry and employment. I will give you one very simple illustration, Mr. Speaker, which has dismayed a lot of people.

Just east of Sioux Lookout is the Sturgeon river. For years, repeated attempts have been made to have a bridge built across this river.

In recent months, the Great Lakes Paper Company, one of the pulp and paper companies operating out of the Lakehead, was considering the employment of quite a sizeable number of people across the river and in timber areas of which they have control, east of the river.

The repeated assertion was that there was no money available to build that bridge, although the same Great Lakes Paper Company had offered to build it for $31,000, and guarantee construction of it.

Now, the access roads committee, I am pleased to say, has agreed to include the building of that bridge in 1961 estimates, at an estimated cost of $115,000.

However, the point I am making is this, Mr. Speaker: Had that bridge been built this summer, or this fall, at the present time 150 to 200 men would be gainfully employed in that area and be self-sustaining.

While the plea was in some quarters that money was hard to come by, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the monies involved in producing a famous publication known as The Road by The Department of Highways would have served a much better purpose in building that bridge and putting people to work.

I want to turn to the mining industry for a moment. Here again is an opportunity to create jobs through realism.

North of Kenora, we need an access road and a hydro line which will produce upwards of 200 new jobs, plus the additional new jobs servicing communities of that size.

This is just one example where men are now being paid $30 a week in either unemployment insurance or welfare, at a cost of $312,000 a year—which is actually about the estimated cost of a hydro line into the area—which the mining companies pay for in any event over agreement years. Yet we have stalled, since about 1957, and nearly $1 million has gone down the drain in payrolls, waiting for moves on these projects.

Now what is going on? Do hon. members realize, Mr. Speaker, that in one year, a payroll of that kind, for 200 men, would produce in income tax alone—based on an average of $80-a-week earnings—some $167,000?

Are we to continue to allow unrealistic estimates of Hydro and others to hold up jobs and hold up tax revenues indefinitely?

In the gold mining industry, they still work on a fixed price of product. I suggest that here again we can make some further tax concessions and spur new development.

And, in view of the impossibility—and I want to emphasize this, Mr. Speaker—in view of the impossibility of men who work in these areas being allowed government mortgages for homes and house building, television facilities, radio facilities and the like, which are the common lot of fellow Canadians elsewhere in Ontario and in Canada, a reduction or a special allowance in personal income tax should be made for them.

In regard to television, I was happy to receive a telegram last night announcing that the board of broadcast governors at Ottawa had approved an application to transmit television programming from the American air force base at Sioux Lookout until such time as the Canadian broadcasting corporation sees its way clear to erect facilities in that area.

This is the first time that television will be available at all—it will be good television—in those northern areas. Areas like Red Lake and I believe even Atikokan and other sections either have no television at all or find it too expensive and impractical to use.

In the matter of mortgages, I do not know when we are going to work out a sensible policy on northern houses. I have talked about it, I have written about it, I have argued about it, discussed it in every way, shape and form with everyone who knows anything about it. I certainly cannot get anywhere and no one else in the field seems to be able to get anywhere, either.

There seems to be an insistence—an absolute insistence—on the part of town planners and community planners—call them what you like—that a man must have a house that is worth twice as much as he can possibly afford, or he cannot have any housing at all.

We have situations in communities in the north where men can build, and have built and do now own, houses costing $2,500 to $3,000. The money is available and the interest is available. The people are needful of the accommodation and cannot get government approval to undertake the building of these houses or even the occupying of those that are built.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that low-cost housing of the type I am talking about is long overdue in these sectors.

In the next submission, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it is a rather general opinion that we are not in for a temporary recession in this country and that we should plan accordingly.

The latest figures in the United States indicate that unemployment there is approaching the 6.4 per cent figure, but they have one advantage we do not have. They have a Liberal-minded president-elect coming to office very soon and he is going to be followed, of course, by a Liberal Prime Minister in Canada. I confidently believe that Kennedy and Pearson together will do as Roosevelt and King did, put this whole continent back on the rails.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, we have to live. We cannot wait until that day which everyone is so patiently waiting for in Canada, until a general election is called. It might not come for some time. I cannot see how we can, as this resolution suggests, co-operate with Ottawa, for they have already "welshed" on one major promise, as this House so well knows—the famous $100 million plus the interest and inflation attached to it.

The studied economic development of northern and northwestern Ontario can be fostered and sustained, not only for its present population, but for thousands more, but it cannot be done by continual promises. It can be done only with action of the kind that will produce jobs. I suggest—in fact, I submit—that only industrial expansion can produce the sustaining kind of employment that is necessary; industrial expansion brought about by the tax climate I have suggested. If we do not produce it, all else will fail.

We are faced here, I suggest, with the difficulties which emerged from the highways investigation. In this case we have not pre-engineered our economics. We have seized on prosperous times to take all the traffic would bear and now we are reaping the harvest, a harvest of misery and apprehension.

One industry in my riding, the Dryden Paper Company, has been in the red for the past few years due to expansion and other activities which have taken place. It faces the keenest competition and with it new demands for wage increases occasioned by increased living costs and other economic forces. Yet we continue to impose these confiscatory taxes which take away the breathing space needed now for the whole of the industry.

Now we come in with panic legislation and panic attitudes. In short, we organize the fire department after the fire has started. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, where is The Department of Economics? I suspect they did not advise, in the first instance, about all these tax increases and impediments, but, of course, we on this side will not know for a year or two.

In support of what I have told the House and before I set up what we believe to be some of the solutions to these problems, I want to point out some support to my thinking—and responsible support it is indeed.

First of all I find the Financial Post using that word the Tories dislike so much, the word "gloom," because in its issue of December 10, on the front page its headline on one item is: "See gloom in '61 for iron ore." It goes on to say:

Canada's iron ore shipments have slumped badly in the last two shipping months as order cancellations from United States steel mills started hitting our producers.

Major producers like Iron Ore Company of Canada, Steep Rock Iron Mines, Algoma Ore Properties, have all been hit by the cutback in United States buying. They now have to cut back their production schedules for the first half of 1961, since ore stock piles at steel mills, Great Lakes ports and mining properties are at the highest level in 5 years. The outlook for 1961 is far from bright.

An article in the Toronto Daily Star of December 9, says:

The dropping American steel production slashed into Iron Ore Company of Canada's sales this autumn and held 1960 shipments to 10 million tons.

This article goes on to relate how we might expect a slump in iron ore shipments during the ensuing year.

This, to my mind, Mr. Speaker, does not pervade this area of gloom and doom which so many people talk about, it just accentuates the necessity for us to plan for the future and plan well.

As I said earlier today, one of the economic sources of the lifeblood of northern Ontario is in the field of iron ore mining. The fact that we might have a poor year in 1961 does not suggest that we cannot get ready for 1962 and 1963 and the years following.

The Fort William Times-Journal on November 24, 1960 says editorially, and I want to register this for the very real information it contains:

Wealth pours from our area. A depressed stock market obviously has no influence on those in the production end of mining in Ontario. The Department of Mines has just announced that minerals brought from the ground in 1959 had a value of close to $1 billion; $980,591,159 to be exact. This was better by $179 million than the previous high of 1958.

Its concluding paragraph says:

The worth of northern Ontario to the province as a whole is made exceedingly clear when it is realized that most of the $1 billion came from properties in the area. Add to this mineral wealth the dollar value of timber operations in northern Ontario and the result justifies the request from this section of the province for more and more services from government.

Earlier in the year, a large number of important papers in northern Ontario had been commenting on the economics and the government apathy in regard to northern Ontario.

On May 26, 1960, the Sudbury Star, in a lengthy editorial, commenting on the death of the late Alex McKenzie, president of the Progressive-Conservative association, had some very significant comments indeed. It says:

In spite of the fact the party—the Conservative party—still holds a substantial majority in the Ontario Legislature, it has passed its peak of popularity. At the next general election, perhaps 3 years hence, we will see the Liberal party make its strongest bid for re-election for the government of Ontario. Shrewd political observers see the Liberals on the upswing and the Conservatives over the hill.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Sudbury Star is not regarded by any stretch of the imagination as a Liberal journal.

Further, I would remind this House that there is not a single Tory federal hon. member in the House of Commons for northern Ontario, not one. After the Rt. hon. Prime Minister's famous speech on Friday last there never will be one.

I would say I do not think they are doing too well west of the Great Lakes either. I noticed the Progressive-Conservative leader in British Columbia resigned the other day after 4 attempts at trying to win a seat himself, let alone one for his party.

On July 25, 1960—and I do not want to take too long because I know the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope) wants to get home and wants to speak also today—but on July 25, 1960, the editorial in the same paper headed: "Government apathy to north may become politically fatal" is another one the administration might pay attention to.

But I want to turn now to some other authoritative documents, perhaps because they are financed in part at least by the government opposite. I want to refer first of all to the annual report of the general manager of the northwestern Ontario development association at the Lakehead this summer. He had some rather significant observations to make. On page two of his report he says this:

Aggravated by drastically curtailed operations of two of the Lakehead's largest manufacturing plants, and by the tight-money squeeze on housing construction, unemployment posed a formidable problem in the opening months of 1960. Unplaced applicants for work in northwestern Ontario soared to 11,856 at the end of April. Although the situation improved greatly in recent weeks, one could hardly apply the terms "robust" or "buoyant" to the regional economy when thousands of our people still are seeking jobs.

After listing, on pages 3, 4, 5 and 6 of the report, some of the activities which had taken place in the area, and some of the matters that might be considered for the future, on page 7 the report goes on to say:

Despite this impressive list of projects and constructive events during the last 12-month period, there is a natural and understandable impatience on the part of our people over the speed or lack of it at which our region is being opened up. Federally, less attention seems to be devoted to our accessible sources in rich and strategically important central Canadian territory than to the remote regions of the Arctic north.

And, as a well-known retired political figure said in Sudbury the other night: "This vision of the north, I have lived in it all my life, this one they developed at Ottawa. When they take bulldozers and push up the snow, in the spring it melts and there is nothing left." That is the vision of Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker.

This report goes on to say:

Ninety-three years after confederation, we still lack a first-class all-Canadian highway artery to western Canada. More than 90 per cent of truck transport traffic originating in eastern Canada and destined for western Canada uses the United States to do it. While the roads-to-resources programme is an enlightened and forward-looking project, there is little evidence to date that the joint federal-provincial undertaking is to be carried forward with vigour and resolution. Years after northwestern Ontario pressed for a connecting road link the Pickle-Crow-Savant Lake highway, 110 miles long, is still a double-end thoroughfare.

Years after Geraldton, supported by its northwestern neighbours, sought the connection, it is still without public highway access to Manitouwadge. And, in fact, the only north-south lateral road connecting our main arteries is the Fort Frances-Kenora highway which has generated millions of dollars in tourist revenue. Other highways penetrating the northern regions will do the same. The Fort Frances-Kenora highway, in fact, is the only road link Rainy River district has with the rest of northwestern Ontario.

The author of this document was a little bit in error there, because Atikokan is in the Rainy River district and it is connected with the Lakehead. But the point here is well made, in that the only direct connection with the rest of Ontario from the important communities of Fort Frances, Rainy River, and so on, is north through the Kenora area. I continue:

Hence, the paramount interest in this area is on the completion of the Atikokan-Fort Frances gap in highway No. 11. The latest official information concerning this project is contained in the recently issued transportation report of the northern Ontario economic development committee.

Now, I may say, Mr. Speaker, that since this was written, according to the Atikokan Progress, the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) has advised the people of Atikokan that he will tell them in 1963 when they might expect completion of the construction of the 90-mile gap between Atikokan and Fort Frances.

The report goes on to mention the causeway at Fort Frances across to Rainy River. It says:

Either the Rainy River causeway portion of the road will be slowed or highway construction speeded if completion of the two projects is to be synchronized. Otherwise the $5 million span across Rainy Lake will remain only a magnificent monument until the road is pushed through to its eastern approach.

Mr. W. G. Noden (Rainy River): I rise on a point of order. That project is proceeding with all speed and cannot proceed any faster than it is now being built.

Mr. Wren: The hon. member for Rainy River says it is being built with all speed! This report does not indicate that it was not being built with all speed. It says, and I repeat:

The $5 million span across Rainy Lake will remain only a magnificent monument until the road is pushed through to its eastern approach.

It goes on:

To the contention that stringency of public funds must make other highway projects secondary to reconstruction of the trans-Canada highway one can only point out that a top standard national highway from the Lakehead to western Canada is years overdue and economic growth of the northwest retarded thereby.

Now the report is quite lengthy and I do not intend to read it all today, but that is the general trend of thinking by this association. Following the meetings of the northern Ontario economic development committee, as recently as July 21, 1960, the northwestern Ontario associated chambers of commerce approached the hon. Minister of Planning and Development and others in government to do something to achieve action in economic matters in the area in which this association operates. They point out that the reports which were issued by this committee were not, in their opinion, satisfactory and recommended the following:

The committee be augmented by 3 leading citizens of northwestern Ontario appointed by government for their knowledge and their interest in the activity and growth of the region. That one of the 3 be appointed chairman or director with authority and travel funds to traverse the region.

They support this with a resolution pointing out where they feel the work of the economic committee failed in its purpose and in its objective.

On July 13, 1960, the then alderman Mr. Reid, now the mayor-elect of the city of Fort William—elected, if I may say, by a very substantial majority—issued a brief along with his committee concerning the serious unemployment situation in the Fort William-Port Arthur area and the whole of northwestern Ontario which was to be presented to the hon. federal Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr).

Now some of the points in this brief are very important and very significant. To illustrate the seriousness of the unemployment situation, he has this to say:

Now dealing with the Lakehead area, we are sorry to say that very many are now without employment and as a matter of fact have been out of work for long periods of time with no immediate likelihood of getting back their jobs. Our area percentage of unemployment has reached more than 20 per cent of the labour force as against the national average of about 7 per cent.

To illustrate briefly the unemployment situation in the area, we point to the large number affected in the Fort Frances, Fort William, Kenora, Port Arthur, Sioux Lookout area. Between November 29, 1958, to December 1, 1959, there were 50,194 male and 12,438 female registrations for employment totalling 62,632.

There has been a general increase in the number of unemployed for more than 4 years now and the situation continues to deteriorate. Looking at the situation at present, we find that here in the two Lakehead cities there were 6,988 workers receiving unemployment benefits. This does not include those who have been cut off benefits previously and the additional large numbers whose benefits terminated on May 15, 1960. These men who were completely cut off from their means of income and subsistence must of necessity apply to the municipalities for relief.

This was written May 19, 1960.

I understand from the Ontario Department of Public Welfare that the welfare rolls at the Lakehead and the northwest area are now at one of the highest peaks in history. The report goes on:

At the rate they are becoming ineligible and disqualified for benefits the amount of welfare could reach a fantastic figure by the end of the year unless something is done and very soon. This presents an immediate and urgent problem.

There is certain to be a sharp cutback at the beginning of September of this year which will be true for the elevators, the railroads, the mines and the other primary industries at the Lakehead which are all affected by varying degrees by seasonable labour factors.

This prediction has pretty well borne itself out. Alderman Reid goes on to point out that when a peak of 20 per cent is reached it touches almost every family in the district, and at that time many university students depending on summer employment to carry on their studies had been unable to find work, and the same story is applicable, the report goes on, to most other communities throughout this northwestern part of Ontario.

This is a rather depressing report but it is factually issued, and I have checked the figures used against the reports of the unemployment insurance commission, and it points up again, not that bringing these matters to public attention is the spreading of doom and gloom but that this—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Did the unemployment insurance commission confirm those figures?

Mr. Wren: Yes, they did.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I just wanted to know that.

Mr. Wren: I am pointing up here that the need is not to worry about doom and gloom but to take a realistic look at what the needs are, what the problems of the day are and move forward into the future. For that reason I want to set out, Mr. Speaker—and I think it is only fair I should now that I have been somewhat critical of the hon. members opposite—what we believe should be done in these regions to stimulate economic growth and provide employment. I will set out here a 20-point programme for northern Ontario economic development for your consideration:

(1) Complete without further delay a standard trans-Canada highway across northern and northwestern Ontario to the Manitoba border, supported by necessary arterial highways in areas such as Sudbury, Manitowadge, the Atikokan-Fort Frances link and others of similar nature.

(2) Activate and expand the roads-to-resources programme of access road building.

(3) Co-ordinate government activity affecting northern Ontario by the appointment of a 3-man economic committee, men with a background of knowledge and living in northern Ontario.

(4) Adjust corporation taxes so that resources industry shall not pay more than competitors in other jurisdictions, as is now the case in pulp and paper for example. Remove entirely regressive impositions such as logging tax, unduly high diesel tax and tax on aircraft fuels, and so on.

(5) Within limits, allow special tax exemptions to producing mines provided those funds are used for new exploration in the field.

(6) Apply a "distance-from-mill" factor to stumpage dues, to help control costs of wood and enable limit-wide cutting, so as to distribute equitably employment and reduce the need for transient seasonal workers who later become charges in off-seasons.

(7) Timber dues for lumber production should be related to the effect of downgrading of product due to disease or damaged raw material.

Hon. members from the north will know what I mean by that but others may not. It means simply this: People pay the same cost for dues in a given area for the manufacture of lumber. One man will get a good grade of log and produce an excellent grade of lumber. The other man may run into disease, red rot, worm infestation and the like and be culled severely when he takes his lumber to the market.

(8) All-weather roads should be constructed into suitable timber areas and subsidized on a basis similar to legislation affecting municipal roads.

(9) Set aside timber areas for communities in natural resources areas on a minimum basis of 100 square miles for each 1,000 of population to sustain secondary forest industry in production of lumber, ties, poles and like products. Concessions granted must be on a term basis to permit planning of financing and marketing.

(10) In suitable agriculture areas, stimulate and develop the production and marketing of beef cattle and table produce for the local markets.

(11) Establish centres, perhaps under the community centres training plan, for local tanning, designing, cutting, tailoring and marketing of practical and not necessarily luxury fur clothing and accessories from the abundance of raw furs in the region.

For example, what a lift it would give our Indians if provincial and municipal police forces in Ontario were to use northern beaver hats in their uniform gear during the winter months.

(12) Set up a realistic programme of low-cost housing for northern Ontario.

I know I have elaborated somewhat on that, but provision should also follow that the province assume mortgages held by companies for employees' housing so that the capital tied up in these projects can be released for industrial expansion and new development.

(13) Use the plant of regional high schools and technical schools at night and on week-ends for the training and retraining of workers to fill skilled and semi-skilled occupations in resources industry. Many of the vacancies must now be filled by imported help.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that is going on right now in areas where our young people are out of work, and skilled and semi-skilled people have to be imported to fill certain jobs.

(14) Set up a committee to advise the Minister of Energy Resources on economics as they relate to Hydro policy or the lack of it, such committee to be chaired by the Minister and include, among others, members of the Legislature from northern Ontario.

(15) Subsidize prospecting parties with one experienced prospector and two trainees in each party to explore new geologically favourable areas.

(16) Augment federal small business loan legislation with a $25-million revolving credit fund to assist small resources industries.

(17) Appoint senior civil servants, from personnel with northern backgrounds, to deal with northern affairs.

(18) Abolish The Department of Travel and Publicity—

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wren: —and include the same as a division of The Department of Commerce, to co-ordinate vitally needed publicity on travel and industrial commercial opportunity. One sector of the division would be devoted to tourist and general industrial publicity for northern Ontario.

(19) Expand the junior ranger programme in Lands and Forests to include youths from 18 to 25 years of age for programmes such as developing recreation areas, conservation areas, parks, trailer ramps, resort land, subdivisions and services.

(20) Eliminate waste and high costs by the processing and packaging, in local areas, of natural foods such as commercial fish, blueberries, wild rice, and so on.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the foregoing will permit of the kind of development which will, in a short time, uplift the economy of northern Ontario to a point where it will not only sustain its present population but open, in addition, opportunities for additional thousands.

The cost is not impossible because, first of all, the highways I mentioned—the trans-Canada for one—are highly subsidizable now under federal regulations; and a $25-million revolving credit fund would not, in the end, cost the government anything. The cost is not impossible when one reckons the near-billion dollars of mineral production in Ontario last year, in addition to the impact of the forest industries on the whole Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I want to emphasize this particular point to the House again. I wish the hon. Prime Minister would pay considerable attention to this because we, in the north, believe it to be very important. And that is this: In assessing costs one must bear in mind that northern Ontario is a victim of economic geography, in between a western and an eastern economy.

For these reasons, among others, the people of northern and northwestern Ontario are entitled to the same kind of consideration, from the federal authorities, as is extended to the Maritimes as a unit and to other so-called "have not" provinces.

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Wren: We are actually a province within a province and, as such, should be entitled to special attention in any federal-provincial conference on fiscal matters. For, when Ontario submissions are resolved as such, there need be then separate and distinct negotiations by Ontario, which would categorize the whole of northern Ontario as a jurisdiction for purposes of allocation only; as wholly entitled to special federal grants as the Maritimes and the "have not" provinces, such as Alberta—who would receive upwards of $20 million by equalization grants while northern Ontario starved, economically, in its need for road and basic developmental services.

These things, Mr. Speaker, I personally believe, and I know the Ontario Liberal party believes, to be self-evident truths too long neglected.

Mr. C. S. MacNaughton (Huron): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in taking part in this debate today will be to develop the basic, fundamental relationship of employment, or unemployment as the case may be, to trade—expansion of trade—particularly in the export market.

The emphasis will of course be placed on export trade because in Canada, and in Ontario, our production potential is, in a majority of circumstances, vastly in excess of our domestic consumption capacity. This is particularly the case in agricultural production.

It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that, in the field of expanded trade and development of markets outside of Canada lies the positive approach to providing more work, more jobs for our Canadian and Ontario people.

I was glad to hear the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) stress this point. As a matter of fact I would like to quote some of the observations he made in this House a matter of two weeks ago today. He was referring to the factors that contribute to growth and, on the bottom of page 71 in Hansard, he said:

So, on the supply side of growth, you have resources and you have quantity and quality of employment. On the demand side, markets.

Further, at the top of page 72 he said:

It is as simple as that—markets—and we do not have the markets we require in Canada and in Ontario. Much of our difficulty, today, relates itself to markets.

Again on the same page the hon. leader of the Opposition says:

On the supply side we have all the necessary factors. But we certainly, in terms of markets, have not done what we should have done and what must be done.

Finally, he observes:

We are not exporting as much as we should; and our gross national product is not going ahead fast enough to absorb the labour force coming on the market as a result of the growth in our population.

Mr. Speaker, I agree completely with these observations. In fact, I was particularly glad to hear the hon. leader of the Opposition endorse, in substance, the Throne speech announcement that measures were to be implemented to assist in the development of trade for our people, and the subsequent employment that will inevitably follow such expansion of trade.

However, I found myself completely at a loss to understand the related or unrelated observations of one of his own back-benchers, in the person of the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), when he said, in reference to the government:

They want to get away from the problems that are in the province. They want to talk about something they cannot touch or cannot solve.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is in direct contradiction to the sentiments of his hon. leader. I can only brand this as irresponsible nonsense, and put it down to the fact that the hon. member is unaware of what is taking place and consequently, as is so often the case, has not the faintest idea of what he is talking about.

I propose to describe to the hon. member for Parkdale and, in fact, all hon. members, not only what can be done to solve the problem, but what has been done, is being done, and will be done.

Firstly, let me refer to the report tabled last week by the hon. Minister of Agriculture

(Mr. Goodfellow). The report was dealing with the findings of a committee—headed by the hon. Minister, and of which I was privileged to be a member—which made an intensive 3-week survey of the market potential for Ontario farm products in the United Kingdom and certain countries of Europe.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, all hon. members will agree that the first move in the direction of market development is to determine, by first-hand examination, what products consumers in these markets will buy—and that the people of Ontario produce or can produce. This has been done and, as the report indicates, it has been established that there is a very excellent market in the United Kingdom, particularly for many lines of the products of our Ontario farms.

I say, for the record, as I said for the report which has been tabled, that one cannot travel throughout the United Kingdom without concluding that there is a tremendous market potential for many lines of consumer goods, particularly foodstuffs. It is evident that a systematic attempt to obtain a rightful share of a market that is traditionally ours could well exceed our expectations.

I might say that the party opposite had a long time to try to accomplish something, too, and they did nothing about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Sold anything yet?

Mr. MacNaughton: Well, we are getting on with the job now. Let us get on with it.

Mr. Whicher: Why did not a committee go 10 years ago? Have they just found out about it?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacNaughton: Whenever they are ready, Mr. Speaker.

There are, naturally, difficulties standing in our way, but I am optimistic enough to say that the obstacles are not insurmountable. The only obstacles in the way will be the road blocks hon. members of the Opposition attempt to place in our way. Otherwise we will get the job done.

The Throne speech forecast a programme of research. Such a programme is, of course, a necessity, and it is gratifying to note that the programme is already underway.

I believe, and would recommend, that, while the research efforts are being conducted, the initial moves related to hard selling and the promotional features that are a fundamental part of any sales programme should be instituted immediately to the extent that they can be related to the availability of products which are presently acceptable in these markets.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer once more to the remarks of the hon. member for Parkdale about "cannot touch and cannot solve." Also reference to, and consideration of, an observation of the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) is, I believe warranted. On page 84 of Hansard he recited a portion of the Throne speech as follows:

In view of the mounting world competition and its effect on industry, particularly secondary industry, with its incidence of unemployment, be it resolved that while trade and commerce are within the competence of the federal Parliament, every effort will be made in every section of the provincial economy—and so on. Then the hon. member said:

In effect, it suggests that the provincial government—and I think we should note this—should move into fields which have hitherto been primarily and constitutionally a federal responsibility. It is, in other words, Mr. Speaker, a provincial effort to try to bail out the federal government which has not done the job.

Mr. Speaker, if this government, or the federal government, adhered to this sort of negative—and I will use a word coined by the hon. member for York South—"mish mash," I would submit to this sort of criticism meekly and without objection. Obviously for once, he has slipped up on his homework.

Firstly, may I draw the attention of the House—although every hon. member must be aware of what is being accomplished—to the conference still continuing at Ottawa under the sponsorship and direction of the federal hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees). I say this to all hon. members, that the conference referred to is the most positive, the most imaginative, programme for trade development ever undertaken by any government at any time, and that includes the government that was there for 22 years.

An hon. CCF member: Did he say "mish mash"?

Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I said "mish mash," in reference to the word the hon. member's side-kick coined over there.

I know that our Ontario government recognizes the scope of its jurisdiction. Admitting that the field of trade development is constitutionally a federal responsibility, I say it is the responsibility of not only every government, at every level, to help in every conceivable way they can to assure the success of the programme; it is the responsibility of every industry, every citizen, in the face of what all describe as an emergency, to back the federal endeavour with every means at their disposal.

A headline on the financial page of last Saturday's Toronto Telegram says: "Mr. Hees points the way to more sales."

He has indeed pointed the way, and it is up to all branches of our Canadian society to fall in step behind him in what may well be the most significant move in trade expansion in our history.

Already, 1,140 businessmen, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, have had 12,000 interviews with 111 trade commissioners, all working virtually around the clock.

An hon. member: All talk, no work.

Mr. MacNaughton: Well, here is what the president of the Canadian exporters association, Mr. R. D. L. Kinsman, has to say about it. Maybe he is an authority on it. He says, and I quote:

This is a tour around the world. It is an undreamed-of opportunity for Canadian businessmen to assess foreign markets in a matter of days, where it would take months and a mountain of money to go out and look for them.

I come once more to the "cannot touch-cannot solve" theme of the hon. member for Parkdale. I can report to the hon. members that, last Thursday, I was privileged to accompany the hon. Minister of Planning and Development, along with representatives of his department and representatives of The Department of Agriculture, to consult with the hon. federal Minister of Trade and Commerce and his officials, to explore means by which the facilities of these Ontario departments could most effectively be used with the federal programme.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the welcome and appreciation of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce was overwhelming.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): He was glad to see the hon. member, was he?

Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. He was not only glad to see us; I will tell the hon. member what he was glad to see, in a moment.

A spirit of complete co-operation was evidenced on both sides; and the government of Ontario was commended for being the first to offer their full assistance.

The hon. Minister of Planning and Development will deal with the discussions and decisions which took place in more complete detail. However, I am prompted to ask the hon. member for York South—and for once, I see, he is not in his seat—does this enterprising undertaking indicate to him that the federal government, or the federal hon. Minister, need any "bailing out," as he stated a few days ago? Does it indicate to the hon. member for Parkdale that we in Ontario cannot touch and at least help solve? The answer, of course, is a very definite "no" on both counts.

Let us recognize, Mr. Speaker, that, in the final analysis, the success of any programme for trade expansion will depend on one fundamentally important feature. That feature is "hard selling."

An hon. member: Hard times.

Mr. MacNaughton: Well, that is usually the hon. member's stock in trade. I am going to talk about probable good times associated with hard selling. Now, hon. members opposite keep on talking about hard times. But selling in foreign markets differs little, if any, from selling at home in our domestic market. A properly related programme, in my opinion, requires only a simple formula which may be described as follows:

(a) A programme of research to determine what Ontario products are actually saleable in the market, or markets, to be promoted.

(b) Extension of such a research programme to find out the quality standards which will be acceptable in such markets.

(c) A comprehensive study of consumer habits, acceptable methods of merchandising, related to packaging and design or what will appeal to the consumer and so on.

The hon. members may ask: Did we not know this before? I would say yes; I think everybody knew this before. But we are living in a very fast moving society, and it changes from day to day. So let us get up to date, and keep up to date, and quit talking about hard times.

(d) A survey which would indicate competitive wholesale and retail prices for a range of acceptable products and quality standards, followed up by:

(e) An aggressive sales campaign, conducted by thoroughly capable, well informed salesmen.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the success of a programme for which the stage has been set—by government—will succeed, provided it is accepted as a challenge by all related branches of our economic family. Industry, agriculture and labour combined can ensure the required degree of productivity that will make our Canadian products sufficiently competitive to be readily marketable, if the required attitude of responsibility is assumed by all.

It has been accomplished in countries abroad with much fewer resources than we enjoy as a natural heritage. Wherever one travels in Europe and the United Kingdom one sees a work programme being conducted on a round-the-clock basis.

Mr. Whicher: They have no Tories over there.

Mr. MacNaughton: No Tories in the United Kingdom? I thought they were doing pretty well these days.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, wherever one travels in Europe and the United Kingdom one sees a work programme being conducted on a round-the-clock basis, people working as though their survival depended on it and, consequently, making their contributions to reduce production costs. The premise of a day's work for a day's pay is evident on every hand. I am not one to admit, Mr. Speaker, that we, as Canadians, are not equally resourceful as, or not more resourceful than, people of any other country.

Mr. Speaker, these are simple, practical observations and suggestions.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): May I ask a question? In connection with this research that the hon. member is planning, are there facilities for that in Ontario House? Is he going to do that in Europe? Has he got a staff in Ontario House to do this marketing research, and if not, why not?

Mr. MacNaughton: I think maybe if the hon. member went back and read the Throne speech he would find where the department with their research facilities are going to co-operate with the Ontario research council in a programme of product research, and they will relate this to Ontario House so that they can take it out on their sales programme. I think that is the premise that is being undertaken.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry. I am talking about the hon. member's promotion and marketing over in Europe, and I wonder what kind of a staff he has in Ontario House. I have never had that made clear. Are there economists and research people with respect to marketing, in Ontario House? Could the hon. member clarify that for me, please?

Mr. MacNaughton: Well, of course, we have a staff in Ontario House and they work with The Department of Planning and Development, but I am going to let the hon. Minister of that department deal with that phase of the question more thoroughly when he makes his observations before the House.

I said before I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, that these are two practical observations and suggestions. They will not startle, or make any sensational impression on, those who are engaged in the field of merchandising. They have been recited for the record for the particular purpose of placing in perspective the extent of the role that I am sure can and will be played by government together with the effort which is required by all related branches of our economy.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be of the utmost importance to develop the premise that great things in this field can be accomplished, and will be accomplished, and at the same time destroy the negative attitude and approach to our problems that seem to be the only stock in trade of politicians in opposition.

On this theme I quote from a small weekly British Columbia newspaper in a producing area, the Grand Forks Gazette:

There seems so little reason why, in a country such as ours still being developed, there ever has to be the unhappy spectre of breadlines in the land. It is not a time for gloom—but a time for ambitious, progressive effort everywhere in Canada.

I happen to like this theme better than the one I hear so often from the hon. member for Bruce. I just happen to enjoy talking in this vein more than I like thinking about hard times and impossibilities.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the attitude that must prevail on the part of every Canadian if the big things of which we are capable are to be accomplished.

Let me say that it is my opinion that there is no long-term programme which will more effectively provide work for our people than increased trade. More orders for our processors and exporters not only make more markets for our primary producers but will swell the ranks of workers to turn out the goods.

Accelerated works programmes, subsidies and so on, are short-term remedies—palliatives, if you like—and while the efforts of government in this direction are commendable and tend to help the short-term situation, they will fall far short of providing the benefits of a lasting nature that will accrue to systematic trade development.

However, at this point I might observe that the results in this endeavour are not as gloomy as recently forecast by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden). He spoke, I believe it was on November 21, in Kitchener and according to the Kitchener daily newspaper he said: "Average unemployment for the past 12 months has been 419,000."

It is interesting to note that the winter peak of unemployment has exceeded this total in only 3 of the past 10 years, and as he points out it is likely to do so again, in fact he is forecasting a rather high winter peak of unemployment. I would point out to him that certain signs and portents that I read lead me to the conclusion that it may not be as gloomy as he portrays it.

Let us point this out on a fair basis of observation, that the labour force has grown steadily throughout the years, hence unemployment as a proportion of the work force does not show the dreary, gloomy picture the raw figures would indicate.

In 1958 the official figures indicate that the winter peak was 10.6 per cent of the work force, and the annual average was 7.1 per cent. In 1959 the winter peak was 9.5 and the annual average 6 per cent—an improvement. From November, 1959, to October, 1960, almost as of today, the winter peak was 9.8 and the annual average 6.7—an improvement over 1958, slightly worse than 1959.

It does seem safe to me to predict, however, that this winter, the figures will not deteriorate to the extent the hon. member predicts. Winter works programmes already have provided almost double the jobs of last year. Regardless of what the figure is, it is double that of last year.

Seasonal layoffs this year may be closer to peak now than at any time in the previous few years, and information and opinions made available to me would indicate that the winter peak in 1961 may well show an improvement over any of the past 3 years. Certainly the signs point that way. I must say I prefer the optimistic view than the line of pessimism forecast by the hon. member for Woodbine and many of the hon. members I have heard this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, instead of concentrating on shorter hours of work per week, as has been suggested in this House, let us develop our nation's business at home and abroad so that a step-up in man hours of work per week will be required to turn out the goods.

Instead of increased unemployment insurance benefits, as has also been suggested in this House—and I am sorry the hon. member for York South is not in his seat because this was his suggestion—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): No, he did not, I suggested it.

Mr. MacNaughton: Well, that makes two of you because he did too.

Mr. Bryden: It is in our resolution, if the hon. member can find it.

Mr. MacNaughton: Exactly. Well, I say instead of doing that, let everyone put the accent on the positive side so that benefits of this nature will provide help for emergent situations as they arise—rather than provide, as they do, an alternative to the productive effort that is so necessary today. Let us stamp out the abuses attendant upon unemployment insurance benefits that have reduced the fund to dangerously low levels.

Mr. Bryden: It is not the abuses of unemployment—

Mr. MacNaughton: Let us recognize that whereas there are tens of thousands of people across our country who will contribute from the earnings of a lifetime to support the fund, there are also many thousands of people who make a career out of living off it. Let us take a long look at the purpose for which the fund was created and we will find that systematic abuse is, and has been, taking place.

In other words and in short, Mr. Speaker, let us resolve to do business, and adopt as a slogan in this province the headline appearing in last Saturday's London Free Press: "Ontario joins campaign to mobilize for export."

In this context let me tell hon. members about the conference theme developed by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. To make his point he wears a very attractive tie clip and he wears a very attractive pair of cuff links. These cuff links, Mr. Speaker, bear a legend—the letters on these cuff links "YCDBSOYA." The legend is simply this, "You cannot do business sitting on your —." I think I know what the last letter stands for but to stay within the confines of parliamentary dignity, I will assume that the hon. members can figure it out for themselves.

I will conclude by saying that if ever a country stood at the threshold of greatness it is Canada today. We in Canada are at about the same stage in terms of population and development as was the United States 40 or 50 years ago. We have the resources and the resourcefulness to ensure that each decade ahead will mark advances that may well render even the most optimistic forecasts obsolete. Our great country is looked up to and respected around the world; let us have the same respect for ourselves.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise and add my few remarks which, after those of the hon. member for Kenora and the hon. member behind me (Mr. MacNaughton)—which have been really brilliant and informative—will seem like a small effort. However, I might say they will be channelled along an optimistic vein rather than a pessimistic one, because that is the way I feel today.

I have listened to the hon. member for Kenora and I agree with a great deal that he says. I read a great deal about unemployment, and most of the criticism and remarks I have noticed, Mr. Speaker, have been directed at the government, both federal and provincial. Now this has done a lot—and I know that it is done for political reasons but I want to bring this point to the attention of the House—it has done a lot to spread uncertainty and alarm in the public mind. It has tended to reduce employment through fear, which has caused businessmen and people to restrict their operations and purchasing and in that way cause further unemployment.

That is factual, Mr. Speaker! I would like to give you some of my ideas on this situation.

I have a business in the city of Port Arthur employing some 14 people. The responsibility is mine to provide money for them each month. I can tell you I get constant admonitions from different people about the seriousness of the constant spreading of fear from hon. members who are trying to espouse their cause.

One that was brought to my attention especially was a man in the city of Port Arthur who had some $3,000, a permanent job with pension rights and other things. He said to me: "I have been reading these things in the paper about the impending recession or depression and I feel that I should not buy the new car I was going to buy this year. I think I will wait awhile."

Now just multiply that thousands of times, my hon. friends, and see what effect it has on the economic situation of this country and on unemployment. I know because I am an employer—a small employer, it is true—but it has a great effect on the minds of all the people in the working ranks of this province. We never know what will happen in the future, I admit, but we should keep on doing everything we can to prevent recession, not just talk about it. Let us buy Canadian goods ourselves—keep that in mind, and not sell Canada short.

Now we hear a lot of talk about full employment from the hon. members over there in Opposition. Full employment is a very deceptive phrase. In 1945, it was used to describe the effort to bring about an orderly transition of the economy from war-time to peacetime conditions. It has also been defined as a situation in which all employable workers have jobs. And it has often been given an added meaning that implies a government is responsible for seeing that everyone always has a job. That, in turn, implies that the state direct the national economy so that no one capable of work is ever out of work.

That, Mr. Speaker, is an attractive and plausible idea to those who cannot find work or who have difficulty hanging onto jobs. Unfortunately, they do not seem to give much thought to the power that would have to be given to government to bring about such a condition.

Speaking in the upper House during the recent session of Parliament, Senator Thomas A. Crerar—what are his politics, Mr. Speaker? A Progressive Liberal, is he? Well, all right, I will give him credit. Thomas A. Crerar put his finger on the point when he asked: "Is it to be the responsibility of government to find jobs, to provide work at all times for the unemployed?"

If the answer is in the affirmative, if we conclude that it is the responsibility of government to see that unemployment is banished from the land, then we must go the further step and consider how we can place our governing authorities in a position where they can discharge that responsibility. I think that is fundamental.

Senator Crerar recognizes that in any state where the people permit or demand that government guarantee jobs at all times, the means to that end is supreme authority of the state over the individual and the jobs that workers must take, not jobs that workers want. That is conscription of labour, and that is what they espouse.

To some theorists, this is an economically logical, desirable course.

Like some hon. members in this House, some members of the Labour party in Britain assumed that peacetime conscription would be a policy of any socialist government. When the Labour party there came into office with a clear mandate, its failure to impose compulsory national service was a source of undisguised chagrin to some of the members.

Of course the British public would never have accepted that situation, nor would Canadians.

Nevertheless that is what is implicit in the new meaning that is being given to this phrase "full employment."

Mr. Bryden: So the hon. Minister is against full employment, is he? The hon. Minister wants unemployment.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The hon. member never did know what full employment was, unless he had a job working for somebody and getting something for nothing.

There has been not much evidence, Mr. Speaker, of any substantial improvement in the attitude of employers in general towards the hiring of older workers, which concerns me, despite protests that government and industry are thereby failing to tap a great source of skill.

The situation in the United States apparently is improving. Reports from the United States national association of manufacturers say that workers in the 46-65 age bracket are obtaining jobs more easily than they did a few years ago.

This change apparently stems not from just one, but a series of causes. Employers are realizing that the worker between 45 and 65 is frequently in his best years because of knowledge and judgment gained through his experience.

The development of machinery to replace strenuous physical effort, which some people decry, has made possible the extension and the bringing of workers to jobs which would have been beyond their strength a few years ago.

Employers find that, although older employees may not work as fast as younger ones and may resist change of method, they stay on the job more steadily, are more careful, have better safety records, have patience and thoroughness and, in many cases, can out-produce younger workers. That is an improvement, Mr. Speaker.

The pension hurdle—this is something we are debating now and will further debate—which once seemed serious, is no longer an obstacle to the majority of leading companies, according to a survey. Age levels are found to have only a slight effect on group insurance costs; social security payments help. Some employees have pension rights from former jobs. Some can be compensated in other ways if hired without inclusion in a company pension plan.

In short, a problem, which at one stage seemed almost insurmountable, Mr. Speaker, has begun to yield to the application of thought.

Still more thought is required, I grant, not only by employers, but also by employees who need to develop adaptability. But ways are being found to make use of important human resources and we anticipate that the demand for older workers will even increase rather than go lower.

We talk a lot about training for employment. I think that is a great necessity. The problem of unemployment is being talked about so much in both Canada and the United States because it is serious. But it is still not too great a worry. Production, personal income and overall employment, for instance, in the United States, snapped back smartly from the 1957-1958 recession low. The percentage of the labour force not working has stayed near or around 5 per cent. An analytical look at the situation was taken by the conservative—and I stress that word—Morgan Guaranty Trust Company of New York, and produced the following report:

A striking feature of today's unemployment is the degree of concentration in certain groups of people in certain sectors of the economy.

Most affected are young, unmarried workers, the unskilled and the poorly educated, and workers usually engaged in mining, manufacturing and construction activities. The rate among people under 25, unskilled labourers and construction workers, is in each case 10 per cent, or more, greater. Now, in mining and manufacturing it is also considerably above the national average. The jobless rate is below average for married men with families, workers with technical skill, those in the so-called occupations and those in the so-called service industries.

Indeed, actual shortages of workers exist in some of these groupings, pointing up the fact that the unemployment problem is not simply a matter of total demand and total supply but is, to some extent, one of achieving a better matching of skills and training with employment opportunities.

Better preparation of young people for entry into the job market is a basic need we all realize. This means better schooling, job training, better counselling and guidance. Vocational training is needed for both young and old workers. Many middle-aged and older workers need to be taught skills to replace those now obsolete, and the trainees need some means of maintaining reasonable incomes during the period between jobs.

More effective assistance, at least some of it from federal sources, is needed to help areas with substantial and persistent labour surplus to get out of the rut.

This government is correcting this with trade training, using many of our schools in the evenings. As the hon. member for Kenora mentioned, many of our schools are being used for that very purpose.

We talk about Ontario, but this province is the brightest, as far as unemployment is concerned, in this whole Dominion, with the exception of the prairies, where farmers are working on their own farms. The hardest hit is British Columbia with 7.2 per cent of its labour force out of work; Quebec has 6.3 per cent of employables out of work, and Ontario only 4.7 per cent of its employables out of work.

So let us not start crying about Ontario being so terrible. It is the largest industrial province in this Dominion and has a lower rate of unemployment than those other provinces that go in a great deal for industry.

My hon. friend spoke about the Lakehead district in the north and I was amazed at some of his remarks. Really, I must have been away from there a long time, if that is what is actually happening. I was at a meeting in October in Fort William when the hon. Prime Minister predicted a big expansion across the north.

"The growth of northern Ontario," he said, "will far surpass anything we have seen to date and, in my judgment, northern Ontario is emerging into an area of development which is quite unprecedented."

With that I agree.

"The complexion of the North's opportunities," the hon. Prime Minister continued, "has been altered by the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway and the graduation of the Lakehead into an ocean port."

There has been fabulous development of the province's northern highway system, developments in science and technology and the arrival of Canadian oil and natural gas from the west.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members have referred to highway conditions up there. I will be going, tomorrow, to Schreiber, and Terrace Bay, which is about 100-odd miles east of Port Arthur on highway No. 17, and I will probably be arrested for going over 60 miles an hour. There is not a piece of that road which is not in wonderful shape today.

I said to my office manager the other day: "Now the roads are in good shape, I wonder what the Opposition will say?"

He said: "They will say it took too long."

Now, is that not a fact? That is what they will say because it is all they can say and the hon. leader of the Opposition knows it. During the last election, he came up to the head of the Lakes and cried about the roads. He will never be able to do that again, sir; that is one of his points gone. He will have to find something else.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Now then, Mr. Speaker, we did talk about the seaway and about business. Well, here is a quote from a special issue of the Port Arthur News-Chronicle, a Thompson daily and a good one. This was dated November 7, Mr. Speaker, and reads as follows:

FOUR-FOLD BOOST IN OCEAN TRAFFIC AT LAKEHEAD

Ocean ship traffic at the Lakehead now is about 4 times as great as in August, 1959, shipping officials reported. Seven of the ocean-going ships were in port last week and two were loading grain yesterday.

Captain P. C. Finlay, the Lakehead port warden, said the increase in numbers is quite surprising, particularly at this time of year when the port of Churchill is also open. Grain trade officials said several grain carriers might be diverted here because of a grain workers' strike at Duluth, Minnesota.

All of the 27 elevators here are congested and grain officials said they would welcome extra ships. Shipping during the last 30 days has been very active in moving grain to the east.

That is another of the planks of the gloom programme gone for that area.

Let us listen to the paper business that we were told was going to close up:

A $3.25 million modernization and improvement programme, including major changes in No. 1 and 2 paper machines commonly known as Jumbo and Judy at the Great Lakes Paper Company plant in Fort William, has been announced by president

P. J. W. Fox. He disclosed the programme Saturday at the 13th annual senior club dinner. Mr. Fox announced that the programme would be in two phases.

I will not go on to tell about it. Judy was installed in 1928. The total cost of modernization programme for the machines will be some $1.9 million. On the other machine, the cost of this phase will be $1.3 million.

Listen to this, again from the News-Chronicle:

The modernization programme at the mill started in 1955 and some $37 million has been spent. Mr. Fox stated the programme is essential to ensure that Great Lakes keeps pace with the demands of the market. We must keep our mill modern, efficient and competitive.

Referring to the efficiency with which employees completed the major expansion programme on schedule in 1958, he expressed confidence that they would display similar enthusiasm in carrying out the new programme scheduled.

Here is a company, Mr. Speaker, that does not fear the future.

They have the biggest paper machine in the world right at that plant.

Some of our mills are working overtime at the moment to keep up with orders. What about the new sawmill operation at Hudson in the riding of the hon. member for Kenora, that we opened just a little while ago?

Mr. Wren: It is simply replacing another mill.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Yes, but the other mill was an old mill that had been disused for years, had not run. It belonged to a former member of this House, who has been dead for years.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, the hon. Minister is misleading this House.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Oh, no, he is not.

Mr. Wren: The mill which the new mill replaced had only been shut down for 16 months.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I thought it was 16 years. Well, now they have a better one and they have a special rate from Hydro to keep it going—and just remember it. The hon. member talked about Hydro putting businesses out of commission. What about the Hydro in that deal? They put it in commission.

To show that this government is creating a proper climate for private enterprise to expand, I would like to mention some of the things here that might be interesting.

The healthy expansion of Ontario's population requires and facilitates an equally healthy expansion of industry in the province, which of course means a healthy expansion of job opportunities. This was the thought behind the two-day industrial conference held in the city of Toronto two weeks ago under the sponsorship of the Ontario government. It is a conference not for the negative purpose of alleviating unemployment, but for the positive purpose of increasing production and sales by the various industries of this province. This having been looked after, unemployment will look after itself.

Arrangements for the conference were made by the trade and industry branch of The Department of Planning and Development under the hon. Minister of Planning and Development. Branch officials are putting particular stress on the export opportunities which exist for Ontario industry in foreign markets, specifically in the United Kingdom and the United States.

All the delegates attending that convention—from management, from labour, and from the Ontario government—were armed with two statistical booklets put out by the trade and industry branch for the occasion, one booklet telling what Britain buys from Canada and from the world at large, the other telling the same story of the United States.

That was a great conference; one that did a lot of good. And, in the future, the federal hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce thinks—and the Ontario government thinks—rather than run away from the competition, they will meet it head on.

The two trade conferences, provincial and federal, will bring out the nature of the competition facing businesses in Ontario and Canada, the nature of the opportunities awaiting them, the nature of the response they must make to both.

Guiding each of these conferences is the belief that we, in Ontario and in Canada, can determine our own future by our own exertion. It is a belief that has proved itself many times over and this government, Mr. Speaker, intends to follow and expand this belief.

Canada is standing on the threshold of its greatest years of expansion. The door to progress and prosperity is only slightly ajar. Temporary business recession and unemployment have been distorted out of all proportion by the prophets of doom and political opportunists.

The other day I was privileged to listen to Mr. Crosby, the president of Barclay's Bank—the chairman of the board—and he said they have 5,000 branches throughout the world. He got off the plane in Canada and he was amazed at the activity, the prosperity of the people. Then he talked to a few and they said: "Oh, things are terrible here, Mr. Crosby, things are terrible."

He said: "I was just amazed, I could not understand it. Here is Canada, a country with more natural resources than any country in the world, more opportunities and a virile people, and yet people are talking about recession in the press."

He said: "You know, business climate is like the sea. There are waves, there are little dips and there are tops."

He told me this story: "Some of them remind me of two shoe salesmen who went to South Africa. One of them the day after he got there sent back a wire: 'I am taking the next plane home. Nobody wears shoes here.' The next fellow sent a wire and he said, 'I am sending in an order for a large number of shoes. Please repeat it with double the quantity. Nobody has any shoes down here.'"

Criers of gloom, criers of gloom, Mr. Speaker! Gloom is brought out with the basic idea of trying to get into political power, that is all it is. But in that idea, some hon. members are spreading a lot of dismay and concern among the working people of this province. That is what I do not like about it.

What is needed in the months ahead is a realistic but confident appraisal of the change which is taking place in the business climate. If the nation does experience a recessionary phase in the business cycle, it will be followed by new expansion.

Business and government can use the breathing spell to good advantage. An off-peak period may offer many companies an opportunity to modernize plants, change production techniques, and effect other improvements which cannot be made during capacity operation.

Let us look at the comparison of today with the 1930s. I want to bring up a point mentioned by the hon. member for Kenora. I was then chairman of relief—an alderman and chairman of relief—for the city of Port Arthur under the Hepburn government. Let us see what happened then.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): That was under the Bennett government.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Oh, no! The Hepburn government was the one under which I was working, and the hon. member was a member too, so he should remember it quite well.

He talked about soup kitchens in Port Arthur! Does he remember them? Does he remember when the hungry jobless filled our city offices? They lay in the halls, we could not get our office doors open. We went down in fear and trembling and we finally got the hon. member to come through with a little more relief.

Mr. Nixon: That must have been the Henry government.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Those were the days!

Mr. Nixon: That was under the Henry government.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Oh no, it was not! Now, what year would the hon. member like me to take? What would he say was the Hepburn government year, 1935? The unemployed in the city of Port Arthur in 1935 numbered 3,470. Now keep that figure. In 1934, there were 2,047. All right.

Now then, let us take today, and I point this out to the hon. member for Kenora, let us take today. This is November 24, the city of Port Arthur and district. Now when you add 3,470 on relief in the city of Port Arthur, the population at that time—

Mr. Wren: The hon. Minister is talking about unemployment—he is confusing us with figures.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: All right, do not try to confuse me because I was there through this and the memory of it still saddens my heart. I hate to go back but I am forced to.

Now the population at that time was 23,000—keep that figure in your head—23,000 was the population and there were 3,470 unemployed.

Today the population is 60,000 in that area and the unemployed as of March 24, were 2,489 males and 580 females, a total of 3,069. Look up Mr. Reid's report and if that is not coloured for political reasons I will eat my shirt.

Mr. Nixon: How did the hon. Minister come to have such a good job from the Hepburn government?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I was elected by the people of Port Arthur who were sick of the Hepburn government. I was elected as a Conservative alderman, to try to correct the situation—

Mr. Nixon: I thought the hon. Minister said he had a job from the Hepburn government.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, I was an alderman. I was chairman of relief, elected by a Conservative government during the Hepburn regime to try to bring some order out of chaos.

Mr. Nixon: And did the hon. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I have too much respect for the hon. member there to argue with him. He has been a grand old legislator of this province for many years.

Mr. Wren: On a point of order: Now these are the figures issued by the unemployment insurance office of Port Arthur. The hon. Minister was using March there.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Now wait a minute! I am using November 24.

Mr. Wren: Of what year?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Port Arthur unemployment figures as of November 24, this year. The hon. member is away back in May or some such time.

Mr. Wren: The hon. Minister started off in the spring of 1960. Now let us develop his argument from there. He said there were 3,342 unemployed according to this Port Arthur unemployment insurance office.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, I did not.

Mr. Wren: Yes, the hon. Minister did.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, I have no figure like that.

Mr. Wren: Oh yes, I very carefully wrote it down.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Just a minute! Now let the hon. member tell me what he is saying and I will explain.

Mr. Wren: I very carefully wrote down the figure of the hon. Minister of 3,442 and the hon. Minister said this was in March.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That was in 1934! What is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. Wren: It was in April of 1960, April 28, the number of unemployed in Port Arthur was 5,923.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I have no figure—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Listen, I said on November 24 of this year, that is only a few days ago, the figure is 3,069 and that is it. I never mentioned April.

Mr. Wren: All right, stay with that now.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, we have improved it by 2,000 over April, according to the hon. member's figures.

Mr. Wren: No! The hon. Minister has not because as of yesterday it was 4,921. I phoned this morning to find out.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I will check the hon. member tomorrow.

Mr. Wren: The hon. Minister can do that.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I am going to tell hon. members opposite something. They are going to get badly fooled when this recession stops, and I think they are taking a very wrong attitude in clouding the people's eyes and making them feel depressed. That is what those hon. members are doing and it is a very, very bad situation and I feel badly about it.

Mr. Ashforth, the president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank said—did any of the hon. members read the annual report? It was headlined: "Pessimism about the present, lack of optimism about the future is hardly justified. Canadians should give more attention to Canadian products and sell them." That is what we should be doing, selling them!

Now then, mention has been made of a great many things this government is doing to correct the situation. The hon. members have already read it: Expansion of The Department of Economics with a view to supplying economic services to all departments of the government and assisting them to cultivate and enlarge the opportunity for the province's expansion and development, reorganization of The Department of Planning and Development; a products research division, under way as the formation of a market development branch in The Department of Agriculture; submission of a comprehensive programme of planned public works and jobs created in winter works.

I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, I have seen that, and there has never been one like it in the history of this province or any other country.

Also, there is a new approach to the provision of public low rental housing; extension of the forest management programme; and all these other things. I will not enumerate them because all hon. members have heard of them. But let me say one thing. In the Toronto Globe and Mail, of December 9, it says:

The pay cheques of Canadian workers were the fattest in history in September. Total labour income for that month reached $1.602 billion. During the same month industrial employment remained at the August level, but average weekly wages and salaries rose to $76.57 from $75.94 in the previous month. Salary increases average $2.27 more than in September, 1959.

That is the history all the way through, Mr. Speaker, and yet the Opposition would decry the efforts being made by this country and push us into a depression.

I would like all hon. members in the Opposition, and every hon. member in this House, to broadcast to all businessmen and others in this province to forget their pessimism and adopt an optimistic attitude.

Canada, Mr. Speaker, and every hon. member in this House knows it, has the greatest future in the world. This government is here to see that it is achieved regardless of the Opposition or any other obstacle.

Let none of us sell Canada short. Let us all start out and sell Canada's goods and services. This country will pick up and go places it has never been before, and will be one of the leaders in the world in affairs of all kinds.

It is a pleasure to have had the opportunity to speak. I am leaving on the plane to go up to that great north country, and I will be travelling down that great Lake Superior north shore highway as far as Terrace Bay and I will be on some of the other roads. I will see the great activity there and the things that those people are doing. I will come back refreshed with the great optimistic attitude of mind there is in that whole area.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions has been making some quotes about our pessimism and gloom. I would refer him to one statement made the other day and it is this: "If the Progressive-Conservative government at Ottawa excelled in keeping promises as it does in making them, we would not be in this mess."

Does he know who made that statement? It was Mr. Van Horné, the Progressive-Conservative federal hon. member for one of the—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, he joined the hon. member a long time ago.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, may I say that I along with other hon. members of this House, have enjoyed the speeches of the hon. members this afternoon. In fact I have enjoyed the whole debate since it started some few days ago. Of course, a great deal has been said and it would take, I believe, time that is not warranted in this assembly to repeat many of the things that we as individual members believe, because it would simply be a repetition.

However, after listening to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions and the hon. member for Huron, I am surprised that we have had a debate on unemployment at all in this assembly.

From the jubilant remarks they have made about the north and about the farming situation in this country, one would think there is no such thing as unemployment here at all, that it all happened back in the 1930s under what they say was the Hepburn government or a government of other days. To me these sounded like very weak excuses indeed.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Ministers who are sitting opposite us at the present time are the people who are now supposed to be running the province of Ontario. Every one of them sitting over there is getting approximately $21,000 a year. They are in control of the situation and from them we expect results which they have not given us.

I am amused when I hear from the hon. member for Huron how he took a trip overseas, Mr. Speaker, along with the hon. Minister of Agriculture and their advisers, and studied about the packaging of farm goods and how they would sell farm products over in Great Britain and in Europe. Mr. Speaker, I ask you most sincerely: Why did they not do it long ago?

Ever since I have sat in this assembly, since 1955, I have heard the hon. Minister of Agriculture stand up on numerous occasions and explain how we are developing research, how we are going to market our products, the different kinds of packaging that we are going to have for bacon or meat products or vegetables or whatever it may be.

Finally when the Tories of this province are stuck with the unemployment that they themselves have made, they come along this afternoon and have the effrontery to tell us that now they are going to start studying marketing and research and how to package goods so that we can sell them over in England—a market they say we should have had a long time ago.

My question to them, Mr. Speaker, is this: Why have we not had it long ago? Have they not had long enough? Do they not know how bacon should be sold in England? To me it is complete nonsense!

Then, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions stands up immediately after the hon. member for Huron and he says there are new sawmills in the Kenora area.

This industry, he says, is coming along fine, the pay cheques that are being taken home by the people of the province of Ontario are the greatest in history. With that I certainly agree. But he hints to us that there are no unemployed in the province of Ontario at all.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that we are not interested in the unemployed in the 1930s. We are interested in the unemployed of 1960. And indeed in the Throne speeches of both last year and this year it has been said on numerous occasions that there is no unemployment. Those documents declare that the economy of this province, and indeed of the whole country, has progressed to a point where we are practically in heaven.

Mr. Speaker, is it true that these people who are down on Spadina avenue are trying to collect unemployment insurance cheques? What about the people I see in my own area, in the Walkerton unemployment insurance office, or the Owen Sound unemployment insurance office? Are they just over there for the good of their health? Of course they are not there for the good of their health! They are there because they simply cannot get jobs.

And, Mr. Speaker, these hon. gentlemen sitting directly opposite to us now are the men who are running the province of Ontario. If they are going to accept the credit for those things that are good in this province, then they must accept the responsibility when things are wrong. As far as unemployment is concerned, it is not good in this province, and they are the people to blame.

It is a funny thing, Mr. Speaker—I would not be one to reiterate this at all—but down through history since Confederation every time there happens to be a Conservative government in office—maybe it is a coincidence, I do not know what it is, but certainly since I was born—when there is a Conservative government in Ottawa, things are not quite as good as they are with some other government there.

It may be that it is a coincidence. I am not going to go any further than that. Certainly we cannot come out and say just because there is a Conservative government in Ottawa and one in Toronto that they are the sole founders of this small recession, as they choose to call it.

But one thing that is not a coincidence, and one thing that we in the Opposition and the people of Canada and the people of the province of Ontario can say truthfully—one thing we can blame them for—is the broken promises that their brothers in Ottawa, and they as the government, have made during the past 2 or 3 years.

There are promises galore that have not been kept. The big chief they have in Ottawa, the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada, said on one occasion: "As long as I am Prime Minister of this country no man shall suffer from unemployment."

What utter nonsense!

And then we hear these sheep, the hon. members from the other side, stand up here this afternoon and attempt to follow him and say that there is no unemployment. Why do they not face the facts and not try to make excuses for those people who are running this country, who do not know what they are doing?

Mr. MacNaughton: Why does the hon. member not face the facts? Nobody over here said that.

Mr. Whicher: Why do they not face the facts and do something about it and not make pitiable excuses about taking a trip over to England that should have been taken 10 years ago?

An hon. member: What is the hon. member's solution?

Mr. Whicher: I will give my solution in a minute. A trip to get suggestions as to how they are going to sell goods in the United Kingdom and Germany and France, and so forth, is something that they, the government, should have done long ago and something which, I suggest, they get very well paid for.

Mr. Speaker, there are several ways that this problem can be approached and many of them have been mentioned. There have been some good ones given by the other side, as a matter of fact. The only trouble is that it is too late; they should have been given long ago.

When the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario spoke on this very problem, he said that we would have a crash programme and then we must have a programme that is going to get away from this blot on our society, we hope, for all time.

Personally, I am against these crash programmes. I do not think that they will have any great amount of success—although when we have thousands of unemployed across the whole country then it is necessary that something be done immediately.

I would suggest that now, when we know perfectly well that by our famous 20-year highway plan of 2 or 3 years ago, we are going to have to build x hundred miles of highways in the next 20 years, I would suggest that it might just as well be done now.

As a matter of fact, we could do it cheaper now than we can 5 years from now or 10 years from now. If this famous 20-year plan of Ontario Tories, dealing with highways of the province of Ontario, is just and legitimate, I say let us get on with the job. The money is going to have to be spent sooner or later anyway.

Is it not a funny thing—all of us, I believe, in this assembly at least, remember World War II; very well, if we were not here at the end of World War I, we know of it by reading from history—is it not a funny thing that whenever a war comes along, whenever a crisis strikes us, there is all kinds of money to deal with that crisis, whatever it may be? In fact, there are billions and billions of dollars.

Is it not funny that when war comes along very quickly the unemployment problem is no more and everybody is working? In fact, they have people working overtime for many hours.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that if this democracy of ours is to carry on, if it is not to fall before other governments that are in the world today, then we have to accept this challenge and provide the opportunity for employment for all of our people, not only during a war but during peace.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, that crisis of war that I have spoken about, in 1914, and again in 1939, is still here. We have a different war today, but it is equally as challenging—it is the crisis of an economic war.

I say that if governments, that if democracies can put people to work, provide the money simply for the purpose of destruction, then democracies—if they are to survive—must provide the money for the opportunity of employment during peace. As I said, crash programmes are very, very unfortunate.

On the other hand, at a time such as this, surely something must be done to help the immediate situation. As I also mentioned before, why were such things as highways—which may be regarded as a crash programme—not started months ago? I will never know.

There has been unemployment for a long, long time; but, in any event, we cannot start yesterday.

Why not start tomorrow, and get these roads built in the province of Ontario, roads that we, through studies, know must be built during the next number of years? There are hospitals that must be built; there are schools that must be built; we know they are needed.

Our hon. friends across the way suggested that the figures we quote are simply “fears”—that is the word for it—and that we are talking about gloom and doom, and so on. I suggest to the hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that what we, on this side, are attempting to do is to bring facts to this Legislature.

One of the things which I believe should be done—I am only going to quote two, and one of them is of rather a serious nature, and perhaps no one else, for all I know, may agree with me in this assembly—is to ease the unemployment problem.

I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario, and many of the hon. members who sit with him, and many of these hon. members in the assembly, that there is no justification whatsoever as to why our dollar should be listed at higher than par over the American dollar.

Those of us who are in tourist centres know full well that it is very embarrassing to us when an American comes in to the counter—in my own particular business, the dairy business—to have to take 3 or 4 cents off his dollar. If that happens to me, where we handle only a few thousand American dollars each summer, how much more embarrassing must it be to those people whom the hon. member for Kenora was talking about this afternoon—the people who sell paper products to our American friends?

It must be very, very hard, and an economic unreality, to have to be paid in American dollars that are not as high in value, when they are paying their wages and their capital investment in Canadian dollars.

I suggest that this should be done, and I am amused that the federal hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) says that this is not the government's problem. Of course it is the government's problem. It is the Bank of Canada's—because they run the show.

I suggest that when the people of Canada voted Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker and his cabinet into office 2 or 3 years ago, that they voted them in to run this show here, and that they should show the officials of the Bank of Canada who is the boss. If they really believe that the American dollar should be put on a par with the Canadian dollar, they should go ahead and do it.

Personally, I agree with many people in this province, and across Canada, who feel that this is one thing that should be done.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to say something which may not meet with the approval of many hon. members here. I remember, during the last war particularly, when we came to the great crisis of war we found that labour was controlled and, on the other hand, capital was controlled. In my opinion, we are in the same kind of a crisis today. Although we are not fighting with weapons, we are fighting with economics.

We are an exporting nation, there is no question about that whatsoever. We must export; we must realize that the wheat we grow in the western provinces must get out of this country because we only have 17 or 18 million people to eat it.

The United States, on the other hand, which is a high-cost nation such as ourselves, have 180 million people to eat the food; and 80 per cent of the food they produce is eaten right in the United States of America. It is not so with us.

Therefore, in order to export our goods, it is plain as can be that the cost of our goods must be at a level where we can sell them.

I remember one of the speeches I have enjoyed very much was given at an economic conference in this province, where the federal hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce voiced thoughts such as that—that we must meet this foreign competition and that our costs must come down. How are we going to do it?

It seems that we are just in one continual round of inflation. As soon as our labour unions can get an increase that will pay 10 cents an hour, the price of a Chevrolet car goes up automatically; automatically the price of Massey-Harris farm machinery goes up; and as soon as that goes up something else goes up; the cost of food goes up a little bit.

Then, 6 months or a year afterwards, another strike comes along and labour costs go higher; and consequently we have got to the point where, in many instances, not only can we not sell our goods overseas, but we cannot even sell our goods here in the province of Ontario.

I will just quote one company. My father ran a general store and, for years, when I was a boy, he sold what was then known as gutta percha rubbers.

The Gutta Percha Company used to make rubber boots, and all sorts of rubber materials. The last time I read of them they employed some 1,248 men. During the past year, they have gone out of business, lock, stock and barrel for the simple reason that they cannot manufacture rubber goods and compete.

They not only stopped business but they sold their plants, as I understand it. When we reach a point such as that we had better hold our breath and take a look around.

Not only did that happen with the Gutta Percha Rubber Company but it has happened to dozens of other companies in the province of Ontario; and is going to happen again. It is going to keep on going on and, consequently, as these firms close up, the unemployment problem will become greater.

I suggest to the hon. members that we are in a crisis now equally as grave as we were in during World War I and World War II.

In the last war, particularly—with which I am more familiar—the government of this country, in their wisdom, immediately controlled everything. They pulled in their economists and they controlled the price of labour; and, on the other hand, they controlled the price at which management could sell their products.

At the end of the war, when I came back from overseas, I heard many people who said: "We are against controls, and the sooner we get out of controls the better it will be for this country."

But today, Mr. Speaker, in talking to people—the only people I talk to in a business line are small businessmen—but in talking to small businessmen I find that there are many who feel that the time has come when we should have controls once more.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Does the hon. member want them?

Mr. Whicher: I do want them! To me, Mr. Speaker, it is senseless for us to try to keep all the freedom that we have as citizens of a democracy if, in the end, we are going to lose that freedom. I say it is better now, when we are in a crisis, to bring controls back again for a certain period of time, whatever that period may be—it would depend on the economics of this country.

Perhaps we would only have to have them for a year or a couple of years. Perhaps it would not be necessary that we have them that long.

In any event, today I feel that the government of this country—I know the province of Ontario cannot do much about it except suggest to the powers in Ottawa—that labour should be frozen as of tomorrow.

I believe, on the other hand, that if they are going to control the price of labour for the General Motors Corporation from Ottawa, that then, too, the Ottawa government should tell the owners of General Motors how much they can sell their motor cars for and all their products.

Do hon. members not feel that management—I know this would be a hard goal to start with—that management would be happy to know that for the next year they are going to pay so much for their labour? On the other hand, do hon. members not feel labour would be happy to know that for the next year they are only going to pay so much for their cars or their trucks or their loaf of bread or their suit of clothes?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Is the hon. member speaking for his party on this?

Mr. Whicher: I am speaking for myself.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister without Portfolio): During the war, the manufacturers were getting richer and richer because of those controls.

Mr. Whicher: All right, I am speaking for myself, anyway.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that if this were done, then it would be possible for the government, perhaps a year hence or at some unstated period, to lower the cost. I feel that labour would be appreciative and would be glad to perhaps take 5 per cent less if the cost of the manufactured article was lower to the country. I feel that if that had been done in the instance of the company that I quoted—for example, Gutta Percha—that they would still be able to sell their rubber boots in this country.

I know perfectly well, Mr. Speaker, there will be many hon. members in this assembly who do not agree with me. I have no quarrel, whatsoever with them. I am only bringing forth this point because I am sure that we are in a very long period of recession.

I do not share the optimism that some of the hon. members of this assembly have shown. I would like to share it. Nobody wants to see things go ahead any more than I do myself.

But when companies are going out of business in this province of Ontario because they cannot sell their goods; when rubber goods can be brought all the way from Hong Kong cheaper than they can be manufactured here; when they can bring textiles from practically anywhere in the world cheaper than we can produce them here in many instances; when there are many manufactured products that are coming into this province and Canada because our own are too expensive, then it is high time, Mr. Speaker, that you and I took a look at it.

I feel that, after a year or so, when the government—it would have to be the federal government of course—brought in economists to look the situation over, perhaps they could lower the price.

This may be a heaven that I am looking at, but perhaps we could cut labour costs by 10 per cent and cut management costs and the costs of material by a certain percentage, and then we could sell some of these products. Perhaps our freight rates would not be so high from the western provinces, perhaps we could meet the narrow price on wheat and get rid of it instead of having our elevators stuffed with millions of bushels as they have been for some time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize it is not possible for the government of the province of Ontario to take this action. But I bring it forth as an idea because I honestly feel that this is what is going to have to be done in the next few years. It might just as well be done now. By so doing, perhaps we can enter into the world's trade again in the manner in which we have done in the years past, and that by selling our goods overseas we can get these men back to work again.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) was speaking in this debate some days ago, he stated that the initiative was left to the municipalities. And I want to say, right now, I believe that is the reason why the winter works programme has failed this last two years, and will fail again this winter.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): The hon. member is just as wrong as he can be.

Mr. Thomas: Now, just a minute. I will give some figures that will substantiate what I am saying. Perhaps the hon. Minister has not bothered to look them up, I do not know.

Of our 3 levels of government, the municipalities are the first to feel the impact of any unemployment. They feel the impact in the increased number of families on relief, and in the increasing number of property owners unable to pay their taxes. In other words, at precisely the time when their income decreases more demands are made on the municipal treasury.

No wonder the winter works programme has so far proven to be a dismal failure.

No wonder it has failed to provide jobs to any significant extent. The fact is that the municipalities could not afford it; and this year is no exception.

A week ago, I sat down and delved through the statistical report of The Department of Municipal Affairs. The annual report published by the department reveals the total taxable assessment of all municipalities to be $8,668,093,185. Yet the debenture debt is $1,305,003,000.

Now I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that is too close to the 20 per cent debenture debt, which is dangerous when we consider the taxable assessment of the municipalities.

But I suggest to the hon. Minister the situation gets even worse when we look at our cities.

Again quoting from the 1959 annual report, page 7 shows the total taxable assessment of all Ontario cities—with the exception of Metropolitan Toronto—to be $2,467,175,705. And, turning to page 9, we find the total liabilities for that group to be $551,777,582—well over the dangerous 20 per cent mark.

Can we, in all fairness, ask the municipalities to go deeper into debt just to bail out the federal and provincial governments?

Mr. Speaker, I referred earlier to the increasing number of property owners unable to pay their taxes because of loss of income. Here is what the 1959 annual report has to say about that.

Page 19 gives a comparative summary of outstanding taxes, starting with the year 1934. Hon. members will remember that this was the middle of the depression and outstanding taxes that year amounted to $58,188,000. Moving ahead to 1949—15 years later and a year of full employment and of boom—outstanding taxes came to $16,221,000.

Since then, there has been a steady increase in outstanding taxes, which last year amounted to $53,826,000; and I am afraid that 1960 may see us back with 1934 depression figures.

These are the figures which the government should bear in mind when it asks the municipalities—the home-owners—to accept more and more of the financial burden which properly belongs to the two senior governments.

The unemployment crisis is too serious, its toll in human misery too great, for this government to continue to play “passing the buck.” It is time this government shouldered its responsibilities in this field and, by careful planning and increased revenues to the municipalities, enabled our local governments to play their part in coping with the unemployment problem.

I think it is about time we took a good look at the economic situation in Ontario today.

Ours is a highly industrialized province, and the immediate postwar years saw a rapid expansion of our industries—perhaps some may have been too rapid. And, although the government likes to take credit for Ontario's increased prosperity during those years, I venture to say that it would have taken place in any case had this government not been in power.

The government deserves no credit for something that would have taken place in any case. What it should have done during those years of prosperity was to plan ahead, to ensure that expansion in the manufacturing industry kept up with expansion in the primary industry. It should have played a greater part in the location of industry to avoid the present concentration in the south and the virtual neglect of the north.

But the government, Mr. Speaker, did not do those things. Now it must accept a major share of the blame for the present unemployment crisis.

Their lack of economic planning—and with all due respect to the hon. leader of the Opposition, who seems to recoil with horror from these two words, you cannot “co-ordinate” until you have “planned”—is at the root of the industrial crisis in which we find ourselves today.

So, once more, we hear the old cry, “labour costs are pricing us out of world markets.” We have heard this before and I suppose we will hear it again.

It is the easiest thing in the world to blame labour. It saves industry the unpleasant task of taking a good look at itself and discovering that administered prices and exorbitant profits are the chief culprits, and not labour costs.

But what are the facts?

A study by the economic and research branch of The Department of Labour turned up the information that wage costs actually declined from 15.7 per cent of the gross value of output in 1949, to 15 per cent in 1958. The cost of raw material dropped during the same period from 54.8 per cent to 53.3 per cent.

But I want the hon. members to take notice of this: residual costs, which include profits, capital allowances, salaries and other expenses, increased from 27 per cent to 29.2 per cent.

I am sure that all hon. members of this assembly read with great interest a recent statement by Mr. J. S. Duncan, chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

While I do not always agree with Mr. Duncan, I must say that I believe he is intensely interested in the development of our country and has devoted a great deal of time and study to the problem of industrial expansion. I believe he has dealt very effectively with the question of competition from low-wage countries, and I am indebted to him for the following figures.

Our imports from these low-wage countries in 1959 came to only $826 million and yet, from the highest wage rate area in the world—the United States of America—we imported $3,829 million worth of goods. In the following quotation, Mr. Duncan presents the very lucid and enlightening figures, and I quote:

What is being suggested is that the 22 per cent imported from low-wage countries is doing the damage to our industries, and not the 78 per cent imported from across the border.

I think the time has arrived for industry, and the distributing agencies, to examine themselves critically; for today, I think, we have too few producers and too many distributors. Some distributing agencies today are taking more of the consumer dollar than the producer. This is very common and I do not think I need dwell on that.

The argument of the manufacturers that labour costs are pricing us out of the international market is fallacious.

I believe, also, that we are ignoring the home market; for, by not increasing the purchasing power of those on unemployment insurance, pensions, mothers' allowances, and so on, we are ignoring a market for our Canadian products.

It stands to reason that the bare existence allowance, now being paid, decreases rather than increases purchasing power.

I believe that, if the present unemployment trend continues, it will not be long before it is felt all across this country. In other words, such a reduction in the weekly pay envelopes of those unemployed—approximately 10 per cent of the working population—will soon have a disastrous effect on our economy.

I believe the winter works programme will not be put into effect by many of the municipalities for the simple reason that they cannot afford it. And, Mr. Speaker, in the light of the figures I have just given to you, I think when the hon. Minister said it was left to the initiative of the municipalities, and when he came across with that gem which he sometimes does—if they had received requests from the municipalities for $500 million worth of projects, they would be met—I think it shows how ridiculous that statement was.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I would like to enlarge on the remarks I made the other day, before the orders of the day, in answer to a question, to give the hon. members some information about what is being done in The Department of Education as far as unemployment is concerned.

It seems to me that the real problem, of course, in dealing with education and the unemployed is to so educate our young people that they do not become unemployed—rather than waiting until they are unemployed and then going into programmes of retraining.

We have in our school system, as it exists in the province today, a very wide and broad programme of vocational training. There are 55 vocational schools in the province which are teaching commercial and technical courses to an enrolment of about 60,000 day-pupils.

These courses lead to a diploma in grade 12, and include such courses as auto mechanics, applied electricity, applied electronics, chemistry, draughting, electrical and steam operating, foundry practice, mining, plumbing, plastics, printing, sheet metal work and practice, tailoring, watchmaking, welding, cabinet-making, carpentry, pattern-making, accountancy, merchandising, general business and, of course, a full range of secretarial and commercial courses for young ladies.

In addition to these courses we have approximately 100,000 people attending night school throughout the province, making use of the facilities that each board of education has in the province. So in this respect I think hon. members can see that a very large effort is being made to make sure that young people who do not wish to follow an academic course have the opportunity to learn these various trades that I have mentioned.

In addition, we have started a two-year limited vocational course. One of the problems with this type of course, Mr. Speaker, is the need for a fairly large enrolment because of the expense of shops and equipment. So we have introduced this two-year limited vocational course, which we can give in grades 9 and 10. For the balance of the course the young people go to the nearest large technical school which has a complete course to grade 12 or grade 13.

In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, we have of course our own provincial technological institutes of which there is one in Windsor, one in Hamilton, one in Toronto and one in Ottawa. I will have a little more to say about these institutes in a few moments, but we have enrolled in the 4 schools, at the moment, 3,000 students. We are going ahead with a programme of expansion of these schools and we do hope that from them will come the trained technicians that it appears industry will need in this country in the years that lie ahead.

In addition in our day-to-day work we have the provincial institute of trades, which is used to train apprentices. In the academic year 1958-1959—in that academic year—more than 2,000 persons graduated from that school. In addition, there are 1,600 people attending night school in an average winter programme and we are presently studying the possibility of expanding the size of this institute.

Now that is a very brief picture of what is being done across the province.

Perhaps I could speak of schedule M which has had a certain amount of publicity recently.

Schedule M really is part of a special vocational training project agreement entered into between the federal government and the provincial government. The present agreement lasts until March 31, 1964. It applies, generally, to full-time training and not to evening classes and really applies to training periods up to a maximum of 12 months for either males or females over 16 years of age. So, it can be seen, it does not fit into our normal school programme as the school-leaving age is 16, but takes over above that cut-off spot.

Under this schedule the federal government will pay 50 per cent of the costs and then, if we reach a certain minimum of training that percentage goes up to 75 per cent. For this province the goal of 75 per cent is greater, I am afraid, than we will reach, at least this year. Basically that is what the schedule is supposed to do. Over the years it has been used, although not to any great extent. In Toronto, for instance, in 1956 there were courses given and in Windsor in 1957 and 1958, and also courses at the Lakehead in 1958; and then another course was given in Windsor in 1959. There is a course underway in the city of Windsor at the present time.

In our attempt to use schedule M and make use of the assistance the federal government has offered, we work through a local committee and at the present time there are such committees—I will just name these places so hon. members will have the information—there is a committee operating in Cornwall, there is a committee set up in St. Catharines and Brantford and one proposed for Elliot Lake. We had a request from Huntsville—for an industry went out of business there—but I think the local people have handled the situation themselves. More recently we have had requests from Atikokan and Deloro which have come through the united steelworkers of America. We are investigating both these centres.

Our method of operation is as follows:

We establish a local committee, generally consisting of the mayor and any councillors that he might want, somebody from the local board of education, somebody from The Department of Public Welfare and somebody from the national employment service. Then we have officials of The Department of Education to act in an advisory fashion. This committee must decide the programme. This is the reason we work with a local committee, as they know through the national employment service who in the community is unemployed; they know what job opportunities there may be in that community; what type of training is required and how many people are prepared to accept it. We find that it is our task to find the accommodation, through the local school board if that is possible, and provide the teachers and see that the training is done from therein.

There is another angle to schedule M. This was announced in the speech from the Throne in Ottawa, and I believe this bill received second reading in Ottawa last week. The federal government has agreed to pay 75 per cent of the costs of building—the capital costs—of training institutes and technological institutes.

We intend to take advantage of this offer they have made. We intend to build a new building for the eastern institute of technology which is situated in Ottawa. This institute has been operating in quarters rented from the Ottawa board of education. It has functioned there very successfully for the last 4 years. We are now satisfied that it will serve a great function, not only for the area of Ottawa, but for the whole Ottawa valley and indeed all of eastern Ontario.

We intend to proceed under this bill—which I do not think has yet received Royal assent—but under that bill this money must be spent and the construction completed by March 31, 1963. That means we will have to proceed immediately and that we intend to do. The building for the eastern Ontario institute of technology will cost about $2 million and we anticipate that within 6 years there should be 1,000 students attending. It will give technical courses.

Of course the final planning has not been completed but in view of what has gone on heretofore in Ottawa, we are satisfied there is plenty of room in that part of the province for this institution.

We are also expanding—

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Would the hon. Minister allow a question on these institutes?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Mr. Troy: As he knows, in Kirkland Lake there was to be one of these institutes set up by The Department of Education.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will come to that.

Mr. Troy: Thank you very much. I am glad of that.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: In the Windsor area, experience shows that these institutes take a little time because they are new. It is a new concept and it has to be sold as an idea to parents and students. But the rate of growth is very steady and so it is in Windsor.

We are spending $180,000 there this year to put in some additional classrooms and if this progresses, as we assume it will, and this offer is still open after 1963, perhaps we will be able in the future to take advantage of this in that area as well.

In any event, at the moment we have the proper accommodation there. We are putting in some extra classrooms and we are quite happy about it.

As far as Kirkland Lake is concerned, we had a survey done there and we think that it would be well served with an institute of this type. We are going ahead immediately to obtain quarters and get an institute going which should start operating next fall.

We will probably start in Kirkland Lake giving only the first year, and it may be that it will be necessary for the students to finish their succeeding years either at Ryerson or in Ottawa.

But these are details which we will work out as we go along. The point is that we are definitely going to go ahead and set up an institute in Kirkland Lake.

We also have a large expansion programme under way at the Ryerson institute of technology in Toronto. We anticipate we will spend about $6 million there in the next—I should think it will take 5 years perhaps. The work is being planned and we have divided it into two stages. We anticipate in due course that Ryerson will be handling about 4,000 day-pupils each year in addition to the night course.

Of course the building we are planning to build there also is eligible for the 75 per cent grant, so we are taking full advantage of the offer as far as Ryerson is concerned.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister a question? Have the standards of admission at Ryerson been raised within the past two years?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, they have not.

That is what we are doing. I just want to add this: We had a meeting here with all the officials of The Department of Education and the federal hon. Minister of Labour and his staff in which we went over this whole question of training of unemployed. There are some very large problems in it, as I think the hon. members can see.

First, our province from an industrial point of view is spread out. Our industry, and therefore our unemployment is spread out from border to border.

The real problem is to find in any community those who are unemployed and who are, first, prepared to undergo training and are able to take training. Then, of course, we must know what we are training them for. Training for training's sake is completely abortive. We must know what jobs lie at the end of the training programme.

Then we have a very large problem of space. As I have already said, we have 100,000 people in the province who are using the schools of our public school system in the evenings.

Many communities have built up very large night training courses. It is not easy to go in and disturb these courses already operating, for the purpose of training unemployed, but I would like to point out some of the night work that is being done.

I obtained a list of some of these night school classes, for instance, that are given at the central technical school here in Toronto.

I find woodwork, pattern-making, sheet metal, carpentry, cabinet-making, plumbing, steamfitting, aeroplane mechanics, architecture, structure steel detailing, structural design, machine drawing, tool, jig and fixture design, estimating, surveying, blueprint reading and draughting.

Then there are some other courses that are more in the nature of hobbies. But there are all types: Chemistry, electroplating, glass blowing, petroleum technology, tailoring.

My purpose in detailing these courses is to point out that, while this may not directly be retraining of unemployed, there is a great deal of adult education going on in our province and it does not really get a great deal of attention at any time.

As a result of looking into these things, I thought the hon. members might be interested to know that there are tens of thousands of people in this province working every night to upgrade themselves and to acquire skills which they will use in our business and commercial life. These skills include radio repair, television repair, wireless operating, and so on.

Mr. Thompson: Is there a demand for aeroplane mechanics? Is there a demand for them today?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: For aeroplane mechanics? I do not know. I would assume there is or these people would not take the course. I feel they are intelligent enough to take something they will be able to use.

Just to complete this story, I was very interested in talking to the hon. federal Minister of Labour. He told me about what was going on in some of the western provinces. I felt probably the easiest way to find out what they were doing would be to send some of our people out there and I have had two men from the department covering all the western provinces. They returned the latter part of last week and I am waiting for a report from them.

I can assure the hon. members of this House that we intend to develop this programme and take full advantage of the financial opportunities that have been offered to us by Ottawa. Not only that, but it seems to me that perhaps we are entering a new era, and this whole question of technical training and retraining of those who might find themselves as permanently unemployable will have to be looked at, and will have to be dealt with.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker: may I ask the hon. Minister a question with regard to technical institutes? In my own city of North Bay I understand that there is to be a technical addition to the Chippewa secondary school.

Will that addition come under the new regulations as set out by the hon. federal Minister of Labour?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question. I really cannot answer that.

There was a delegation from the Toronto board of education which went to Ottawa to see the hon. federal Minister of Labour. I was in touch with him before they left, and they had a very similar question.

It seems to me that this scheme is set up to establish a financial partnership, if I may put it that way, between the federal government and the provincial government—not between the federal government and any municipality.

However, it might be that it can be worked through The Department of Education in some fashion, but it does not appear to me that it can. On the other hand, the Toronto board and ourselves are taking a look at it to see if there is any way we can do it.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Would the hon. Minister permit another question? Mention was made of these night courses, these supplementary courses. In the course of the discussion the matter of aeroplane mechanics was mentioned.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister: Are these courses supplied, are they provided on the basis of a planned need or rather on a basis of indicated desire of those taking the courses?

In other words, on what basis are these courses planned? Is it on a popularity basis or is it on a planned need as indicated by studies, perhaps from The Department of Education or The Department of Economics?

What is the basis on which these courses are provided? That is what I am trying to ask. Do I make myself clear?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes. Mr. Speaker, these courses that I read out, that are given at the central technical school, are courses that are designed and prepared by the Toronto board of education which, of course, owns and operates the school in which they are given.

They plan these courses. I do not know that it is a question of popularity. I think it is a question of finding out what people want and then providing it for them. This, in many cases, is a question of experience over a certain number of years and, of course, they advertise these courses. If hon. members notice, they appear in the newspapers at certain times of the year. In many of our municipalities, the local school board puts an advertisement in the papers saying they are offering certain courses. They will provide the courses for which they get requests.

There is no central clearing house, if I may put it that way, that I know of. It is handled in each instance, by the local board of education.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: I would assume it should be in co-operation with The Department of Labour, for instance. We are told that, due to automation and other reasons, there is to be a great gap in the number of untrained people. That is the point I was trying to get at.

Is it likely that these would be sponsored in co-operation with The Department of Labour—with their knowledge?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, yes, that will have to come, I would think, if we are going to attack this problem of the people who are currently unemployed because they are not trained to do any specific job.

The reason I mentioned these night school courses was simply to illustrate the fact that the real cure for this thing is to get people trained while they are on the job, or while they are still of school age; and I was pointing out that there is a terrific amount of activity in the province which does not necessarily receive a lot of publicity. But, in order to deal with the specific problem of the untrained, there simply has to be co-operation between the various levels of government.

As I said, the national employment service is an integral part of any such scheme because they know: (a) who is unemployed; (b) where they came from—in other words, what jobs they formerly had; and (c) what job opportunities are available—so that they do not train steamfitters unless there are some jobs available at the other end.

Does the hon. member see what I mean—that co-operation between these various levels is going to be necessary if we are to deal with this thing in any kind of a businesslike fashion?

Mr. Troy: May I ask another question, Mr. Speaker, in regard to this schedule M? Has there been no request from the city of North Bay in regard to implementing this schedule M in that city?

I know the mayor of that city, in his speech before the ratepayers the other night, said that anybody who wanted a job in the area could get one. Apparently he does not know, has not been down to the unemployment insurance office, because there were 1,400 people out of work. These included a great number of former employees of the government road department, and a great number of former employees of the beneficent Canadian Pacific Railway, and also the government-owned Canadian National Railways.

Many of these have been in the employ of the railroad for some 20-odd years, and now they are out of work and it seems to me that great—

An hon. member: Who is asking a question—or what is the hon. member doing?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is it a double-barrelled question or what?

Mr. Troy: The city of North Bay should have been bound to see—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Troy: We have, in that city, a technical school which offers courses in auto mechanics, motor mechanics, woodworking, draughting, electronics, and so on—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I believe there was a question away back at the beginning. To the best of my knowledge we have had no request from North Bay, and I am quite sure I would know if we had, but we would be more than happy to try to help if we can, if the hon. member wants to tell his mayor that. I have a letter here, if I can find it, the hon. member might be interested in.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. Prime Minister raises the point that we can get one of these schemes under way very rapidly. There is not a long time lag in it. On the other hand, the impetus really must come from the local level, because they are the people who know the problem in their own community. I cannot find—

Mr. Troy: There will be a new mayor tonight anyway, so—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We had a request from Elliot Lake. There are some people there who are unemployed and who applied for jobs and found they could not get them because they lacked certain training. We got in touch with the local school board and at the present moment there are 480 people registered in the night school that has been set up as a result of this request. This is being run by the local board of education. This letter is from the chairman of the school board. He is writing to say how pleased he is at what they have been able to do, and he says:

The draughting and blueprinting group has grown in attendance to over 175 and we have been hard pressed to find schools and equipment on such short notice.

This is dated November 28. We were able to get this under way and there are close to 500 men in Elliot Lake taking training at night. That was done in a matter of a week or so. So this thing can build up pretty quickly.

Mr. Troy: Well, I will write the new mayor tomorrow and get this thing fixed up.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words, if I may, on the employment and unemployment situation here in the province.

First of all, I would like to say a few words of reply to the hon. member for Oshawa, whom I could advise—

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I think the 3 Whips got together this afternoon and agreed on a list. Where are we going? There is no order about this! I would like to ask direction from you, sir, if the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Gordon) have re-done the list—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We are trying to give the hon. members information.

Mr. Thomas: On our list we received this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Education was not on at all and he came in. So I do not know—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, it is indicated to me by our Whip it is permissible to go on, so if you do not mind, sir, I shall proceed. As I was saying, one has to know the—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Can you tell us whether the hon. Minister has already participated in this debate?

An hon. member: Yes, he has.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I did not participate in the debate. I answered a question posed to me by the hon. member for York South.

Now, if I may proceed again, Mr. Speaker. One has to understand the ground rules for this winter works programme to have a full understanding of it. I have explained this before in the House, but apparently the hon. member for Oshawa was just not listening or did not care or just wanted to take a poke at me—

Mr. Thomas: I was listening, I was listening.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: It seems that the hon. member wanted to take a poke at me personally. He has had his poke. Now I want to give him some information. This winter works programme is working out extremely well. I cannot give the details up to date, but I gave some the other day in reply to a question posed by his own hon. leader. The applications are flooding in.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe the hon. Minister has spoken not in response to a question, but in great detail on this very debate.

An hon. member: Does he not want this information?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Will the Speaker please make a ruling? Of course, if he wants to make some reply to a specific question, fine. But I do think we should have some ruling on this matter so that we will know the manner in which we are to proceed.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, I am merely replying to the question raised by the hon. member for Oshawa and then I want to speak about sewage, which is related to—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to deny the hon. Minister an opportunity of expressing himself, but I do think that his expressions should be—

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: It is my recollection that the Minister did speak already on this matter. If that is the case, and I believe it is, he will be permitted to make some brief explanation or ask a question of other members at this point.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Speaker, may I do this then? We all want to get information about this sewage programme, I presume, and I wanted to give the latest information.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, rather than interrupt the placid course this debate has been taking, where great information has been given to those who require it and need it; rather than interject controversy into it, if there is any doubt that the hon. Minister has spoken, I will arrange to have the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) speak. He has not spoken and he can give this important information to the House which will indicate how we are proceeding apace to put people to work. I would be glad to arrange that later. If the hon. members would like to delay that important information, I will try to have it presented after the recess this evening.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I thought this was important, but apparently the hon. members do not want to hear about it.

Interjections by several hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Next speaker.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have been accorded a position in this debate and to have the hon. members opposite satisfied to listen to what they can see every day throughout this province, that is the employment and the work which is provided through the road-building efforts of not only this government but of the junior governments in all the municipalities and of the senior government, the federal government.

Really, sir, there is very little that I could add to what they can observe with their own eyes and what they see each day as they come and go to and from this assembly.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that there are some good roads even up in the snow belt upon which certain hon. members of this House travel with great safety and great expedition. I am sure they want to see us continue to provide those roads for the people of that and all other areas of Ontario.

The record of this government, Mr. Speaker, with respect to highways, can be seen by all of us. One of the important things in modern life—one of the hon. members opposite referred to the number of people who are now looking for work because certain other methods of transportation have fallen upon evil days—is that motor vehicle transportation has taken the place of the old rail transportation in great areas of our province.

As one looks anywhere in this province of ours, he will see that responsibility has been accepted by the people of Ontario, by previous governments as well as this government in Ontario, and we are providing the necessary arteries for the transport of goods and people.

As you drive out, Mr. Speaker, on any main artery, the Queen Elizabeth way, highway

No. 401, or highway No. 2—any of these highways—you will see growing up along the road, many, many establishments, large establishments and small establishments, commercial establishments, industrial establishments.

These are the things, Mr. Speaker, that provide employment. It is the duty of any government, including this government, to provide the right climate and the right environment for these enterprises which produce employment. I say that here the government of this province, and specifically the department of which I have the honour to be head at the present time, has been doing more than its fair share of providing this climate and this environment for industry.

In the future it is the policy of my department to carry on as we have in the past and to make available more and better arteries for the transport of goods and people. I can assure you, sir, that as in the past, if everyone else and all other segments of our society do likewise, this expansion along the highways of Ontario—which as I have mentioned provides employment for people and income—will continue and will follow these new and improved arteries of commerce.

Over the past 5 years, Mr. Speaker, the road construction industry has expanded tremendously. This is because this government, in view of the demands, the necessity and the duty to provide access for these new plants and good transportation for their products, this department, or the government through this department, has made available large sums of money for highway construction.

The effect of that has been quite tremendous. Not only, Mr. Speaker, have we had a lot of new mileage of wonderful roads, but there has been a lot of employment.

The Department of Highways is one of the large employers of labour in this province. The people who work for it—independent contractors who build roads—are large employers of labour. The people who supply the materials—the asphalt, the cement, the fence posts, the wire and the gravel—are large employers of labour.

The budget which is approved by this House, Mr. Speaker, each year, for my department, starts an ever-widening circle of ripples which provide employment throughout the length and the breadth of this great province. I listened intently to the Throne speech a short time ago in this assembly, and found there what I have just said—that the highway programme for this province will be expanded.

I need not elaborate any further on what that will mean to the economy of this province, to the employment situation, in fact to the general well-being of Ontario and her people.

We realize in The Department of Highways—as is realized on both sides of this House—that there is a certain amount of unemployment about which perhaps something can be done in our province at the present time. We have tried to attack it from several angles.

First of all—and those who watch the calling of contracts by The Department of Highways will notice it—we have accelerated the call of ordinary road-building contracts in the late summer and the fall. This gives the contractor a chance to get on the job in the fall and get it started. If it is up in the area of the hon. member for Nipissing, there can be some brushing and clearing and grubbing done in the wintertime. If it is down in my area, it is probably drainage and similar work that can be done. But there is a certain amount of work that can be done in the wintertime to provide labour. So the fall calling of these contracts, which we adopted in small measure a year ago and in greater measure this year, is going to do something to provide employment, through the winter, of road construction workers who normally would be laid off.

Then we are studying the possibility of calling contracts so that work can go right through the winter. Mr. Speaker, that is a difficult problem because it is a matter of economics, and we feel that within reasonable limits we are prepared to have all the jobs on the highways, which can be done just as well in the winter as in the summer, called so that work can be done on them in the winter.

True, it costs more, but we are prepared to believe it is better to have people employed; prepared to believe that perhaps it is better to get a few less miles per $100,000 of road from our budget than to have some people unemployed in the wintertime who might otherwise be at work.

Then we have rearranged the calling of our structure contracts, our bridges of all sizes, so that they will be worked on all during the winter months. We have called some already this year, and we are calling more between now and the end of December; and they all contain conditions requiring the contractor to get to work on them and provide employment during the winter.

In structures, a great deal of the employment is in the initial scaffolding, initial ditching and draining, and what-not that has to go on; so in that respect we believe there will be suitable employment furnished over and above the normal course.

Then we have in the north country, mostly north of highway No. 7—in highway parlance that is northern Ontario—a great deal of clearing to be done, some grading and some gravelling which can be brought into being. In fact, we have a programme of some $2.5 million for winter works through the operations branch of The Department of Highways.

This includes pre-contract—that is, before the main contract is called—projects of clearing; it includes picnic sites which I mentioned a short time ago; and it will be in every district in the province, but mainly in northern Ontario.

There will be employed on that alone, some 1,800 men, of whom well over 1,000 are already employed. Instructions were given by my department, some 3 weeks ago, to start this programme and get the men to work so that they could have a pay cheque before Christmas. And well over 1,000 of the people who are working on The Department of Highways' winter work programme are working so that they will be able to have a cheque in time to help Santa Claus this Christmas.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, earlier, told the House about the agreements with the federal authorities for picnic sites and for resources roads; and I would merely mention that we will spend some $130,900 on picnic sites along our highways. This will be shared, as to cost, equally by the federal government. These will not be confined to the north country; they will be all over our highway system.

In addition, there is the $15 million programme of resources roads which is proving to be very satisfactory, and is providing a great deal of labour in the north country. At the present time we have something like $3 million worth of contracts under way, a great many of which are contracts requiring labour.

All this work is in addition to the 1,800 more jobs that I mentioned before.

So, Mr. Speaker, I could go on and perhaps tell the hon. members of the House the various works planned to be done in their districts. That, I do not think, would gain us anything, but if any hon. member wishes to have it, I would be glad to tell him what is being done in his area.

As I said when I started this speech, hon. members undoubtedly will see many men working on our projects as they drive home at the end of this week, when the House rises for the Christmas recess.

The one thing I would like to leave with the House is the fact that The Department of Highways and its Minister are not here talking about something we are going to do—I am here, sir, telling hon. members what is going on now, and about the men who are employed now, as well as the men who will be employed later. I am telling them about the contracts which have been let now, as well as those which are to be let in the future.

I think that, in the manner we have indicated to the people of the province—as I have indicated to you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. members of this assembly—this department of this government is certainly taking every possible action, consistent with government policy and the finances available, to make sure that people have employment this winter and that they get that employment in time to have a pay cheque before Christmas; which, at this time of year, is a very important thing in those families which have children.

That is the story as far as The Department of Highways is concerned. We are producing work, we are producing the highways which the people and the government wish, and for which my department has plans. The hon. members will find that our share of work, with respect to unemployment this winter is not only a promise, it is actually being done now.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1960

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, I regretfully rise on a point of order. I would not do it if it had not been for the rather petty objections this afternoon which prevented an hon. Minister of the Crown from giving important information to the public on this serious debate.

I feel it my duty to draw to your attention, sir, that the name of the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) appears at least 7 times in the debates concerning this resolution on the afternoon of November 28 and that same evening, sir, his name appears at least twice in the debate concerning this resolution. I would respectfully urge you to rule that the hon. member has spoken before in this debate.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, before you rule on this question in which, it seems to me, you will not have much difficulty, the contribution made by the hon. member for York Centre, to the debate, was in crossfire across the House, asking questions and answering questions—the usual banter that goes on sometimes in this assembly.

The crime of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) this afternoon was that he intended, and expected, to deliver a second major speech on the same subject. The rules, of course, do not allow that.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): That was just a clarifying statement.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I was just answering some questions.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I may say the objection made this afternoon was a lesson I learned from the hon. Prime Minister in the last session.

The last session was my first and, on one occasion, the hon. Prime Minister quite correctly, when I attempted to join in a similar debate for a second occasion, pointed out to me that neither he nor I could speak twice on the same resolution. As many things the hon. Prime Minister says are so important in this House, I remembered that very well; and, when the occasion arose this afternoon, I thought it only right that it be brought to your attention, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The lesson involved is this: when hon. members are asking questions they should not make speeches.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that this necessarily calls for an answer; but I feel I can abide by the rules of the House, and I am happy to accept your rulings at any time.

As this debate unfolded, I thought it might be of some interest and some value to have a look at some of the speeches that the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay) delivered in recent years. The other evening as I was sitting at home and going through some of the old copies of Hansard, I came across some very interesting comments in these speeches; perhaps the hon. members might be interested in having their memories refreshed.

In 1958, on February 3, when his Honour delivered the speech, he had this to say:

At this session, consideration will be given to matters of great importance. This year has its problems and challenges as well as its opportunities. Adjustments have occurred in some lines of activity involving considerable unemployment—

Nevertheless the past year has been one of impressive achievement. Despite economic adjustments more people were employed and more goods were produced and purchased last year than ever before in our history.

Private and public investment reached a level nearly 3 times as great as 10 years ago. In many branches of industry new records of production were established.

These phrases, Mr. Speaker, have a familiar ring.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All correct.

Mr. Singer: I am not through yet. The hon. Prime Minister is going to be most interested in the rest of these remarks.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What year was that in?

Mr. Singer: This is 1958. I am going to take the hon. Prime Minister with me through 1959 and the first and second sessions of 1960, because I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister is going to be most interested.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is true; that is true today.

Mr. Singer: I continue to quote:

Although the rise in unemployment does not warrant complacency, there are many strong elements in our economy. Capital expenditures of our provincial and municipal governments will be appreciably higher this year than a year ago, reaching an unprecedented level. Capital investment in residential housing and in service industries will also increase. These times require confidence and the determination of us all to take advantage and make the best of Canadian opportunities.

In this regard, too, the relaxation of credit restrictions will assist both public and private investment while our rapid population growth will continue to give impetus to consumer spending. With the knowledge that comes from the opportunities before us, we can face the future confidently; and we shall be able to meet the problems of dislocation as they arise.

Our goal is the maintenance of high and stable levels of employment. We can best achieve it by the co-operation of all levels of government with business, industry and labour.

I would remind the House that those remarks were made not too long after—no, I suppose, just before—the election; and that was the election, if my memory serves me right, Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Prime Minister stood on the platform at Massey Hall with his arm around the now Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) and said:

This is the man who means what he says; this is the man we must elect.

And that, also, was the man who was saying:

When I am the Prime Minister of Canada no one will suffer from unemployment.

Well, I think, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That was the year before.

Mr. Singer: In 1957, I am sorry. The hon. Prime Minister had a year of that and, by 1958, he thought he saw the light breaking through. Well, the light was not too strong, because we follow this story through to 1959.

Here is what happened in 1959; this is what the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor said:

Since the last session, many events and developments have occurred which have enriched and strengthened the economic and social fabric of Ontario. The year 1958 was notable for many reasons.

Economically it commenced with a recession, a downward trend in evidence throughout America. When it closed our position had become considerably stronger.

Unemployment has caused us great concern and we have taken many steps to ameliorate it. In the past year furthermore there emerged major areas of strength, quickening activities which will lessen its incidence.

Agriculture enjoyed a larger gain in production and cash income, last year, than in any year since 1951. Mining output was higher. Personal incomes and consumer sales increased, while capital investment is well maintained.

As the new year proceeds we can look forward to increasing employment and production and a continuation of growth and development of our great province.

A year later, then, the government still has not recognized what it should be preparing to face. There was an optimistic tone in 1959, but not too much progress really.

Mr. Speaker, not more than 10 months ago, his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor delivered another speech and this is what he said at that time:

Employment increased more rapidly than the labour force and unemployment was reduced. Production and living standards reached their highest levels in the history of the province. The results achieved fully justify the confidence we expressed a year ago.

Turning to 1960, we are advised that nearly all our economic indicators suggest a year of continued expansion and progress which will carry us to new heights of prosperity. There is, of course, no room for complacency. The opportunities of today will be the challenges of tomorrow.

Rapid population and industrial growth impose heavy responsibilities and demands for services. Noticeable as our accomplishments have been, we cannot stand still.

We must press ever forward, mastering problems, overcoming difficulties, stimulating expansion, providing services more economically and at the same time raising money to do the job. This has been the foundation upon which the programme for this session has been built. This is our creed.

Now, for such a high-sounding creed, expressed so forcefully only 10 months ago, I suggest that the government did not do very much about carrying out its creed; and, for the last 10 months, either has been sound asleep or has buried its head in the sand.

We had another speech that his Honour delivered, and the tone is not nearly so optimistic as it was 10 months previously and we are told that we are experiencing changes in our economic climate. At this session, expansion and development must be our watchword.

Mr. Speaker, in 1958 and in 1959 and in 1960, when they were boasting about the record of this country, what were these people doing? What was this government doing? What was the hon. Prime Minister doing, and what were the rest of the hon. Ministers in the first row and the second row over there doing?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Expanding and developing. Expanding and developing; of course they were.

Mr. Singer: As a great producing province in manufactured and agricultural and other products, our goal must be expanding markets. The responsibility for achieving that goal is not the exclusive responsibility of any one sector. It was the exclusive privilege, Mr. Speaker, of the hon. Prime Minister and his hon. colleagues to take full credit when they thought things were going up. When things are not so good, certainly it is not their sole responsibility.

As a matter of fact, when we listened to the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) this afternoon, and the hon. Minister who sits in front him (Mr. Wardrobe), they were saying that we were prophets of doom and gloom, and should not talk about these things. We should not bring these facts before the public. We should not tell the people of the province of Ontario the foolishness with which this government has addressed itself to the serious economic problem over the last 3 years as is indicated in these speeches.

Mr. Speaker, there has been an effort to tell us that we in Ontario are not so badly off, that if we compare one percentage figure with another percentage figure, everything is fine.

I suppose it has been great solace to the 120,000 people in Ontario who are unemployed to recognize that, on a percentage basis, there might be more people unemployed in British Columbia. I suppose it encourages those people who go from place to place looking for jobs to feel much better about the kind of government they are getting, to find there are perhaps more people on a percentage basis in another province doing the same thing.

Surely this is not the sort of record that even the hon. Prime Minister can boast about as his creed. Surely the time has come, and is long since overdue, that we should get something more than just great words.

Mr. Speaker, it was rather interesting to contrast the speech of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Sutton), when he introduced this motion, with the speech of the hon. Prime Minister. It is a pity the two of them were in such substantial disagreement.

It is interesting to note that the speech of the hon. Prime Minister corresponds almost item by item with those remarks Mr. Walter Gordon has been making across the country for many months. And it is interesting to note that the hon. Prime Minister is much more anxious to convince the people at Ottawa that they should change things than he is to get his own hon. Ministers doing something about it.

The 10, or 11, or 12 points that the hon. Prime Minister made in his speech of November 28, to my mind, are very substantial; but we must ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker, what has the hon. Prime Minister been doing with his good friend the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada?

As he admitted just a few minutes ago, it was in 1957 that he and Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker stood arm in arm on the platform at Massey Hall, and our hon. Prime Minister threw the full weight of his party and organization behind Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker. But now the hon. Prime Minister of this province is complaining that Ottawa is not doing the things that should be done. And his complaints, I think, are valid.

He lists all these points. He talks about devaluating the dollar. He talks about bank credits and all these other things that he knows, and the hon. members know, are matters of federal concern. And, if the people of Ontario accept him at his word, and the words that he gave in 1957 that his friend in

Ottawa would look after all these things, then I think that the people of Ontario can turn an accusing finger at the hon. Prime Minister of this province and say: "You led us astray in 1957, and it is about time since you got into this economic problem that you did something about it."

As we listened to his Honour's speech that commenced this session, we heard about The Department of Economics. New bodies are going to be added to it; expanded studies are going to be undertaken.

I think this is a very worthy objective but I just wonder, Mr. Speaker, over the many years that the department has existed, that this did not occur to the hon. Provincial Treasurer responsible for that department (Mr. Allan) or did not occur to the government.

Where have these people been down through the years? They have been burying their heads in high-sounding phrases as they did just 10 months ago when they said there was no problem.

We are told that The Department of Planning and Development is going to take on a new look. What does that mean?

As far as we can gather from listening to his Honour's remarks, it is going to get a new name. But a rose by any other name smells just as sweet, and if that department is going to produce anything then it has had ample opportunity, down through the years, to produce something in industrial development. Yet we have not been able to hear, down through the years, that this department has done anything in industrial development.

We have The Department of Labour, Mr. Speaker. There is very little mention of The Department of Labour in his Honour's remarks that opened this session. I think there is just one phrase. He says that The Department of Labour is concerned with apprenticeship courses, and these are going to be carefully examined.

Surely if there is a department of government that has responsibility for employment conditions in this province it is The Department of Labour—and the only mention of it in his Honour's remarks was that apprenticeship courses are going to be looked into.

Mr. Speaker, there was an incident that took place this summer. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) is aware of it because I communicated with him in writing about it and he replied to me; but I think the hon. members of the House would be interested in it.

I was approached by a young immigrant lad who told me that he was having difficulty in getting enrolled in an apprenticeship course. He had not been in this country too many years and the first job he had was in the building industry.

While he was working he was earning good pay, but work in that industry, as hon. members know, is seasonal and most irregular.

This chap recognized, reasonably soon, that seasonal and occasional work was not good enough for him; he wanted continuous work. He recognized too, Mr. Speaker, that to get regular work he had to have a skill.

He looked around and he decided that the trade of being an automobile mechanic and repairing automobile bodies, was something that interested him and he wanted to learn this trade. He eventually found out that there was an apprenticeship course run by The Department of Labour providing this sort of training.

He recognized that if he entered into this course of training he would have to work at very little pay, but he was quite prepared to do it. So he went along to the proper office and attempted to enroll as an apprentice.

But, Mr. Speaker, he found out to his great chagrin that, at the ripe old age of 23, he was too old to become an apprentice. I think this is a shocking thing.

I communicated my concern to the hon. Minister of Labour who, quite honestly and frankly, admitted that this was in fact the case. He said he, too, had some concern about this situation but there were difficulties.

The correspondence is here, and I think the hon. Minister of Labour will agree I am quoting correctly. The point that concerns me—

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): As near as I can remember, yes.

Mr. Singer: That was the essence of the correspondence anyway. The point I am making is this: At a time of great economic crisis, such as exists in this province of Ontario today, when the hon. Prime Minister is turning the attention—or supposedly turning the attention—of all of his departments and all of his hon. Ministers to the serious condition of unemployment, we have not had any indication at all that there is going to be any change in the general rules of apprenticeship. We have not had any indication at all that an old man of 23, who is prepared to undertake training as an apprentice in the automobile trade, is going to be allowed to pursue that wish and desire. Mr. Speaker, I think this is shocking and disgraceful.

I listened with great interest this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) and his interpretation of what this schedule M was supposed to do, and the reasons why the province of Ontario perhaps had not taken as full advantage of it as it might have.

I tried to get at this the other day, Mr. Speaker, when I asked a question of the hon. Minister of Labour. He talked about his apprenticeship courses and then threw the ball to the hon. Minister of Education, who talked much in the same vein as he talked this afternoon.

I did not have an opportunity at that time to read this newspaper clipping completely, but neither the hon. Minister of Labour nor the hon. Minister of Education has denied the facts as stated in this newspaper. And so, Mr. Speaker, I am going to read just a little more of it tonight. I quote:

Last year, Ontario missed out on the 75 per cent training grants and it will miss again this year.

And if I noted the remarks of the hon. Minister of Education correctly he confirmed that when he spoke this afternoon:

The grants are paid when a province provides man days of training equal to 3.5 per cent of its adult population.

Last year the province provided about 1,500 man days, about one one hundredth of the minimum needed. Only 65 unemployed persons were enrolled last year in Ontario job-skill training courses. This year, courses in effect or planned will take fewer than 300. The official said the federal Labour Department has asked the Ontario government several times to get cracking on job training courses.

We heard this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister admitted that he was unable to take advantage of this in the current year. Mr. Speaker, I ask again, where have these hon. Ministers been over the past 3 years? Why have they been completely unable to see what was coming; why have they buried their heads in the sand and why have they done nothing more than make high-sounding speeches and deliver high-sounding phrases about their creed?

Hon. A. Grossman: (Minister without Portfolio): Because they could not go to a seance in London to get information as to what was going to happen.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have the impartial hon. Minister talking now. I do not know which seance in London he is talking about.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The one the late leader of the hon. member used to attend, to get information from.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I do not know really the significance of the remark of the hon. Minister. It is as elucidating as most of his remarks. If he has something constructive to contribute to this debate, we will all be glad to listen to him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member has not given us anything constructive yet.

Mr. Singer: One of the favourite tricks of my hon. friends opposite is to accuse this side of the House of making political speeches, when we are trying to bring before the people of Ontario one of the real problems that faces us.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that there is a single hon. member of the House who can deny the fact that the most serious problem facing us is unemployment. And I do not think it is going to do any good to hear the remarks that we did this afternoon, particularly from the hon. Minister who usually sits where the hon. Prime Minister is sitting, to say that we are prophets of doom and gloom, and everything is rosy, because it is not rosy.

Across the line, our good neighbours to the south have done a little bit of research and study into some of these problems. The President of the United States appointed what he called the President's commission. He had on it such people as Berwin Buchanan, the editor of the Christian Science Monitor and the president of the United States chamber of commerce; Colgate Garden, Jr., former governor of Virginia; commission vice-chairman Frank Pace Jr., chairman of the General Dynamics Corporation and other men of equal importance. They sat down and studied many of the problems affecting the United States.

The same sort of inquiry, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, should have been conducted in this province, and at Ottawa.

This is what this commission had to report on the economy of the United States, and almost everything they say could equally apply to this province. This is what they said under "The Economy":

Goals: An effort should be made to keep the number of unemployed, now 6.4 of the work force, consistently below 4 per cent, while finding jobs for 13.5 million new workers in the next decade. Economic growth should be encouraged and technological change should be promoted with sensitive regard for any adverse impact upon individuals displaced from jobs by machines.

This means: Employees should get a financial stake in pension plans at an earlier date, so fewer of them will have to hang onto jobs simply to cash in on such benefits.

We have been told that a white paper on portable pensions is forthcoming. But, Mr. Speaker, these are things that the government could have, and should have, hurried along so that they could now be having a real impact on this unemployment situation. I continue:

The government should boost its outlays for schools, hospitals, highways and other public works—

We heard some of the hon. members opposite say these are only short-term panaceas. But these are things, Mr. Speaker, that such a renowned commission as President Eisenhower's commission think most important. Surely if men of this calibre think it is important, it deserves more than passing consideration from the hon. members opposite.

The government should boost its outlays for schools and hospitals and highways and other public works, as one way to help the economy expand without hindering free enterprise or risking dangerous inflation.

Tax laws should be reformed to include, among other elements, more liberal depreciation allowance for industry.

I think the hon. Prime Minister has touched on this. But why he touches on it here, and why he does not touch on it with his good friend up in Ottawa, is something that I just cannot understand. I quote again:

To stimulate new investment and new ventures and attract risk capital for new products, business should seek a steadily growing consumer demand and government should encourage a healthy economy by proper management of interest rates, money supply and budget surpluses and deficits.

Again, Mr. Speaker, these are things the hon. Prime Minister has referred to. But I suggest he is referring to them in the wrong form. He should refer to them when he talks with his friend, the Rt. hon. gentleman who continually assured the people of Canada that no person shall suffer from unemployment while he was Prime Minister of Canada. I continue:

Universities, research institutes and industries with government support should greatly increase their basic research, in order to provide new ideas and new products. Job dislocation should be eased by state and federal financed retraining of workers.

This, Mr. Speaker, is something this government should have been doing these last 3, 4 or 5 years. They know they should have been doing it, and that they should not have been making the kind of speeches they were making 10 months ago.

We were treated to an example of this, Mr. Speaker, in the last session of this House when hon. Minister after hon. Minister rose to his feet to tell us what was going to happen at Elliot Lake; what they were going to do.

There were going to be more pamphlets by the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart). Somebody was going to look at a park; somebody else was going to look at a jail; somebody else was going to do something else. Today it is a dead town and the houses are boarded up.

They did not retrain these workers. They have hurt the economy of this country substantially because they did not have the vision to do anything about it. The report continues:

Job dislocation should be eased by state and federal financed retraining of workers. Industry should be encouraged to move to distressed localities. The federal government should encourage the states to improve their unemployment insurance both in size and duration.

These are things that this very important commission suggested to the President of the United States. And these are the things of which, I think this government long since should have been aware.

The hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) put forward 5 suggestions in his amendment to the original motion. The hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren) this afternoon came up with 20 suggestions as to how northern Ontario might benefit.

I am not going to prolong my remarks in this debate. I merely want to say that this government has been sound asleep. The province has suffered because of its self-satisfaction and smugness as has been expressed in these speeches and lack of action.

We have to do something about the economy of this province. We have to provide training and retraining for the 40 per cent of the people who are under 24. We can no longer say a man of 23 is too old to become an apprentice. The task lies over on the government side of the House, Mr. Speaker. Every day it is delayed, the people of Ontario are going to suffer.

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister of Planning and Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity of saying a few words, representing my hon. colleagues in the Treasury benches who have been accused by the hon. member for York Centre of taking no interest in regard to unemployment, both in the province and the Dominion.

It seems to me that, in place of drivel, we should try to approach this economic situation as people proud to call Ontario and Canada home.

We, in Ontario, absorb into our economy every year 50 per cent of all the immigrants who come to the nation. We manufacture half the goods made in Canada. And, by and large, we contribute to the federal exchequer approximately 50 per cent of the income that is collected by the hon. federal Minister of Finance and Receiver-General (Mr. Fleming). I think it is fair to say that Ontario is the workshop of the Canadian nation.

With that background, Mr. Speaker, I would say this: about 10 days ago we had a two-day industrial conference at the Royal York hotel. It was sponsored by my department of government; and on that occasion there were 3 principal speakers: the hon. Prime Minister of this province representing government; Mr. Claude Jodoin representing the Canadian congress of labour; and Mr. Ian Macrae representing industry.

That conference was broken down in a number of panels. There were nearly 700 people attending, of all political faiths, all creeds and all colours. It was representative, if I may use the expression, of Ontario. They came from the north, the south, the east and the west.

My hon. friends opposite were invited to attend but were too busy, or otherwise engaged and except for one or two did not put in an appearance. Those who did attend were not from the Toronto area.

This government is proud of its record in connection with human rights. We are proud of The Fair Employment Practices Act, we are equally proud of The Fair Accommodation Practices Act. People called New Canadians come here with a feeling and an understanding that our way of life is theirs to enjoy, providing they respect the laws of this land.

If, for a moment, I could have no interruptions, the hon. members opposite will learn a little; and they are capable of that, if I may use that expression.

This summer, at my own expense, I was in Europe and the United Kingdom. The people in those countries are not unmindful that, as a result of the development of the seaway, European shipbuilders are making new freighters, wider, longer and deeper in draught.

The result is that the European manufacturers are making a determined effort to put their goods on our shelves and, if I may give a personal opinion, the time has come when we have to take a look at our wage structure and see to it that our industry is competitive. Otherwise, we will have no reason to complain if our people ask for a wage that is going to deprive them of their employment.

Mr. Singer: Are the wages too high?

Hon. Mr. Nickle: I would like to answer the hon. member, once and for all. After his conduct in Dimensional Investments I would not open my mouth if I were him. Now my regard for his interruptions is nil.

Mr. Singer: That is fine, and the regard of the hon. Minister for the problems of the people of Ontario is also nil.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: If the hon. member would respect his barrister's oath, and live up to the traditions of his profession, there may be a much better man in this House.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister has no call to make those remarks. He has been impugning my integrity and I ask that he withdraw his remarks.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: The hon. member should live up to his oath.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister is impugning my character and my integrity, and I ask that those remarks be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: I say that no honourable solicitor would hide a file.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister is saying that I am a dishonourable person and I ask that those remarks be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The members cannot impute motives to their fellow members in the House.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: If I were a solicitor, I would not hide a file.

Now, one of the things that we are very proud of in relation to The Department of Planning and Development is our conservation programme. On that score, I beg to say that, at the present time, there are 36 conservation authorities, totalling 45,000 acres. Within these are 46 parks covering 3,500 acres. The attendance in these parks is mounting rapidly each year. There were 69,000 visitors in 1957; 880,000 in 1958; 1,375,000 in 1959, and 1960 reached a total of 1.8 million visitors.

With those figures, as a basis of my comments, I would say that we have, by and large, developed a conservation programme, of recreation areas, if you like, which is of basic importance, having regard to our efforts in getting new industries to establish in the province of Ontario.

In relation to industries in this province at the present time, I think it is fair to say that some industries are operating at only 50 per cent capacity.

One of the things we have to do to get further employment for our people is to get new secondary industries. We have set up a products research section with a view of trying to interest new capital to invest in the Ontario economy and to make, here, those goods made in other countries at the present time from our raw materials.

I believe that our potential now, with our new population, is such that with confidence we can expect new capital from other countries if it is not available here.

There has been some reference made about our people between the ages of 19 and 24 not having qualifications that give them priority from the point of view of being employed by industry, because their academic qualifications give them no standards to be considered.

When I was in Kingston over the weekend, I discussed this matter with the principal of the Queen Elizabeth collegiate and vocational institute, Mr. J. L. Murray. He told me something I thought was rather significant, and that was that a tremendous number of parents of teenage boys and girls, who have the available funds to give their children a vocational education, found it was quite impossible to reach what I would say was their desire—for the reason that the youngsters would not go to school. As he put it to me: "You can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make it drink."

Some of these young people think that quick money and high wages as teenagers is going to give them security down through the years. As they grow older they find that is not the case.

I would like to read into the record, if I may, Mr. Speaker, an extract from a letter from Principal Murray to myself.

He wrote:

Our technical course is of 4 years' duration like the others. Contrary to popular belief, more than half of the students' time is spent in the study of academic subjects. During the first two years of the course, 65 per cent of the time is spent in academic subjects and the time in the shops is divided equally among the following shops: woodworking, electricity, draughting, machine shop practice, sheet metal work and motor mechanics.

After successfully completing the first two years of work, the student is assisted in selecting the one shop in which he will specialize during his final two years. But he will still spend more than half of his time in classwork. At the end of his fourth year the student receives an Ontario secondary school graduation diploma similar to the one awarded to the graduate of the academic or commercial division.

The certificate is ascribed with the name of the shop in which he has specialized; in the case of our school, architectural draughting, mechanical draughting, electricity, electronics, woodworking and instruction in cabinet-making, sheet metal work, with machine shop practice for motor mechanics.

In fact, as the years pass, we usually find that the technical graduate becomes a foreman, or superior, or supervisor, and in many cases starts a business of his own. Some of the graduates of our school are very successful contractors, or owners of shops of their own.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that we have these schools where people can become highly qualified in the vocation of their choice and the work they would like to do for the rest of their lives.

We have a new housing formula on the basis of 75 per cent contribution from the federal government, 17.5 by the province of Ontario and 7.5 by the municipality.

We have these housing programmes in many cities in this province. It is going to mean a very great deal of work for the trade.

We are proceeding with our land assembly project and—I put it this way to the hon. members—as late as last week I was in Ottawa, and had a meeting with the hon. federal Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees). I indicated to him that the government of the province of Ontario, within the scope of its authority, is prepared to give the federal government complete, unqualified and sincere co-operation in helping them to solve the problem of unemployment.

Mr. Singer: I wonder if the hon. Minister would answer a question?

Hon. Mr. Nickle: No.

Mr. Singer: That is what I thought.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: No.

The discussions broadened out on this level. It was indicated by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce that his trade commissioners from the length and breadth of this country, and the world, who were in Ottawa, would in the future extend to our agencies in London—as represented by Ontario House—and to our offices in New York and Chicago, complete co-operation in indicating to us what new industries were interested in establishing in the province of Ontario.

It was suggested at the recent conference that I take with me the hon. member for Huron. They were talking about the processing of our farm products and I say that if some of the hon. members in this House would take a look at some of the food that is produced for them, for human consumption, and see the country where it is packed, they would realize, as we realize, that there has to be more co-operation by the people of this province who should have the philosophy "buy Canadian" and thus keep our people working—rather than those in other countries.

An industrial friend of mine wrote to a manufacturer in a foreign country the other day and said: "We would like to sell to you certain of our goods." The man in the foreign country wrote back and said: "We are not interested in buying from you because we are not working to full capacity."

In this country, if there was a formula, whether it be by tariff or otherwise, to protect our industries until they were in full capacity, so that foreign goods could not come in—perhaps that might be better for us.

I am still an optimist and I say further that I have confidence in this government, and confidence that we can weather this storm to the satisfaction of the great people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Mr. Speaker, we have already had considerable discussion in this House on the subject of unemployment. It is a serious subject. It is not one to be discussed on a partisan basis. It is not a subject which should be used for making political capital.

Unemployment, for the average citizen, is a tragedy. It is quick to affect the home and the dependants of the average working man, to which group I am proud to belong. In most cases the blow is softened by unemployment insurance. But time passes by—eventually the payments come to an end—and then real trouble commences.

It is said that there are many abuses related to unemployment insurance. But, after all, this is a relatively new measure and this factor is something for Ottawa to deal with. As the hon. Prime Minister remarked a few days ago, one of the surest ways to conquer unemployment is to encourage secondary industry and to enlarge our foreign exports.

In earlier days far too much of our raw material was exported in the raw state, and this is true to a degree today. They sold, and I might add, without competition, most of our remaining stands of timber. They wrote into the agreements, in defiance of the law, provisions for the export of spruce and other timbers to feed American mills.

These unsavoury deals have been overhauled and look at what has happened. Up north, at least 3 large new pulp mills have been built—at Marathon, at Terrace Bay and at Red Rock. Surrounding these mills today are new thriving towns, with paved streets, modern homes, schools, churches, stores and every modern facility.

We have here an example of what can be done by encouraging or insisting upon the establishment of secondary industry as related to our natural resources.

A good many years ago nickel mined in the Sudbury area was reduced to matte by an elementary process and this was shipped to New Jersey or to Wales for refining and for separation of the numerous metals involved. Later on, the big refineries were established at Port Colborne. Here again we have a big, secondary industry related to a great natural resource.

Should we not strive for a greater use of our iron ores in Ontario secondary industry? The United States is faced with exhaustion of its iron ore resources. It must look for its ore in the future to Venezuela, to Quebec and to Ontario. Right now we are shipping, from the Steep Rock and Marmora deposits, great quantities of raw ore. Is it not a possibility that we can, in degree, do something to bring United States mills to Ontario, rather than continue shipping our ores to the United States? What more important type of secondary industry could we gain?

We have all 3 levels of government at this time operating various plans to relieve the situation in which we find ourselves. All are pressing forward various public works. These projects of themselves employ thousands of our workers but their impact on secondary industry is perhaps of even greater importance. Hon. members see it right here in this building, we see new floors, new stair wells, new elevators, all making for employment both directly and indirectly.

The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) the other day outlined many projects—demolition of buildings at the Ryerson institute, at the old Grace hospital—many works being pushed ahead right now instead of waiting until spring.

The hon. Minister of Public Works said the other day that his department has, in various stages of development, projects totalling $100 million. Such figures do not themselves make much impact. Let me put it this way. The present public works programme represents a sum equalling the total cost of running this government for one year as of 20 years ago.

Our winter works programme—a co-operative effort with the municipalities—up to the end of November involves 970 municipal applications. The provincial contribution to labour costs here amounts to $3 million, and this sum will be far exceeded as the winter wears on.

Today, we are paying to the municipalities, in grants of various types, about $345 million a year. This represents 45 per cent of all our provincial revenues. Huge as this sum is, it will be increased as our resources permit—and this will hinge largely on a revision of the fiscal arrangements with Ottawa, arrangements inherited from a former federal government and which still have over a year to run.

The Ottawa proposals related to loans to aid small business and moderate-sized secondary industry will fill a want long needed. I repeat that secondary industry is the greatest producer of jobs, of pay-envelopes, which we have. I suggest one special way of helping our secondary industry. Should not our departments—all of them—try to buy, first, Ontario goods, second, Canadian goods, third, Empire goods, and finally buy foreign goods? Such a rule perhaps cannot be applied absolutely, but it is, I suggest, a good general rule to follow.

I would like to quote excerpts from The Letter Review, also one from the American Metal Market, both dated December 5, 1960, which were handed to me by officials of one of our largest Canadian industries—Page Hersey Tubes, whose policy is one of buying all of their equipment, supplies and raw materials in Canada, and only departing from this policy when such equipment or materials are not available in Canada.

The first report datelined Ottawa, reads:

PROPOSED CANADIAN LAW WOULD CURB GOVERNMENT BUYING OF FOREIGN GOODS

The practice of government departments buying United States or other foreign-made goods would halt under a bill introduced in Commons by Conservative Ernest Broome of Vancouver. Last spring, Mr. Broome disclosed that the Canadian Navy was sailing from the British Columbia coast with California oil in its bunkers. He proposes an absolute preference for Canadian firms in construction and service contracts.

His bill, entitled The Public Construction, Goods and Services Act would allow some leeway in cases where non-Canadian supplies are to be purchased. A Canadian supplier would be granted a 10 per cent price preference against a foreign firm.

A further exception is made whereby the cabinet, "in the public interest," may grant exemptions. Any such action, however, would require public disclosure in the Commons, and group exemption regulations would be invalid if not approved by Parliament within 30 days.

The bill assigns to the Deputy Ministers of national revenue—taxation and customs and excise divisions—the job of deciding any question or dispute about what constitutes a Canadian firm or product. Their decisions would be final.

The contracts bill sets out penalties for any firm or supplier who obtains a government order by fraudulently representing itself as Canadian. The guilty party would be subject to forfeiture of 10 per cent of the contract price.

The other excerpt from The Letter Review, December 5, 1960, reads as follows:

Government departments would be required to buy mainly made-in-Canada goods if a bill introduced in Commons by a British Columbia MP gets support.

Ernest Broome (PC, Vancouver South) last week presented a domestic purchase bill aimed at giving Canadian manufacturers 10 per cent price preference over foreign firms and, in case of exceptions, would demand public disclosure in Commons.

Thought occurs that it would be a good thing if provincial governments would follow the British Columbia member's example—and the practice of “buying Canadian,” even at some sacrifice, might well be extended to such organizations as Ontario Hydro. Latter’s policy seems to be to buy outside of Canada, although it is Canadian industries to whom Hydro sells largest individual blocks of electric power. Hydro policy carried to extreme could result in fewer and fewer industrial customers as Canadian producers go out of business.

My own personal view is that Hydro is doing splendid work providing employment and buying Canadian goods. Our Department of Highways is carrying on the biggest programme in its history. The trans-Canada highway is about completed insofar as Ontario is concerned. Two-thirds of the trans-Ontario highway from Windsor to the Quebec border is completed and in use. Great international bridge projects are under way at Queenston, Sault Ste. Marie and the town of Rainy River.

Our Department of Highways expenditures are approaching $300 million a year, including municipal grants of around $75 million. Great new government hospitals are under construction or in various planning stages at Cedar Springs, Goderich, Palmerston and Owen Sound. A new reform institution is scheduled for Elliot Lake, and a girls’ school near Lindsay. Many buildings for the provincial police are under way.

These facilities are permanent facilities; they will serve the people of Ontario for this and for coming generations.

Never in Ontario’s history has so much been done by any previous government. It takes drive, vision, planning and money. It takes leadership such as we are getting from the hon. Prime Minister of this great province. Never before have we had leadership so deeply concerned with the great cause of human betterment.

In 3 general elections and in 20 by-elections the leadership of this great government, the people’s government, has received endorsement at the hands of the people. This is the best answer I can give to our critics. After all, the voice of the people is the voice which counts.

Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate the opportunity of making a few remarks to this House and I hope they will be of some concern to all that they may involve.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this unemployment debate. One of the things that strikes me is that we have to try to recognize the extent of this problem. I am not suggesting that either side is trying to play it politically from the point of view of numbers, but I think we have to get facts into this situation.

It is for that reason that I, myself, turned to the federal bureau of statistics’ figures, so the hon. members will not say I am being unrealistic and that I am a prophet of doom and gloom. I think they will have to admit that when I read the bureau of statistics’ figures they are factual.

I can appreciate the satisfaction of the hon. Prime Minister that Ontario has a lower proportion of unemployed than other provinces; but something that alarms me is the hon. Prime Minister’s assurance, confidence and lack of worry with respect to 4 per cent of the labour force being unemployed.

I may be unfair to him or misrepresent what he said, but the impression I had was that he was suggesting it is perfectly normal to have 4 per cent of the labour force unemployed.

He told us that he was a simple man and he used statistics in a simple manner. I am trying to do the same thing. I went back to the period of 1946 to 1956—and I say this also for the hon. members to the left who do not use statistics quite so simply. They seem to me to use them in a somewhat twisted manner now and again to prove a point.

Then, unemployment on an average was 2.8 per cent of the labour force, and never went up above 4.3 per cent.

That is the goal we have to be working for again, not just relaxing and claiming 4 per cent seems to be fairly normal. The hon. Prime Minister is suggesting, as is another one of the hon. government speakers, that there must also be a residue, and he assumes the residue should be 4 per cent. I think this is alarming. We have had the residue as low as 2 per cent. If we look across to countries in Europe, we find they have 2 per cent.

That should be the aim in Ontario. When we have 120,000 unemployed people in Ontario, we should be worried—particularly when we know the normal seasonal pattern that will occur. I can say, realistically, that the ranks of the unemployed can double during the winter and within 2 or 3 months there is some likelihood that there may be 250,000 unemployed in Ontario. With this total of 250,000 unemployed, I ask—what is the government proposing?

I have been interested in the winter works programme. I appreciate that the programme is going to provide 13,000 jobs this winter, although for only a limited period. I asked the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs just about how long this period would cover. I did not get a clear answer from him. I am told that The Department of Lands and Forests will provide work for 1,900 and the Ontario water resources commission will provide another 1,600 jobs, and then there will be some other smaller projects.

But, surely, Mr. Speaker, the government is not going to stand on its laurels in providing work for such a small proportion of men, saying: "This is our vaunted programme, our winter works programme." I congratulate the government that it is improved to some extent, but it is, in no way, tackling the problem of unemployed in Ontario today.

I have been interested, as I listened to the hon. government speakers, at what I feel is the gross lack of homework they have done on the unemployment problem. Those hon. government representatives have had the advantage of going to other countries and also could look at studies done by them. For example, I wonder if any one of the hon. members of the government has read the studies on unemployment by the special committees on unemployment problems of the United States Senate. I would suggest each of them should get this report and study it carefully. Then perhaps they would not have someone such as the hon. Minister of Public Works inferring because he put an advertisement in the paper to get a Dutch farm labourer, without any result, that there is not a great deal of unemployment. He would do well to study the section on labour mobility in this Senate report, in which it clearly indicates there is a certain myth about mobility. Some people have a little home, a wife, children attending school and they are reluctant to pick up roots and head out somewhere else, particularly since they probably will have to work on a farm as a single person.

I think a number of suggestions that came from the other side of the House showed, first, a lack of study and, secondly, a lack of sympathy towards this really serious problem in Ontario today.

We did hear what the federal government's responsibility should be. This is very sound. We have to demand that the federal government assume its responsibility in this unemployment situation. Certainly the federal government should be taking responsibility in the international exchange rate, in government monetary and fiscal policies, in tax concessions and tariffs, and in trade.

Referring to trade, I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member who had gone with the agricultural mission to Britain. He was explaining that we had to have greater understanding of marketing processes in Europe in order to sell some of our agricultural products from Canada. I suspect, sir, he does not even know who is on the staff in Britain representing Ontario in Ontario House. I asked him the question and he said he thought it would be better if it was referred to the hon. Minister of Planning and Development.

I would also be interested in knowing, when he went over on that agricultural tour, how many marketing experts he took over. I have read the list of people who went, and I really did not recognize among them any trained people who would understand the marketing situation in Europe.

Many of the areas discussed in this House were federal responsibilities. I would like to make a partial list of suggestions concerning the solution to unemployment which are in the provincial jurisdiction. I would like to break these into two groups.

The first are proposals for immediate action; the second would be more for long-term action. For immediate action the government should start an extensive programme of conservation. They should have a number of such projects. I know they will tell me they have some. But when we look at the recent report on land use to the government of Ontario, we see that this government has been short-sighted and negligent about its obligation to pass on a heritage to a future generation.

I quote from this report. I am surprised the hon. members have not read it. It was sent out to each hon. member. I think this in itself is an example of the hon. members' attitude. We should be taking an interest when the people of Ontario have been paying for this report.

Let me just quote from it concerning what should be done on conservation. It is on page 24:

It is estimated by planners that there should be a minimum of 10 acres, readily accessible—under 50 miles—set aside as a park for each 1,000 of population. At present Ontario has a population of 6 million and population estimates for the year 2000 are 12 million. This, however, is only part of the story, since the main increase will be in southern Ontario.

Obviously the most critical area is and will remain that from Oshawa to Niagara Falls. Based on the present population of this area 42,000 acres of rural parks are deemed necessary. By the year 2000 this should increase to 96,000 acres. At present the total is about 3,000 acres.

I listened with interest to the hon. Minister of Planning and Development when he was speaking with some pride about his efforts. I am sure he has read this book and that it really gives him great concern at the lack of work being done.

In view of the unemployment situation today, this government should look at reports like this and grasp the opportunities to give the unemployed work in needed projects such as are recommended and suggested in this report—a report on land use by the conservation council of Ontario.

I would say immediately: absorb the manpower that is today standing idle by commencing some of the conservation projects so strongly recommended.

In re-emphasizing the urgency, I may add that 75 per cent of the population of Ontario, and indeed 18 per cent of the whole population of Canada, live in the area along Lake Ontario from Oshawa to Niagara Falls. As the report points out, no significant section of the lakefront has been reserved for public recreational use.

The next thing I would like to refer to is the winter works programme itself. I think this is a step in the right direction, but I would go along with some of the other hon. members in suggesting that some of the tardiness on the part of municipalities in participating is due to their difficulty in financing. I myself would be in much sympathy with the proposal made previously that the provincial government should consider helping not only with the labour costs but also with the material costs. I think if the province was approving some particular projects they could see that the material costs did not get out of line. The province should come in to some extent with the material costs, as well as the labour costs.

That is the second point I want to make with emphasis. The first was conservation; the second is on the winter works programme.

I think, sir, that the province must humanize its welfare programme. I speak from my experience in my own small office in my riding.

Now perhaps I live in a riding that is hit harder by unemployment than others, because I am in a riding in which there are large numbers of newcomers to Canada and large numbers working in industry.

There are people in my riding who desperately want to work. They are young men with a mortgage on a small home and they are searching desperately for work and they are not getting it.

They have a solution. They can go down to the welfare office. And when they go down there they are told: "You will have to sell your house"—the thing they are struggling to hold onto to keep some pride and spirit in their own self respect—they are told: "Sell your house and your car and then you can get on welfare."

I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) that he should look at his regulations. I asked him at the start of this session if he had changed some of the general assistance regulations. One regulation is that 6 children in a family is the limit which can be covered by welfare grants. If a man had 13 children, he would still get the same as if he had 6.

Again, to get the maximum for rent—which is $50 a month—a man must have 12 rooms. I ask you, sir, how many unemployed have 12 rooms when they go to seek welfare assistance? The hon. Minister is not prepared to say whether these regulations will be changed. There are people in my riding who are deeply concerned and worried because of these regulations. Yet somehow in this House, in the warmth and comfort of it, we forget how drastically some of these harsh, narrow regulations affect the lives of fellow citizens of Ontario.

I speak now of Metropolitan Toronto which is running out of its $8 million welfare grants—and of similar municipalities. It is imperative that the people of Ontario, who are unemployed through no fault of their own, should not suffer through further minimizing of welfare grants.

This should be examined by the province of Ontario.

I listened with great interest to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare's report. He should be re-examining and considering the welfare grants across the province. He should consider easing up some of his regulations and ensure that men, because they are out of work, do not lose dignity in themselves and lose their own homes. In fact, he should encourage them to keep their heads up and to have some pride. He also should ensure that they can buy enough groceries and other necessities for their families.

The next aspect which needs attention is the matter of unemployment benefits, established years ago when the cost of living was considerably lower. I would suggest that these are inadequate today. I suggest they are inadequate because I find it hard to conceive a man with 3 or 4 children living on $36 a week. I suggest that because a man who wants to work and cannot find work in many cases is being penalized and undergoes personal suffering and misery. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we should certainly try to get the federal government to raise these unemployment insurance benefits. If they do not, we must take the lead ourselves in supplementing these benefits.

Perhaps some hon. members will say: "I do not think you are on very economically sound ground with respect to this." I point out, sir, that not only is this a social and humanitarian plea, but is also based on the sound economic foundation that by increasing the benefits to the unemployed, we are raising the purchasing power of the community.

The increase in demand provides greater production and employment. Unemployment benefits are often referred to as automatic economic stabilizers. No one is going to suggest that increased unemployment payments will of themselves correct the situation of economic stagnation or decline, but none can deny that they will help to improve the situation.

I can refer to the economic advisor for Senator Kennedy, soon to be the President of the United States, who has emphasized this economic point constantly throughout his campaign.

In summary, sir, concerning short-term activity to help the unemployed, I suggest we need an extensive and comprehensive programme of conservation and parkland development; we need greater financial support of the municipal winter works programme, sharing the cost of both labour and material; we need a substantial increase in the welfare grants to municipalities; and we need a programme of supplementary unemployment benefits.

I realize that this list is incomplete and I know that other hon. colleagues on this side of the House have emphasized other points.

Now I would like to turn briefly to some of the long-term projects which we should emphasize.

I think that some of these things should have been done several years ago; there is no question about it. I was pushing some of these points myself last year, but they were not taken up and therefore they will not take effect during this winter. I hope therefore, that the government will now take action so that next winter we will not again be faced with the knowledge that we cannot really relieve much of the unemployment situation.

First—and I think this is extremely essential—we must have some knowledge of just where the unemployment is, what kind of people are unemployed, and so on. We know, for example, that Professor Deutsch of Queen's university is presently completing a manpower survey for the Senate of Canada. But I think, sir, that Ontario is uniquely industrial and should itself, through its government, conduct a survey to understand from its own research team, the type of people, their ages, their skills and so on, who are presently unemployed.

I again emphasize, sir, to the hon. members on the other side of the House, this study of unemployment by the United States Senate. I must say, as an amateur, with respect to detailed financial aspects I find this report to be extremely interesting, and certainly it is a study that we should be copying here. It gives a clear picture of the trends taking place in the United States; the age levels of people becoming unemployed, the areas of unemployment, the opportunities for women in employment increasing more than those for men.

I strongly recommend that we look at these studies in the United States and undertake a similar study ourselves in Ontario. If we do not have the facts—and I would suggest that we really do not have the facts about unemployment—we are not able to tackle the problem effectively. We have done this in research about natural resources. Why can we not do it about human resources?

The next point has to some extent been tackled, but I strongly emphasize that the government should develop a broad and comprehensive programme of vocational training and should give financial support so that people can attend these instructional courses.

I am concerned—as the hon. Minister of Education is—why young people coming out of Ontario schools are not equipped to go into our labour force. If we look at the figures we would be even more worried.

In Ontario in 1958-1959 there were 7,680 pupils who dropped out of elementary school. There were 40,530 pupils who dropped out of high school, and of those 40,000 pupils, 49.1 per cent had no diplomas.

Surely, as we think of the necessity for training in our labour force today, we become alarmed—considering the amount of money that we pay towards education—when we realize that 49.1 per cent of these students have no diplomas. We become particularly alarmed when we realize that they are going out into a labour force which is increasingly demanding skills. They will only be joining, in many cases, the unemployment line.

We know that 60,000 of the unemployed are under 21. These are figures taken from the federal bureau of statistics.

We should therefore be concerned and should really examine our own educational system, because it has not been effective when we have a figure like 49.1 per cent who have not got diplomas and are fitted for nothing when they come into the labour force.

There are many reasons for these failures. I would suggest, sir, that one reason—and this, in fairness to the hon. Minister of Education is a tough one—is that I think there is an attitude in Canada; a tremendous desire, almost a snobbish desire; for all of us to want to send all our children through university. I do not think there is, in Canada, a full realization of the contribution which people do make to Canadian life, and the happiness they can get, by being in a trade.

I think that in Europe, and in Britain, there is a greater acceptance of the success that one can get from going into a trade. There must be work done here, with respect to advertising the values of a trade, and I would like to point out to the hon. Minister of Labour that he has an important role to play in trying to publicize and emphasize, in co-operation with the hon. Minister of Education, the contribution that students can make by going into trade schools and technical schools.

There is another question that can be developed, and that is with respect to a remark made by Dr. Murray Ross in the Canadian supplement of the British Book of the Year. He suggests that the fundamental philosophy practice and the pattern of education in Canada has not changed radically in the past 3 decades.

I listened to the reply of the hon. Minister of Education to my question this afternoon concerning where these people are going to work, after their aeronautical training in evening classes, and he was not sure. I cannot help having the feeling that the Ryerson school of technology, and all the trade schools that we have across the province, are not keeping close enough liaison with industrialists to discover the trends taking place for new skills across this province.

I would be very interested to hear from the hon. Minister of Education in what way, in the last decade, courses have changed at such places as the Ryerson school of technology. Students attending these courses feel, perhaps, that some of the courses, with respect to needs in labour, are somewhat outmoded.

Now, I come to the retraining of people. I remember asking the hon. Minister of Education, last year, whether he was making use of the schedule M. I had a suspicion, at that time, that he did not know what the schedule M was. That was unfortunate because I think he should have been making use of it last year. I reproached him on this.

Ontario—and I quote from the Financial Post with respect to this—is apparently one of the poorest provinces with respect to technical training in co-operation with the federal government. Yet we are the most industrialized province.

Surely we should be taking advantage of this situation of retraining people.

I see many of these people in my own riding, many Europeans, and I cannot think of anything more tragic or demoralizing for them than to be on welfare, or on unemployment, for the rest of the winter.

I think that this government should use the schools that it has—and the church basements and community centres—to teach English to the immigrant who is not able to get a job. I refer this to the hon. Minister of Labour who could seriously examine whether he could not in some way encourage language classes during the day for people who are either applying for welfare or applying for unemployment insurance. They should be given encouragement to get some kind of facility in English and also some skill in a trade.

I think, sir, the hon. Minister would be doing something very worthwhile for the immigrant worker if he would consider this.

I could go on with respect to retraining. I would again suggest that the hon. Minister might look at Sweden with respect to retraining and the survey that was done, for example, in this Senate report.

It points out that the real advantage of retraining is that it attracts industry to relocate where skilled workers are available.

I take another example in the United States. Hazeltown, Pennsylvania, is a depressed coal and textile area. The people in the community wanted to stay there, but they were concerned because it was not diversified industrially and they could not attract further industry when their own textile and coal industries were diminishing and jobs were being lost.

So they started, with the encouragement of the state of Pennsylvania, to take retraining courses. They sent advertisements through their publicity department to Europe and everywhere else to say: "If an industry will come in and settle with us we will give them a completely trained staff; we will retrain according to their requirements; and the Pennsylvania state government will help in this."

Today Hazelton—and it is written up in the Senate report—has attracted diversified industry. I think we could have done something like this with Elliot Lake. Hazelton is an example of what can be done by a community with co-operation from government.

My next point is—and I make this very briefly—with respect to encouraging more university education. Ontario, for example, gives in proportion less than 5 times the number of university scholarships that are given in Britain.

It is essential for us to change this because I am convinced there are able students who, because of financial reasons, cannot attend university. We have to move much further forward than just giving provincial scholarships to the 80 per cent average students because university trained people will provide jobs for others.

I would like to deal with the next point that—as well as retraining and education on a long-term basis—this government should be making a study of depressed areas. By that I mean places like Cornwall, Windsor and others. We should be doing that—a full study and analysis.

This was done in Britain—for example, in Wales—where there are depressed areas; they examined the situation and the economy.

I read the eastern Ontario economic survey with some interest but I felt this was more like chamber of commerce publicity rather than a good hard look at what was going on. I agreed with the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley) when he felt that it slurred over some of the hard-core problems of Cornwall.

I do not know if the government has initiated such studies, but I suggest that, with our economic depression, it should get into these.

My sixth point is that the government should, through the establishment of a municipal advisory planning council, assist the municipalities in planning for the extensive programme of urban renewals. I am not going into this, because I do not want to take much more time, but I would suggest to the hon. members on the other side that they should read the report of the committee of inquiry into the design of the residential environments.

We think of the heritage which we are passing on to our children, the heritage of sprawling urban communities, growing Ontario—and Toronto particularly, one of the fastest developing communities in the world.

We must look at the wisdom of other generations in other countries on planning their communities.

We really have a responsibility to ensure that we are not just developing large-scale slum areas.

I would like to go into this further, with respect to unemployment. When we consider the opportunity of the land assembly plan—low-cost housing—we should be getting after these immediately. We have the labour and we should also have the vision to get on with the work.

My seventh point would be to establish a municipal development bank which would assist the municipalities in planning and budgeting their capital expenditures and supplement the work of the municipal advisory planning council. In addition, the municipal development bank could assist the municipalities in obtaining funds for approved projects at rates of interest lower than those prevailing on the market at present.

This proposal is one in which, it is being suggested, the federal government should be taking a part. However, it does not appear likely to me that the federal government, in the financial mess it is in, is going to be able to play a role at this time. I suggest that the province should seriously consider establishing the bank itself in order to help the municipalities of Ontario. I would have liked to go into that further.

I have given what I feel are some short-term and some long-term suggestions with respect to unemployment. My hon. leader has suggested that we move into planning. The CCF are incompetent to the point of understanding what he means by this because, to them, planning is bureaucratic control. I would suggest, for their enlightenment, that they read the Senate report. In fact they should be the first to read it, because it gives examples of the kind of planning that the Liberals think about.

They think that planning is to encourage industry by government getting a platform and an atmosphere in which industry can develop. The Liberal idea of planning is not at all like the ill-fated and ill-starred Saskatchewan government plan which took over industry completely.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The hon. member should improve his knowledge.

Mr. Thompson: I have an intimate knowledge of this. I was talking to someone who was sent out—

Mr. Bryden: Out of the Toronto Globe and Mail?

Mr. Thompson: No, sir. I talked to someone who went out to have a look at the thriving industry—the shoe industry was one, and a number of others which were developed—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I say the CCF should keep out of private industry's efforts—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: All right. Now with respect to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: If the hon. CCF members will listen for a while, I will tell them.

There are a number of things we could do. One thing we could do for industry—and I throw this out just as a suggestion—is—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I am talking about the development of industry. We should have a look at what they are doing in other countries—this is just one suggestion for encouraging industry—and create a stockpile in case of a recession.

The government should say: "If you people would cut back some of your profits, and hold them in stock, and promise that you will use them as a lever for expansion when there is a recession, then you will get tax cuts on this."

Interjection by Mr. Bryden.

Mr. Thompson: Now the hon. member for Woodbine says: "There is a dreamer." Let me tell him, for example, it takes only a little reading to get some knowledge; and if he would read this book, for example, he would find that this is a particular approach that has worked in several countries, including Sweden.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I could go on a great deal longer. In some ways I am talking to deaf ears, but I always hope that the government will listen to us. We are sincere in the proposals that we are trying to make, because we are concerned with unemployment.

I assure hon. members of this: my little office is located above a meat store on Dovercourt street in a working area—I am not in the back of a big union executive office or hidden away somewhere, I am right out above the front of the store. I face the problems of fellow Ontario citizens who are very, very hard up, and very worried. Let me assure the House they are suffering mentally and physically because of unemployment.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate on unemployment, I would first say that I echo the thoughts of the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) when he opened his remarks; and early this afternoon, I wondered if we were doing the right thing by coming back into the debate on unemployment, such a serious problem.

When I finished listening to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope) who put such a jovial and humorous atmosphere into the situation, I thought that maybe we were making a mockery of what we consider a very serious situation.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that, as the debate went on, it did get a little more serious; and I think there have been some contributions made—until the final remarks of the last hon. member who spoke. He just got off the track all of a sudden when he was ready to give up. I do not think he should have spoiled a good contribution by getting so badly off the track.

I was going to deal in my effort with some of the things that are happening in Hamilton; some of the problems in Hamilton. I might add that I feel more serious about the situation now.

I was at the unemployment insurance office this morning at 9 o'clock, and it was crowded as usual, and there were looks of hope on some of the faces and looks of hopelessness on some of the others.

Many of the people looked half-frozen because they did not have adequate clothing for the zero weather we had in Hamilton this morning.

Although I was going to deal with some of the problems in Hamilton, because of some of the remarks made, I am going to say just a couple of words on another subject, and that is the mention of high wages.

I first came into the House in 1956—my first session—1957 and 1958; and, in all the speeches we heard from the hon. Ministers, there was news of the great progress of this province, the industrial progress of this province—and they always ended up with: “But we have got to be careful; the trade union movement has got to start and cut down; we have got to watch their requests for higher wages.”

This was echoed by business, during that period.

But, then, in the early part of 1959, a new trend took place. Some learned people—some people more concerned and more realistic—said outspokenly that the trade union movement and high wages were not responsible for our economic ills.

I thought that question had been cleared because it died away, but here again tonight we hear the hon. member for Huron ending up by saying that labour has to cut down wages, hold the line, and also making the ridiculous statement that they should start to increase their hours.

What a statement to make in a time like this, in this day and age of industrial democracy and a time of high unemployment!

Now government and big business continue to wail the propaganda song, that the loss of markets are the cause of unemployment, and that high Canadian wages are the cause of loss of markets.

To this, one should simply say to the wage earner: “Look at your take-home pay and see if you have got too much; see if you have got enough to take your real part in our economic society, to buy the things you need, to save for your house, your car, your TV set, your insurance, your medical bills, your children’s education, your family’s food and recreation.” Then I think they could take the high wage swan song for what it is.

I am not advocating at this particular time, Mr. Speaker, that there should be higher wages. But I certainly do not think that men in industry today are getting too much money and that the present wage scale has been the cause of the things we are faced with. The average wage in Ontario today is something like $78, and we must remember that this ranges from something like $35 up to maybe $155 a week.

Expert economists now agree that the root of our problem is the overexpansion, and spending, in the private structure of our economy and not enough in the public field for hospitals, schools, sewage disposal and other things for the public good. They are now admitting that there is a great lack of secondary industry.

Let us take another look at the trade union problem. When we talk about labour holding wages—I have said this before—I wonder if those who keep echoing this know that union members are a minority in the work force in this province and in this nation. Out of over two million in the work force in Ontario, there are only 500,000 in the organized trade union group. As I have said before, in our postwar industrial progress there is no organization that has played a bigger part in the industrial progress in this province than the trade unions. But when we look at the roughly one million in the work force who are not organized, and who are getting substandard wages and cannot take their part in the purchasing power of this country, we realize it helps to create the overall problem.

When we had the steel strike in 1958 we were faced with the same thing. We were told it was about time we stopped asking for increased wages and started holding the line. The steelworkers at that time were the first group to suggest a hold-the-line policy. When they set up the Royal commission to look into the affairs of the industrial strike in Hamilton, the steelworkers’ leaders offered to reduce their demands if they had some guarantee from the company that they would not increase prices. On the record is the answer from Mr. Hilton: “You look after your collective bargaining, we will look after the prices we charge.” And that has been the story right through every set of negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, a few facts and figures have been mentioned, and I want to make a few remarks because I think that we had a lesson on trade imbalance some years ago and we have not paid too much attention to it. According to the United Nations Year Book—the international trade statistics, 1955—of the 12 major countries, Canada has the highest import per capita of $3.15 billion in United States dollars at the rate of $225 per capita. United States had $3.923 billion for a rate of $26 per capita. If there had been the attention paid at that time to this imbalance, we maybe would not be in as bad shape as we are now.

In 1959 Canada imported $5.7 billion worth of goods and material. Of this amount 78 per cent was fully manufactured, ready for the market, and of this 78 per cent, 80 per cent was imported from the United States.

This has been said before, but I think it needs reiterating, as this is one of the bases of the problem. We are consuming these goods, Mr. Speaker, so I think we must start to produce them. Secondary industries in Canada must be developed if our present unemployed ranks are to be reduced and our growing working force kept in full production. No other sector of the economy offers the necessary potentials to maintain full employment.

Mr. Speaker, it has been often said in this nation that "as goes steel so goes Canada." And of the 17,000 in the steelworkers' union in Hamilton, 27 per cent are out of work on layoff—4,000 on layoff—some of the men with up to 18 years' service. There are an additional 700 out of that number on short time; as low as 3 days a week. This has the same effect as a 40 per cent cut in income for those involved, and many more still working are receiving lower pay cheques.

The picture is the same as this across the province in many industries, and even further cutbacks are indicated.

One does not have to say what effect this has on the retail businesses. The unemployment situation in Hamilton is still mounting with, at the present time 17,677 without work. This is over 1,400 more than a week ago, and about 4,500 more than for this time last year.

There are more people on city welfare at this time in Hamilton than since the end of the war. The welfare department in Hamilton had an overdraft of $265,000 two weeks ago and I assume that it is higher at this time. Many people are faced with the loss of their homes, their furniture and other chattels, and we must say that Christmas greetings for many this year will be untimely and out of place.

The winter works programme, as far as Hamilton and area are concerned, is just a drop in the bucket. Of some 90 projects approved in the Hamilton area, only 33 are under way—employing, when they get them under way, about 375 men. The government's immediate solution, calling for optimism and confidence, is hollow sounding at the best. For how can one be optimistic and confident with no job, and a family to keep?

I was a little startled, Mr. Speaker, in reading in the Toronto Daily Star of November 16, when the hon. Prime Minister, on laying the cornerstone of the new Scott mission on Spadina avenue on November 15, was quoted as saying:

If some of the welfare work done by the government could be handed over to the churches, it would be very well done. Here is a church that is doing its work, meeting a challenge of conditions which are going to be common in our great province which has added two million to its population in the last 15 years.

I agree that the Scott mission has done a great humanitarian service; but for the hon. Prime Minister of this province to complain that these conditions are going to continue to be common in such a great industrial province as Ontario, and to pass the buck to the church, is nothing less than scandalous and an admission that his government is incapable of solving the problem of unemployment.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I never said such a thing! That is just a figment of the hon. member's imagination.

Mr. Bryden: He did not say the hon. Prime Minister said it!

Hon. Mr. Frost: Such imagination as the hon. member has—

Mr. Bryden: He did not say the hon. Prime Minister said it!

Mr. Gisborn: What part of my remarks did the hon. Prime Minister not say?

Hon. Mr. Frost: When the hon. member referred to me, I thought he said that I said this.

Mr. Bryden: No, he did not say that the hon. Prime Minister said it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, what did he say then?

I had nothing to do with passing the buck to the church or anybody else. I say that such imagination as the hon. member has is distorted. I never said such a thing.

Mr. Gisborn: I quoted the hon. Prime Minister as saying that some of the welfare work done by the government should be handed over to the churches, and that this would be very well done.

Hon. Mr. Frost: When was this? Where was this?

Mr. Gisborn: The Toronto Daily Star, November 16. These are the words attributed to the hon. Prime Minister. He says that the mission was "meeting the challenge of conditions which are going to be common in our great province which has added two million to its population in the last 15 years."

And I say if those are the words of the hon. Prime Minister, it is scandalous to proclaim that these conditions are going to be common.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is all wrong! It is pure nonsense! The hon. member with a smooth look about him is trying to suggest I said things that I did not say at all.

Mr. Gisborn: The hon. Prime Minister has just been quoted. Is that an incorrect quotation?

Hon. Mr. Frost: As quoted by the hon. member. The hon. member is the disgrace around here, not me!

Mr. Gisborn: There it is, right there.

Mr. Bryden: Simmer down! Simmer down!

Mr. Gisborn: If that is not what the hon. Prime Minister said, that is the way I took it, because that is the implication I got from it.

The unemployed will only be optimistic and have confidence in the future if they have jobs and money to provide for themselves and their families. On the one hand we have unemployment while on the other we lack hospitals, schools, roads and low-cost housing. While these conditions prevail, we have no right to brag about our great industrial province.

I paid attention to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Public Works the other day when he outlined what his department was doing or has done. I am sure that is the job of his department; we did not think we were going to close it down! But when he ended up saying that, and I quote his remarks—I checked them, they are the same as in Hansard—"There are plenty of jobs available on the farms. Living conditions are good there, much of the drudgery is gone, much of the work is being done now by machinery," he said.

Here is a further quote: "Wages on many farms are comparable to wages in industry." He said that any man with a farm background who is unemployed should take a good look out in the country, that there might be an opportunity there which he never really realized existed.

I questioned the hon. Minister about it, and he wanted someone who could really do farm work. I guess it was one advertisement for one individual. I saw no further advertisements since that time.

Then I pick up the report from The Department of Labour this morning, and it says:

The continuing decline in persons employed in agriculture could cut Canada's farm labour force fewer than 500,000 by 1979 or 1980.

The report, which covered the 1921 to 1959 period, said the agricultural labour force reached its peak in 1939, that is just after the depression when they were working on farms because they had to eat. And it began a rapid decline in the 1940s. It said that between 1946 and 1959, the number of persons with jobs in agriculture declined from 1,186,000 to 692,000, an average decline of 38,000 a year.

The report attributed the decline mainly to greater mechanization on the farm and the subsequent need for fewer workers. Farm workers were mainly older persons now, with 42 per cent of them 45 years old or older. The report said average farm wages with board for male workers was $35 a month in 1941 and $120 a month in 1958. It said they still are lower than wages paid to many unskilled workers in other industries.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the winter works programme—

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): I would just like to say, Mr. Speaker, let the hon. member for Wentworth East ask this great farmer here on the far side! There are many hundreds of farmers who would still like to get some farm help if it is available to them.

Mr. Gisborn: I would say to the hon. Minister, I ask him to give us what he has to offer and we will find the people. When they approach the hon. Minister, he says: "Well, we want somebody who can milk a cow."

Hon. Mr. Connell: I never said that!

Mr. Bryden: He is not offering a very wide range of employment if he is putting that qualification in, so let him not criticize the fellows in the cities who do not try to take the jobs.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the winter works programme, and I picked up an article that struck me as odd. The mayor, Donald Loucks, said in Peterborough yesterday the city had rejected an appeal from 14 men that they should have been given 7 days' notice before being laid off on a winter works project last Friday. The men, employed on clearing rubbish from a polluted section of the Otonabee river said they were told Friday morning that work would end that afternoon.

The men were told yesterday that they were hired under a plan to employ 14 men for a 4-week period and after that they would be replaced by other unemployed men so that as many jobless as possible would be given work.

The men said, since they pay dues into the national union of public employees, they should have been given notice under a clause that the union has in its contract with the city covering outside workers.

The point is, that here they are using the winter works programme to in some sense violate union contracts and to subsidize poverty in that city: Hire so many for a period and lay them off and put another so many on. The men who are laid off have to go back then and re-establish themselves on welfare, or whatever else they live on, after that period is gone. I think that a closer look has to be taken at some of those things.

There have been a lot of statistics mentioned and an hon. member said the problem is not as serious as it seems. But the latest figure from unemployment insurance is that unemployment insurance claimant No. 330,200 registered by October 31, up 18 per cent from the previous month and 32 per cent above comparable 1959 levels. This is from the bureau of statistics report today.

So it is a serious matter, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore, I certainly support the amendment to the amendment: providing, in co-operation with the federal government, 75 per cent of materials as well as labour cost incurred in approved winter works projects; increasing allowances to the unemployed and other welfare payments; urging the federal government to increase unemployment insurance payments so as to expand consuming purchasing power; laying immediate plans for large-scale expansion of public housing projects, with particular emphasis on the provisions of low-rental housing; taking full advantage of the provisions of schedule M of The Vocational Training Act under which the federal government will contribute 75 per cent of the operating and capital costs involved in providing periods in technical training; introducing legislation immediately to reduce the legal maximum work week from 48 to 40 hours.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time with a very heavy heart indeed, because I want to say something about the city of idle men. No doubt hon. members have looked at the Toronto Star Weekly of November 19, a copy of which I have in my hand. There is quite a lengthy article about Cornwall and its position in regard to unemployment at this time. I am sure that a number of hon. members last night saw Norman Depoe's programme, on television, demonstrating the position that exists at the present time in the city of Cornwall.

I was not able to see that programme because I was on my way to Toronto. But I believe that it went over the Canadian broadcasting system right across Canada and it showed pictures of the idle mills with no smoke coming out of the stacks. I think that has demonstrated that we have in Cornwall today a number of people being forced out of business through assignments and other causes owing to the unemployment situation.

When this debate started, Mr. Speaker, at the first part of the session, I obtained a report from the national unemployment office which showed—and this is under date of October 31, last—a total of 2,867 people registered for unemployment with that office.

I have been keeping track from week to week since that time up until today, and I find that each week there has been a substantial increase in the unemployment list. I heard on the radio the day before yesterday that we have now over 3,600 people unemployed in the city of Cornwall.

Mr. Speaker, when this motion was brought before the House, and when some of the hon. members on this side of the House were delivering speeches, the hon. Prime Minister said: "Wait until you hear from the various Ministers in my government." Well, Mr. Speaker, I have waited all this time and we have heard a number of the hon. Ministers from that side of the government open this fine green door, and we waited with the greatest of expectations.

I was very optimistic that something would come from the hon. Ministers on that side that would relieve the situation, not only in the city of Cornwall but right across the whole province. Yet, up until this time tonight, I do not think that a single hon. Minister or one hon. member supporting the government on that side, has come forward with any solution whatever which will relieve the situation we are facing, with this cold and dreadful winter coming upon us at this time.

It is very interesting to hear what the hon. Ministers had to say. It was the same old story we have heard from time to time, year after year, that their programme was employing so many people. We have heard that with the winter works programme, we have heard it in other lines of argument both by the hon. Ministers and by the hon. government members supporting it, and I cannot see in any of the programmes how we are going to better our position.

I want to talk about how the situation has come about to a great extent in the city of Cornwall and in that area. As hon. members know, when the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario and the seaway authority started the joint project, we had great hopes in that part of the province, and men flocked there from distant points to secure employment. The wages were high.

The city of Cornwall for a few years did have quite a boom. There was quite a bit of prosperity in the area.

Then the projects came to completion, or almost, and men were laid off. A number of those men who came in there, got married, purchased homes, and they liked Cornwall and the surroundings. They thought when this project was completed that industry would flock into the area and they would secure further employment.

That has not taken place, Mr. Speaker, much to the regret of the people in that area who have been doing everything in their power to induce industry to come to Cornwall.

Something else we should look at, at the present time, is the situation that those people are in. We had the closing of Canadian cotton mills in Cornwall within the last year or so, which threw another 1,500 people out of work. These men did not know any trade other than working in the cotton mills; men of 40 and 45 years of age who have never done anything else in their lives, and who cannot qualify for some other line of endeavour.

There has been mention of The Department of Education setting up schools. I heard the hon. Minister say this afternoon that they can set up one of those schools in great haste. But I say to the House that they are moving in much greater haste now than they did all fall, because away back in the summer, through the local boards of education and through the members of the council in the city of Cornwall, they endeavoured to get a school established there. There were over 700 men registered to take special classes in order to equip themselves to take other employment.

We have only to look at the amount of money the city has to pay to take care of the relief of Cornwall. I have the statement for October before me and there is something which is astonishing. It is something I think we should take particular note of because—for the month of October—it amounts to $66,802.81. Now, with the increase I mentioned, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, is that net or is that contributed to?

Mr. Manley: That is the report as it is sent in to the government. That is the city of Cornwall's relief bill: $66,802.81.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The government pays 80 per cent of it.

Mr. Manley: With the increase in the number of unemployed that is building up from week to week and from month to month, what will be the amount of money paid towards direct relief between now and next April? And what can be more degrading to a man than to have to go and ask direct relief for himself and his family?

I do not know why this government has moved so slowly—or the Ottawa government—because I say to the House this evening, and I say in no uncertain terms, that there was neglect on the part of this government to take care of the situation in Cornwall.

They talk about how much they are doing. The government themselves are as much to blame for the situation as industry or anyone else. We see government departments laying off men from time to time, and they are doing it at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Will the hon. member let me ask a question?

Mr. Manley: Just a week or so ago, Mr. Speaker, the St. Lawrence seaway authority sent out a notice to their workers stating that, as of November 30, their services were no longer required.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: They did lay off men, but now they are starting to take a few of them back again. The hon. member has no complaints, really, about the St. Lawrence development commission, has he?

Mr. Manley: Just that they laid men off.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: But he is pretty happy with them?

Mr. Manley: Well, I am giving you the facts, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: I just asked the hon. member, did he not agree to a simple fact?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Manley: They have laid them off; they are hiring some of them back again.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Cornwall saw this situation coming and, as I said, have been endeavouring to do something about it.

They have formed what we call the Cornwall industrial development association. They have gone out, and they are doing it at the present time, selling shares at $25 a share; and they have already bought the entire cotton mill plant. They have 1,250,000 square feet of floor space available. They have acquired those buildings for the purpose of renting, or selling, or doing anything possible in order to help small industry get established.

The people in Cornwall behind this project are just ordinary citizens concerned with the future of Cornwall and this province; and they are endeavouring to do this, and to spend their own money in order that Cornwall can come back again to the position which it rightfully deserves.

There has been mention of solutions, of what could be done. I think that this government should look at the situation particularly in Cornwall, because the hon. Prime Minister in his remarks early in the debate, did say that the average of unemployment across the country was about 5 per cent, as I remember the figure. I am sorry to say that the percentage in Cornwall is over 3 times that amount.

That is a situation, I think, that the hon. Prime Minister should take a look at.

I had a motion on the order paper, a year ago, in regard to Elliot Lake, and we had quite a debate on it; but the situation in Cornwall is just as bad as it was at Elliot Lake one year ago. I think the government should move in all haste to try to do something for the people of Cornwall because they are endeavouring to help themselves.

Space is available there, and I am sure that some industry can be brought into the area. I am sure that this government can do something to help locate them there.

Something should be done along the lines of setting a certain amount of cheap power aside for that area, because we have the development right there and that is where the power is being created.

Then I think we have to go a little further, and go into the high schools each night and give an hour or so of training to young men, or men in their middle age who seek other employment.

If we are going to be the industrial centre that we would like to be in this part of the province—and again I quote the words of the hon. Prime Minister: “The gateway to eastern Ontario”—then I think it is time that we had a school of technology set up right in Cornwall, in order to train all those young men who are seeking employment for the first time.

The curriculum we have in the high schools today is not sufficient to take care of our young generation. Many Cornwall citizens cannot afford to send their children elsewhere to receive higher education. But, if we had a school of technology teaching all the different trades, right in the city of Cornwall, then people residing there could avail themselves of that higher learning.

Then, of course, we have a situation today, a very serious situation, in eastern Ontario—and no doubt it applies to other parts as well—where we find ourselves in difficulty in regard to retarded children. Cornwall needs a school for retarded children at the present time.

The numbers are increasing all the time and I think that we, as members of the Legislature, have a duty to those unfortunate children and to help families that have the misfortune to have a retarded child.

The situation at the moment, in regard to the hospital at Smiths Falls, is that there has been a waiting list there for years and years. You cannot get a child in there. We have the richest province in the Dominion of Canada yet we are in a position of that kind.

We have heard the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) say that highway No. 401 will be rushed to completion ahead of schedule. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that, under the circumstances at the present time, we could greatly increase the work force in this province if we would go ahead with that highway at an even greater pace than that described by the hon. Minister.

I was much interested in what the hon. Minister of Planning and Development was saying a while ago, when he mentioned “Buy Canadian.” But, I would say to him, and to the hon. members of the government, that they should go down to Ottawa, if that is their belief, and talk to the people in authority there—because in 1959, Mr. Speaker, our trading deficit was $593 million.

To a greater extent than any other nation, our imports consisted, as usual, of manufactured goods. These are reported in detail by the federal bureau of statistics, including the fascinating information that we import $2.6 million in ballpoint pens and $1.3 million worth of artificial teeth into this country.

We are not doing a good job in agricultural and resources products. For example, imports of fruits and vegetables reach about $100 million. There are comparable imports of lumber, plywood, pulp and insulating board.

Industrial and agricultural machinery and equipment alone make up by far the largest group. Manufacturing of those machines and apparatus in Canada would help balance our trade and provide jobs for about 300,000 Canadians.

If the government is so concerned, and if the hon. Minister of Planning and Development is so sure, that this is the right course to follow, then I would say that the hon. Prime Minister and as many hon. Ministers as possible should go down to Ottawa and see if they can straighten the situation out.

Mr. Speaker, the present hon. Prime Minister of this province was with the now Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada in those elections only a few years ago—I remember them quite well—when he said: “If you elect me as Prime Minister of Canada, no one will suffer from unemployment.” I say that there are thousands and thousands of people, just as this wonderful Christmastime is coming up, who are suffering and starving in this land of plenty. And it is time, I think, that we should not have lip service alone, but some action.

It will be a bad day, Mr. Speaker, if we do not take some action and take it pretty soon; because, if we do not—well, then, someone else is going to and it will be just too bad for Ontario and for Canada.

Hon. Mr. Frost: If the hon. members across ever got in, it would be bad for Ontario and Canada. That would, indeed, be unfortunate.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Although I rise particularly to bring some information in connection with the federal programme of assistance to municipalities in the construction of sewage works, I would like to relieve some of the anxiety expressed by the hon. member for Dovercourt, regarding the lack of conservation effort on the part of those responsible for such effort in this province, by pointing out to him that last year, after this province had produced crops for many years—more than a century—it produced the largest yield of agricultural products that has ever been produced in this province. That is, in the year 1959.

The average yield per acre was greater, as a whole over the province, than it had ever been before.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Allan: So, perhaps, we are not doing such a bad job after all.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They live in a state of gloom over there. That is not a government publication, that is by—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Allan: So land is being well used and it is being well cared for in this province; and the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The year 1959 was a record one.

In connection with the programme of construction of sewage projects as outlined by the federal government, I would like to inform the hon. members opposite of some of the facts that they might have had earlier this afternoon if they had not been so impatient. And that is, that—as is known to them—the federal government is prepared to undertake a programme of sewage construction, throughout our country, of $100 million.

A very great part of that programme—likely more than half of that programme—will be taken up by the municipalities of this province. And I want to assure the hon. members of this House, our water resources commission has been interested in the proposals. They are prepared to co-operate entirely with the federal government, and to assist the municipalities in every possible way to have the programme get under way almost immediately.

I am informed by officials of that commission that there are, already, prepared plans for $3 million worth of sewerage work which should get under way very, very soon and will help to provide work during this winter—and, of course, later in the year and during the coming winter—that is, the winter of 1961.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Minister would answer a question?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes.

Mr. Singer: I wonder if arrangements are being made or being contemplated to allow municipalities to come before the municipal board to take advantage of this, without the municipal board applying the present standards? In other words, they relate assessment to borrowing capacity, and very often municipalities cannot go into these schemes because of the rulings of the board.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I was coming to that, if the hon. member would give me a little more time.

I think he already knows that this government facilitates anything that is good, and that the Ontario municipal board will give the applications in this connection top priority. Nothing will delay them. No blocks will be thrown under the wheels to slow up these undertakings.

And I might mention as well that the water resources commission will co-operate fully with the municipality. In addition, plans have been prepared for water works to the extent of $6 million. So rather than suggest that this government has done nothing, I am sure that the hon. members agree that everything that a government might be expected to reasonably do is being done with the utmost dispatch.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): In rising to take part in this debate, I do so in one way with regret; and that is regret because this government has not seen fit to take any immediate action to remedy the unemployment situation. I have to agree that the long-term programme has some merit, but on the short-term programme there is very little that is going to remedy the problem of unemployment, especially in the area of Hamilton.

I think there is always a reason for any recession or depression; and I think, to find out the reason, we must go back to the last depression in the 1930s. At that time it was a simple thing to define—there was universal unemployment.

I will not be long so the hon. members do not need to worry about the length of time I am going to take on this.

But at that time we were not able to find a remedy—not a permanent remedy—for unemployment. The only remedy we were able to find was the one that actually was not good; there was a war, and we were able to find work for our young people with a gun, and I think that was bad. At that time we were able to find work, also, for people in Canada, in supplying war needs.

With the end of the war, the backlog of unsatisfied needs kept our plants rolling for a few years. Then was the time we should have planned for the future, but neither the Liberal federal government of that day, nor the provincial Progressive-Conservative government of that day saw fit to plan. Therefore, the people of Hamilton, of Ontario, of Canada, are now suffering.

I would like to give some figures on the unemployment situation in Hamilton as it is now. I have looked up the figures for Hamilton and the unemployment shows a sharp increase over last year.

This weekend, there are 17,677 people in Hamilton, without jobs, who face the coming winter months with dread. They represent 10.7 per cent of the work force.

More than one person in 10 is unemployed in Hamilton. Last year 8.1 per cent were unemployed in Hamilton. We are 2.6 per cent worse off this year.

Now, as a rule, March is the worst time of the season—when we have most of our unemployment—and last March we had 17,000 people unemployed in Hamilton, out of a labour force of 163,000. This was 10.4 per cent unemployed. If we use this same percentage rate increase from November, 1959 to March, 1960—which was 4.1—and apply it to the November, 1960, figure of 8.8, we must estimate that 12.9 per cent of our work force of 165,000 will be unemployed.

It would be a most conservative guess that, by next March, 21,285 people in Hamilton will be wondering how to meet the rent or the mortgage payments.

The inability to maintain these responsibilities has an ever-widening effect on those still fortunate enough to have jobs. When you consider that we are 2.6 per cent worse off this year than last year, we could have between 25,000 and 26,000 unemployed by March, 1961.

In October this year, we had 4,820 people on city relief welfare rolls. In November, we had 5,574 on the relief rolls, an increase of 27 per cent over last year.

The people are either unemployable or have been unemployed so long that they no longer receive unemployment insurance benefits. In other words, they have been living for a long period of time on a sub-standard basis; and I am of the strong opinion that it is necessary for welfare benefits to be increased to a point where these people have at least sufficient purchasing power to maintain a decent standard of living. It is the responsibility of this provincial government to make these funds available.

This is a general picture in Hamilton; now I would like to take a look at some of the industries.

We will take the secondary industries in Hamilton—for instance, the Westinghouse Company. In the last 15 years, employment in the Westinghouse plants has dropped from 6,500 to 2,800. I notice the government plans to promote secondary industry. I wish some emphasis had been placed on recovering some of the secondary industries that have been lost to us.

The electrical industry is a good example of a secondary industry that is disappearing. They used to manufacture most of the parts for their products. Over the past several years, they have manufactured less and less, and have imported more and more parts from the United States. They are becoming an assembly plant only, and this has resulted in the loss of many jobs and skills.

The situation is similar in the auto industry.

At the present time, the Studebaker plant in Hamilton is shut down completely this week; and, starting next week they are going on a 4-day week, so the earning power of the auto industry in Hamilton is very bad.

We all know the situation in the textile industry, where plant after plant has had to close down. There are about 300 more truck drivers out of work in Hamilton this year than last year.

I had an odd experience this weekend. We were talking about the unemployment situation in Hamilton when one of the people in my riding called me up to say he had just received a letter from a friend of his in Scotland saying he was coming over to Canada. He said there seems to be lots of work because the immigration department in Scotland, through the counsellor, had told him there was all kinds of work for carpenters and painters in the Hamilton and Toronto area.

Now I do not know about the Toronto area, but I certainly know that, in the Hamilton area, out of 800 union carpenters, we have 300 of them walking the streets today.

I also have clippings from papers in the old country where they are advertising for workers, foundry workers, painters and carpenters.

Now I think the time has come for, I presume, the hon. Minister of Labour to maybe get in touch with Ottawa to see if this cannot be remedied. I do not think these people at this time should be brought over here under false pretences.

I think if there are jobs here for them, we certainly should have them. I am one who is definitely not against immigration; I think we need it, but I do believe it must be on a planned basis.

I do not think it can be the type that is going on now, where people in England and Scotland are told there are all types of work for them over here, when actually there is no work at all.

Take that person; he lands here, and there is no work for him; what happens? He can do one of two things; he can pack up and go back to the old country—and that is not a very good public relations job as far as Canada is concerned, because he definitely is not satisfied and he will tell that to the people over there—or he can go on relief here. Neither one of those two prospects is too good.

I think we need some other remedies for the unemployment situation, and I would just like to state a few of them in the Hamilton area.

On the top of the mountain in Hamilton we have the Barton street high school, built this year—in fact it is not quite completed. It is intended to hold 1,000 pupils and that school today—and as I say it is not completed—already has 65 pupils in it.

We need schools in the Hamilton area.

We also need hospitals. I had to go in the hospital this fall; I went to see my doctor on September 16 and I asked when I would be able to go into the hospital; the nearest date when I could get a bed in the hospital was two months later, November 14. As it happened there was a cancellation and I got in a shade early.

Now those are two things that are needed in Hamilton very badly and there is certainly lots of work in building hospitals. The east end of Hamilton needs a hospital very badly.

We have another situation there where we have people working in plants on an overtime basis. Those plants are working on the basis of a 40-hour week, and at the same time they are on two shifts of 12 hours.

I would think, at a time like this, there should be a ban on overtime. I think this government has a responsibility to try to see that the work of this province is spread around, and I feel that those plants that are working this type of overtime should not be allowed to do it. They should be forced, in some way, to bring people, skilled people, in off the streets, because we have lots of skilled people in Hamilton out of work in practically any trade you can think of.

We have other plants in Hamilton that work, although they are only working one shift, practically every night until 8 and 9 o'clock. I do not think there is any need for that, and I think this government has some responsibility to prevent it.

We have the 48-hour week in Ontario. I believe that now the 40-hour week is what is needed, and I think that this government should make it the law, at least in the city areas. The small towns, perhaps, do not have that problem but, in the city areas, I think the 40-hour week is very important. I hope this government will see fit in this session to make that one of the laws.

Even with the 48-hour week, we have factories in Hamilton—small factories, mind you—that are working 52, 54 and 56 hours. Now that employee can kick about it; he can put in a complaint to the hon. Minister of Labour; but where does he end up?

He ends up out on the street—because he will likely end up being fired for putting in the complaint; that is all the protection that fellow has in a small plant. In the union plants it is a little different; he has a little more protection.

I was interested in two things here this evening. I read on November 22, I believe it was, that the Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker made this statement: "Let us turn again to productivity."

He obviously had some solution under wraps. We must find out what it is, and I hope he will tell me, because we have 17,277 workers and their families in Hamilton who are very anxious to cast out gloom and return to productivity.

The hon. Minister of Planning and Development in his speech tonight said—and this is a quote from him: "I am an optimist, I have faith in this government." All I can say is that one has to be an optimist to have confidence in this government.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): In my riding of Nipissing, there are also many unemployed. I notice the present mayor said the other day that, with the winter works programme, there is no need for any man here willing to work to be out of a job. It is rather strange because there are 1,400 of them in the eastern part of Nipissing—1,400 men and almost 500 women—who were registered with the unemployment insurance as being unemployed.

I noticed some facetious remark made about dentures when the hon. member for Stormont was speaking. Unfortunately, it will not be dentures they will be having in Cornwall, it will be indentures, I am afraid, if present conditions continue.

We have in the city of North Bay and in the adjacent areas of Widdifield and West Ferris, certain winter works programmes. They are not very large—some sewage works in North Bay and some in the township of Widdifield, waterworks and construction of a park there that will give a certain amount of employment to those on the rolls.

We have a new shopping centre to be erected by one of the national organizations that has shopping areas all over the country. I understand they are rushing it immediately so that they can offer work for some of the people in the area who are unemployed.

The number of unemployed is being added to annually, not only by those who are seasonally tossed out of work, but by the thousands of older workers who are tossed out because there are no further jobs for them in their particular industry. Also, the labour force is being swelled annually by those thousands of young people who enter the work force for the first time.

How to get these young people and older men into the work force is an urgent problem at the moment. My hon. leader and the other hon. members of my party have offered what I think are very valuable suggestions, and I think they were offered most seriously. Certainly, anyone who heard the hon. member for Stormont, a few moments ago, could not but have a feeling of sympathy for the people of that once very important industrial area. Other areas too; in this city, in Hamilton, in Windsor, all have been pointed out by other hon. members as being areas where there are thousands out of work at the moment.

This is the most serious domestic problem. We have had suggestions and solutions by the federal government. Those were probably for long-range plans. But for the moment we need something, as my hon. leader has said, to put them to work and also, the hon. Minister of Highways has said he is desirous of putting men to work so that they will have some type of pleasant Christmas.

I must, at the moment, congratulate the hon. Minister of Highways and his people, particularly in my own area. There was a resident in the Redbridge area who lost his home recently by fire. He has 5 young children; all of pre-school age. The Department of Highways in the district of Nipissing took him on immediately to give him some employment. I think they should be congratulated for that.

It is bad enough now, and those of us who have some experience of the 1930s hope it will be nothing like that. But we all know, as the other hon. members have pointed out, that as the winter progresses, if history repeats itself, there will be other thousands added to this force. We have memories of the 1930s, and we hope the spectres that stalked the land in those days will not appear again.

It is certainly a grim outlook in many cities and our unemployment insurance funds are drained, almost to an alarming degree. There has been an extension of grants to municipalities to engage in winter works programmes. But so many of these municipalities are already staggering under financial burdens that it is a question whether they will be able to take advantage of them.

Our railways, at one time our most stable industry, have been undergoing great changes and a period of massive readjustment in the last 3 or 4 years. I think both transcontinental railways have reduced their staffs at least 12 per cent in the last 3 years.

The problem of automation, of course, is basic in North America. It certainly appears to be basic in this railway industry. New industries, therefore, must be located to take up the slack; to put back into the work force those already unemployed and to prepare for those who are to come into that work force next June.

The layoffs in the railways have hit my own home area. At one time the city of North Bay was a great railway centre. We had the headquarters of the Algoma district of the Canadian Pacific Railway, also of the Canadian National Railways and it is still the headquarters of the Ontario Northland Railway.

In recent months many long-service employees of these 3 lines have been discharged with just a few days' notice. On a Monday morning they come to work and they find that after 20 years of employment—and sometimes up to almost 40 years and more of service for these railways—they have been told: "You are no longer wanted!" They are thrown away just like an old shoe.

Many of them, however, are still young enough to benefit from some retraining programme. I certainly hope that in my own area they will take advantage of this retraining programme and make arrangements to set up a committee so that they can enter into a liaison with The Department of Education.

I am sure we have in the House two members of the commission. We have the hon. Minister who answers for the Ontario Northland Railway, and they certainly must know that there are many employees of that railway who have lost their jobs recently. I understand the railway is down some 40 per cent. However, I noticed the hon. chairman of the commission, just recently, painting that glorious picture of Moosonee. I hope it crystallizes. But he looks forward to the day when there will be a 400 per cent increase in the freight carried over that line. I hope it occurs in my time, certainly in the time of the younger hon. members of this House anyway.

There must be a retraining of these young men in the declining industries. They have done so in Britain, as the hon. member for Dovercourt has said. They have done it also in Sweden, and certainly it can be done here. We, too, must take people out of declining industries and put them into industries that are expanding.

We should have had a realistic survey of the work force of this country long ago. The veterans' organization to which I belong has been demanding that for a long, long time.

We asked not only the present administration, but also the previous one—the St. Laurent government too—to conduct this survey; but nothing was done.

It is strange, when one looks in the issues of the metropolitan newspapers, to find long columns of jobs open in various industries. They remain vacant and, at the same time, many are walking the streets unemployed.

I think we should certainly attack this thing properly; we should have a survey to find out just what talents are available and what skills are needed.

The time is getting on and I shall certainly touch on some of these points later. I want to point out that certain things in my own particular riding can be done to help the situation.

I must again congratulate the hon. Minister of Highways. As he mentioned this afternoon he has brought forward works in certain areas, particularly in the western end of my riding—the Noelville-Lavigne area. I only hope that he is going to do some structural jobs. Also, I hope that he will do something about highway No. 64, so that the bridge material, which has been lying there for some time, may be put into use.

I believe in the township of Chisholm they have a couple of structural jobs that are needed and I hope he will do something about them.

Also, if there is anything planned for the trans-Canada highway—the original one that runs from east to west through the city of North Bay—if there is anything further planned on highway No. 17 east of North Bay, certain jobs can be done in the winter time. We certainly can do some brushing and grubbing and other jobs.

Perhaps we can put some trucks to work too, because the truckers are definitely in a bad way in many parts of my riding. Many of them do not own their trucks but are paying on them. With no jobs and no money either, for food, their trucks and their source of employment for the next year will be gone.

Then, as I say, there are some dangerous hills in certain sections. I know in the township of Bonfield, the school bus drivers have complained about the situation. We have had accidents in connection with school buses recently—not level crossings—in my riding. There is always a possibility of serious accidents on these dangerous hills, and we want to avoid those if at all possible.

Then in respect to The Department of Lands and Forests, my hon. leader spoke about the project which could be done there—a project of conservation.

We had a disastrous situation in my riding last spring. It was not declared a disaster area. I do not know why because there were certainly those who suffered there. They felt it was disastrous, certainly to their own business. That will be touched on later.

There are projects of conservation too. We need a conservation authority. The riding of Nipissing is faced annually with the possibility of floods and thousands and thousands of dollars' worth of damage. In fact, I think through the years there has been millions of dollars' worth of damage created—

Hon. Mr. Nickle: Now, can my hon. friend tell that story?

Mr. Troy: I thank the hon. Minister very much for reminding me. I did not need it though, I had it down here on the paper,

I was going to say that we hope that from a meeting which the hon. Minister arranged, he give me permission to release a story that some preliminary action will be taken so that, eventually, the area of Nipissing will be protected except from some disaster over which we have no control—

Mr. Bryden: He is doing pretty well by himself.

Mr. Troy: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Nickle: We are just trying to help him.

Mr. Troy: Well, the hon. Minister is quite helpful. I hope it continues that way. I hope also that the vision about the Ontario Northland Railway will materialize. I see a picture here of the hon. Minister waving his hand in the summertime, and saying that the railway may be the key to the treasure chest of the north. I hope that we both shall see that day.

I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) is not here. There are certain areas in my riding in which access roads could be built with advantage. He knows them and I hope he will be able to build them from the money available.

I understand, from the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs when he spoke the other night, there is a certain amount of money available for these projects.

There are several cases there in which money can be spent with good effect.

There is, in the western section of my riding, in Haddow township, a wonderful area for parks. I understand the department has that in view. I hope that some of that work can be done this winter because, in that section, there are many men who are unemployed. As the hon. Minister of Planning and Development knows, there are many unorganized townships in my riding, and there are no municipalities to organize winter works programmes for them. I hope the hon. Minister will consider that.

Finally, there are works that might be done this winter in regard to public buildings. I know that the former member for my riding, who is now the sheriff of Nipissing, has said that there was to be a highway building—the land is already purchased—a great highway building on which $1.5 million was to be spent in North Bay. That is a project that the hon. Minister of Public Works might get on with.

As the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) knows—he has said so several times—the Ontario hospital in my riding is still without that very important heart of a hospital, the surgical unit. Possibly he might get on with that.

I hope that considerable work will be done on the home for the aged for West Nipissing—the sod was turned recently, but I do not know how much they will be able to do in the winter.

I hope, too, that The Department of Lands and Forests will come back again to that project they had in Sturgeon Falls. They planned for a building up there which was to be used partly as a sign-painting building.

I know that the ranger headquarters at Trout lake is not nearly as commodious as that lovely building I had the pleasure of being in last Saturday in Pembroke. I hope they will put up the building in Sturgeon Falls so that they will be able to do the job which is intended.

Now, these are some suggestions. I say, again, that my hon. leader and the hon. members of my party who have spoken before have given what, I thought, were good suggestions. The hon. member for Kenora gave some for his section of northwestern Ontario, and the hon. member of the government for the riding of Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle), practically gave a speech which could have been given on this side of the House. He pointed out various things which can be done in the western end of my riding.

The hon. leader of the Opposition has outlined a very thorough project and a good plan. As he pointed out, the people are hungry now and will be much hungrier later on. So let us not only carry on with the long-range planning, but get on with the job of getting action into the work programme.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Prime Minister apparently is determined to have another of his endurance contests even this early in the session, I have no doubt he hopes that those who have had to endure listening to the numerous hon. Ministers who participated in this debate would by now have run out of endurance. However, that is not so. In fact, after listening to the hon. Ministers, I believe it is important to review some of the basic factors in this situation.

In October, 1959, the unemployment figure for Canada was 251,000. By March, 1960, the peak month, this had grown to 609,000 or an increase of 234 per cent. The Ontario figures were 72,000 for October, 1959, and 151,000 for March, 1960, or an increase of 210 per cent.

Let us bring it forward to the current figure, Mr. Speaker. In October of 1960, unemployment stood at 368,000 in Canada as a whole, and 120,000 in Ontario. If the increase between October and March is in the same proportion this winter as it was last winter, we can expect that by next March there will be more than 800,000 unemployed in Canada and more than 250,000 in Ontario.

I have heard it said that a girdle is a device designed to prevent figures from becoming facts. If we are to prevent the figures I have just cited from becoming tragic facts, we will need a much stronger and better constructed girdle than has been proposed to date by either a federal or provincial government.

The plain fact, which is only imperfectly comprehended by both the federal and provincial governments, is that we have entered upon a major economic crisis. Moreover, it is not something which has come upon us suddenly. Though the Liberals are now trying to make political capital out of the situation at the expense of the Tories—this ought to please one hon. Minister without Portfolio—the truth is that the origins of the present situation can be clearly traced back to the Liberal administration which preceded the present Tory regime. This becomes clear when one studies and sees the objective figures of unemployment.

In October, 1956, unemployment amounted to 3 per cent of the labour force on a seasonally adjusted basis. In the ensuing month, with a Liberal administration, this figure increased month by month and reached 4.4 per cent in June of 1957. In that month the long-suffering Canadian public threw off the Liberal saddle that they had endured for 20 years and put in the Tories. They put in the Tories, acting on the assumption—which they have now found to be mistaken—that a change was bound to be an improvement.

Actually there was no real change at all. The Tories merely carried on the policies of the discredited Liberal administration and the drift towards economic crisis, which had already started, continued unchecked.

By August, 1958, the seasonally adjusted figure of unemployment had reached 7.5 per cent of the labour force. There was some improvement during 1959, but during 1960 the trend has been sharply upward again and the figure reached 7.6 per cent in October of this year.

During the past 12 months the average monthly unemployment figure in Canada has been 420,000. That is not the seasonal peak; that is the average over the whole year including what are supposed to be the favourable months of the summertime. There seems little doubt that, when the seasonal peak is reached next March, well over 10 per cent of the labour force will be unemployed. This is an indication of the size of the emergency we are now facing.

In relation to this crisis, the attitudes of hon. government spokesmen can be classified under 3 main headings.

First we have the expression of moss-encrusted Tories such as the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions who was left behind by the tide somewhere around 1890 and has not learned that the world has changed since then; or, by the hon. member for Huron who is once again singing the old Tory refrain that the unemployed are responsible for unemployment.

Then, as a second category, various hon. Ministers of the Crown have favoured the House with homilies about the little rays of sunshine their departments are spreading over the province, when it has already been demonstrated that the activities of these departments, taken together, are inadequate to deal with the present crisis.

Thirdly, almost all hon. government spokesmen have branded as pessimists those who want to face facts. Let us bury our heads in the sand, they say in effect, and refuse to admit that there is an unemployment crisis. This attempt to escape from reality may provide the government with a sense of well-being but it is small consolation for the thousands of people who are looking for jobs and whose hope is dwindling fast.

As far as my hon. friends to the right are concerned, I would like to congratulate many of them for their contributions to this debate. At times one would almost think that they are ready to accept the CCF programme, though unfortunately they always seem to lose their courage just at the critical moment. Even so, there is obvious hope that in time they will at least move to the left of the Tories. I am hopeful, I am an optimist, like the hon. members over there were saying we should all be.

I am not going to attempt to deal in detail with what I conceive to be the basic causes of the present crisis or the long-term solutions to it, because those fundamentally are matters which are not under provincial jurisdiction. They are under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and although it is always an interesting pastime to give free advice to the federal government, my own belief, Mr. Speaker, is that we in this House, in the main, should confine our attention to matters that are under our own jurisdiction.

On the matter of long-term solutions, therefore, I will merely refer to the introductory paragraph in the subamendment which was moved by the hon. leader of the CCF (Mr. MacDonald)—in which it was recognized that the unemployment problem can be permanently solved only through long-term economic planning.

We got into a mess because of the failure of the pre-1957 federal Liberal government to undertake long-term economic planning, and the mess has become progressively worse because of a similar failure by the post-1957 federal Progressive-Conservative government; but, as I said, I am not going to dwell on that point.

I would like, however, to put before the House some ideas which I think are clearly within our own jurisdiction, or at any rate are matters over which we can have some influence.

They will not provide a permanent solution to the unemployment problem. They will not ensure that there will not be a recurrence of the present crisis at a future date—those are matters that only the federal government can deal with. But I think that in this House we should be concerned with measures that we can undertake to at least alleviate the present crisis. We should be giving prime consideration to ways and means of getting people back to work now.

I would again, Mr. Speaker, refer to the subamendment that the hon. leader of the CCF group put on the order paper. It contains a 5-point programme of immediate action.

I am not saying it is all-inclusive, and there have been additional suggestions made by other hon. members that merit considerable attention. But I do believe that the 5 points, enunciated here, together constitute a programme that could make a significant contribution to getting people back to work in the very, very near future.

I will not deal in detail with all 5 points. I would like, however, to enumerate them.

Firstly, there is the proposal that the provincial government, along with the federal government, should contribute to material as well as labour costs incurred in an approved winter works project.

Secondly—and this is basically important—steps should be taken to increase consumer purchasing power now by increasing the benefits paid to unemployed people.

Thirdly, there should be a great expansion of public housing projects.

Fourthly, we should give some attention—and some serious attention, instead of the lackadaisical consideration that is now being given—to programmes to train the people, who are now unemployed, for useful contributions to our society.

And fifthly, legislation should be introduced immediately to reduce the legal maximum work week from 48 to 40 hours.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask the hon. member a question? When the hon. member suggests reducing the maximum work week, is he planning to reduce the wages correspondingly?

Mr. Thomas: The hon. member is out of order. He is not supposed to interrupt the speaker.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry.

Mr. Bryden: No, I certainly do not propose that wages should be reduced accordingly. I have always been a firm believer in the principle that when reductions in working hours take place there should be no reduction in take-home pay; and I would say that is particularly important at the present time, when it is imperative that we maintain consumer purchasing power.

To reduce the legal maximum hours of work without providing for the maintenance of take-home pay would defeat its own purpose at the present time, or at any time, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Thompson: It would mean about a 16 per cent raise in wages then, would it?

Mr. Bryden: In hourly rates, yes. At this time of night I would prefer not to get into a detailed discussion of what happens when one reduces hours of work. But, certainly, experience in the past in the reduction of the working week from 48 to 40 hours—and there has been considerable experience in that field for the last 20 years—indicates that actually the increase in productivity is usually sufficient to compensate for the higher wage rate paid, so that the total labour costs, as an item in the cost of production, rarely changed at all.

Now admittedly, there are variations from industry to industry but I think that has been found to be the usual situation when reduction in working hours has taken place.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): He should think that over. He is glossing that over—that is for sure.

Mr. Bryden: Well, there have been many studies undertaken by the Labour Gazette on this point. The hon. Minister of Transport could perhaps regale himself sometime—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Transport): I guess I am just as much at sea with the labour conditions as my hon. friend, but I do not advertise it like he does.

Mr. Bryden: I was just stating that there have been some authoritative studies in this field not only in the Labour Gazette but in the U.S. Monthly Labour Review, and I am perfectly prepared to base my case on what they have said. However that is something of a diversion from the points I want to deal with, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to deal in detail with all 5 of the points in the programme proposed by the hon. leader of the CCF. I will content myself with some fairly brief remarks on, perhaps, 2 or 3 of them.

First of all, I would like to say something about the winter works programme. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs outlined the current winter works programme when he participated in this debate on November 28. Apparently he was not too satisfied with his efforts at that time—and, frankly, I sympathize with him on that—because, today, he tried to improve on what he said then even although he was clearly out of order in attempting to do so.

The essence of his argument was that whereas the winter works programme has only been a drop in the bucket in the past, this year it will constitute two drops in the bucket, therefore it is something about which we should all be very thankful. It is an interesting proposition but not, in my opinion, a very important contribution to the solution to the current unemployment crisis.

According to information I received recently from officials of the city of Toronto, there are at present about 700 people employed on winter works projects in this city. Yet the number of people on relief alone adds up to 1,000 heads of families and 700 single people—1,700 people on relief alone for which 700 jobs have been provided; and, of course, the total number of unemployed in the city runs into the thousands.

City authorities advise me that they hope that an additional 700 people will ultimately be employed on construction projects under the winter works programme. However, since none of these projects will get under way until January, it is unlikely that there will be any increase in the number of people employed on winter works projects over and above the present 700, unless the winter turns out to be exceptionally mild. And I judge, from what people tell me about the weather today—I have not been outside since I came here this morning—that there are not many signs that we are going to have an exceptionally mild winter.

So 700 jobs in the city of Toronto, with some slight possibility of an increase if there is a mild winter, is the contribution of the winter works programme to the unemployment crisis in this city.

Municipal representatives in Toronto and elsewhere have pointed out, time after time, that the winter works programme can never make a significant contribution to employment as long as the federal and provincial governments contribute to labour costs only. That, it would seem to me, is self-evident; surely it does not need municipal officials to hammer and hammer at it. If the senior governments are going to contribute only to labour costs, then only a very limited range of projects can be undertaken.

Surely the government should consider, and the federal government along with it should consider, making contributions to material as well as labour costs, in at least some projects. I certainly do not expect that they have to give carte blanche in this but, surely, they can approve some projects where they will make a contribution to material as well as labour costs.

And if they would use reasonable common sense, and reasonable latitude in approving projects of that kind, I have no doubt that this kind of programme could in fact make the contribution to creating employment that the hon. Minister is trying to claim for the present inadequate programme, in flat defiance of all the facts.

Another point I want to mention, as proposed by the hon. leader of the CCF, is the reduction in the legal maximum work week.

I trust I do not have to clarify my position any further as to where I stand on the matter of wages where hours are reduced. But I do think that reduction in hours is an important phase and can make an important contribution to solving unemployment at the present time. After all, technological improvements are among the basic causes of present-day unemployment.

In many industries, it now takes many less manhours to turn out the same amount of production. Under the circumstances, it is surely time we took a new look at the hours of work legislation of the province.

This legislation, which provides for a 48-hour week, was enacted nearly 20 years ago and it is now completely out of date. Moreover, this inadequate legislation is not properly enforced as far as I have been able to make out, and there are many instances right now of excessive hours being worked.

The hon. member for Hamilton East gave some instances that had come to his attention in the city of Hamilton. I could give a great many instances in the city of Toronto but I will content myself with 2. I am sure that other hon. members could give instances of excessive hours being worked in their areas.

As far as the city of Toronto is concerned, a major manufacturing enterprise here is right now working men 12 hours a day, 6, and in some cases, 7 days a week. It has been doing this for the last 3 months.

A large store in Scarborough township has been employing women workers from 9.30 a.m. to 9.00 p.m., with half an hour for lunch and another half-hour for supper, every day last week; and last Saturday, the day before yesterday, these women had to work from 9.30 a.m. until 11.00 p.m.—9.30 a.m. to 11.00 p.m., Mr. Speaker—with only 15-minute breaks for lunch and supper.

These are things that are happening right now. These inhuman hours would be bad enough at any time, but they are completely incomprehensible at the present time when thousands of people are walking the streets looking for work.

I am suggesting to the hon. members to the right that perhaps they could consider these other people who are not there of their own will, as those of us here are. They did not beg the electorate to send them to the jobs that they now have, and I would hope that hon. members would have some consideration for the conditions under which some of these employees are working these intolerable hours; and I submit that something should be done by way of the enforcement of existing legislation—as it is apparently not being properly enforced—and even more by way of an overall reduction in working hours.

This can certainly make an important contribution to getting people back to work. Let us spread the work around. There are lots of people to do it. As technological advance takes place, let us not make it or let it become an instrument of mass unemployment.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make just one or two references to the question of vocational training. I am not going to try to deal with that important subject in any detail. Many hon. members have already referred to it. I am interested only in the question of training those who are unemployed.

The federal government has been attempting to encourage provinces to co-operate with it in this important work. I do not need to stress again, as many hon. members in this debate have already stressed, that a great many of the people who are now unemployed are people with inadequate or obsolete training; yet it is common knowledge that this province is and has been consistently dragging its feet as far as federal programmes for training of unemployed workers are concerned.

I listened with great interest to the references the hon. Minister of Education made to the activities of his department in this field this afternoon, and it certainly was hard to discover anything but a totally lackadaisical attitude in the whole field. Two of the instances the hon. Minister cited related to Atikokan and Deloro—which he said were matters which the government was looking into—were suggestions by the united steelworkers of America.

I would like to read, for the information of the House, the letter which the hon. Minister wrote to the united steelworkers of America with regard to that matter. This letter was written on November 10, 1960, approximately one month ago.

It was written to Mr. Michael Fenwick, who is the assistant to the director of district 6 of the united steelworkers, and it reads as follows:

I am replying to your two letters dated October 28, 1960, in which you request the development of a retraining programme under schedule M for the widely separated communities of Atikokan and Deloro which have experienced or are about to face serious problems in unemployment.

While a substantial effort is being made to alleviate the unemployment situation through a retraining programme, where such programmes can be organized with some prospect of success, I think you are aware that training of this nature cannot be regarded as a solution to the unemployment situation as it exists today.

In a number of areas throughout the province, however, communities are requesting their local high school boards to make greater use of the existing educational facilities for evening class programmes. All that is needed to prepare for action is a request to the local high school board or board of education.

Insofar as your request for training at Atikokan is concerned, this might be a first step to take. In the case of Deloro, situated in the vicinity of the Hastings district high school board, the facilities are somewhat better. Three high schools—Marmora, Madoc and Tweed—operate under this board, and the possibilities for extension of evening classes are proportionately greater.

While your organization is following up the possibilities suggested in this communication, you may be assured that a further study of the problems you have outlined will be undertaken by this department.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that letter is evidence of any sense of urgency on the part of the hon. Minister or of the government, I would hate to see the hon. Minister when they were not in a hurry. The hon. Minister said on November 10, replying to a letter written on October 28, that "a further study of the problems you have outlined will be undertaken by this department."

Now we have moved along to December 11, a month later, and the hon. Minister advised us this afternoon that these departments were still undertaking further study of the matter.

His main suggestion to the steelworkers is that the best way to get rid of the whole problem is to try to pass the buck to the municipalities.

He apparently is not terribly impressed with the usefulness of retraining programmes as a method of assisting the unemployed to get back to work. But I would like to submit to the government that retraining problems for the unemployed are of the utmost importance, and the government ought to be showing some initiative and giving some leadership in getting them operated, especially when, under present circumstances, it can—if it does any kind of a job at all—get the federal government to underwrite 75 per cent of the cost.

Yet the policy revealed by the hon. Minister of Education is very much like the policy revealed by all the hon. Ministers who participated in this debate: "We are bumbling along reasonably well; you should be thankful for the little we are doing and not complain if it is inadequate."

But, Mr. Speaker, the facts clearly indicate that anything they are doing is inadequate. We have a serious unemployment situation. It is steadily getting worse. There are no indications at all that it is going to get better unless there is a really drastic programme.

I would commend to the House, as a step in the right direction, that we should adopt the programme set forth in the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for York South. That, at least, will be a step. It will at least help to turn the wheel in the other direction, to stop this downward tendency towards greater and greater unemployment. Let us do something constructive and positive, not merely rehash what the departments have been doing all along.

We hardly heard anything through all this debate which was not merely a rehash of the speeches the hon. Ministers made last year. Let us get on with a positive, co-ordinated programme and start getting people back to work.

While we are doing that I submit that we can also put some pressure on the federal government to take some steps to supplement our efforts, and indeed to provide leadership in this field.

There is no reason why we have to accept a record unemployment next March; but, unless some really constructive action is taken, there can be no doubt that we will have record unemployment next March—the highest since the major depression of the 1930s.

The hon. members opposite can yell all they like, shouting that I and others are being pessimists. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that those of us who insist on calling attention to this serious problem are the only ones who are providing a real service to the people of the province. Those hon. members who try to pretend the situation does not exist are providing a real disservice to the people of this province and this country.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I rise to address the House for just a few moments at this late hour, in connection with a problem which all recognize is deserving of the thorough discussion it has received now; almost two full days of debate in this Legislature. I think, generally speaking, there has been a real contribution made and a number of constructive ideas and thoughts have emerged.

However, I cannot refrain from saying that, in my view at least, I am not too impressed by the decrying type of address to which we have just listened, and which follows a pattern that those who have been in this House for quite a number of years have heard on many, many occasions in the past, from the same quarters. That sort of address does not leave me too impressed because I fear that the "wolf, wolf" attitude, by reason of the repetition over the years, is something which those of us, on this side of the House at least, can have some question of the bona fides and the accuracy backing up the statements.

There is, in my view, no need for panic. But there is need for thorough, continuing, intelligent study and planning in connection with this problem. The position today is infinitely better than it was in any comparable period in the past. That is because the leaders and members of governments in various jurisdictions over the last 20 or 25 years provided, by good legislation, many cushions and many provisions to take care of temporary recessions.

I would, however, for a moment, address myself to a somewhat different approach, perhaps, than has been made tonight or today. I want, in doing this, to mention very briefly the 1956 view of the hon. Prime Minister of this province at the conference in Ottawa, when he took the 50 per cent position which he has taken consistently since, as a position of right—though perhaps not one to be expected of accomplishment too soon—on the basic right given by The British North America Act, of equal rights in the field of direct taxation.

Something at least can be said for the improved conditions, because we are getting at least a portion of what we asked for since the new government at Ottawa came into office. At least $30 million per year more is forthcoming as a result of some upward revisions.

In my view, it is not yet too late. We can still expect that there will be changes taken in line with the viewpoint of the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, and that, over a reasonable period of time, increases in the rates to which we will be entitled, in the income and corporation tax fields, will enable us to get at least a portion of the money in reasonably quick order, without which one cannot expect a provincial government to make any great impact on what are also worldwide and national problems.

More work requires more capital and more production. If Ontario can get anything like what it is entitled to, through these fields of taxation and adjustments and transfers in them, it can make a considerably greater money contribution to these problems, over and above the very substantial amount of money being spent today—with the all-time high revenues that are available—and being used in so many worthwhile projects and undertakings.

I want to mention, however, that the Ottawa position, at this time, in my view is a very favourable position as compared with the United States. It has, of course, the banking and it has the currency powers that no province has.

I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that in the 4 years since 1956, there has only been a 10 per cent upping in dollar figures of the currency of this country.

In the United States—and I am going to give these figures because I would like to put them on the record—at the end of 1956 there was $138.9 billion of currency in circulation in the United States against some $22.1 billion of gold, or a 15.9 per cent gold backing to that currency in that sense. And on August 1, 1960, that had dropped to $137.5 billion and a drop in the gold holdings to $19.13 billions for a ratio of 13.8 per cent gold to the currency.

In Canada, on August 1, 1960, we had $2.028 billion of currency; we had $900 million of gold holding, almost a 50 per cent gold backing, against the United States' 13.8 per cent.

Or to put it another way, on a population basis, this figures to $765 per capita in the United States in currency against $111 per capita in Canada, or almost 7 times the dollar currency in the United States per capita against that of Canada. We have to go back to the year 1939 to find anything comparable with respect to the United States currency and gold reserves, to that which is the position in Canada today.

This, I think, may indicate a tight-money situation in Canada but if it does, it indicates that there is plenty of room to loosen and to help lick the problems of the moment, and that Canada is in a far better position to do this today than is the United States.

I believe, by sensible and sound planning, a great deal can be done to close the gap between the view of this government in Ontario about the redistribution of tax sharing, and the Ottawa position which will benefit both and will benefit Canada as a whole, notwithstanding the statements of a very few hon. members opposite—very few indeed—who seemed to think that in standing up for the rights of Ontario and trying to get this position, this government is doing a disservice. I think it is quite the opposite; the disservice is in talking that way in respect to the government's effort in Ontario at this time.

Give Ontario a yearly upgrading in the rates until new maxima are reached and we will be able to do much more. Spending at the local level should give us results. Let Ottawa clear the road for the provinces, and through them, the municipalities, getting a better share in the present tax rate, and a great deal more can be done to come to grips with this problem.

With respect to the position here, I would like to summarize this in a few minutes. First of all, I want to speak about my own department and the work through The Department of Public Works, which is the vehicle for building. A good deal of work has been laid out and is proceeding. At Burlington, at Belleville, at Cornwall—I would like the hon. member for Stormont to recognize that—we are building, or about to get under way, substantial Ontario provincial police headquarters buildings for the districts concerned. There will be a substantial building at Dryden. At Sudbury, there is substantial work going on at the courthouse. At Espanola, we are finishing up quite a project. In Kenora, a registry office project is under way, and at Parry Sound another one is about to take effect.

I would like also to mention projects in relation to certain counties—and some of the hon. members opposite could do something about this. On information supplied me by my officers recently, a registry office in the county of Carleton would be a job that could be undertaken at the local level. Again in Essex county, the same condition would apply. In Frontenac, the hon. Minister of Planning and Development knows that there is a fair scope of work there at Kingston with respect to the registry office. Halton is in a position where it could undertake a courthouse renovation and extension. In Leeds and Grenville a courthouse and registry office at Brockville could get a thorough going over.

The county of Lincoln, the city of St. Catharines, should be in a position to undertake very shortly a substantial undertaking there. In Middlesex there is room for a substantial increase in the space accommodation of the court buildings. The registry office in Prescott and Russell at L'Orignal should be enlarged and repaired. The registry office in Prince Edward at Picton should also have a considerable amount done to it. The registry office in Pembroke, Renfrew, is another project.

In Cornwall, there is a registry office as well as the work I mentioned. In the county of York a new registry office should be on the planning board. The one at Newmarket is now overcrowded and there is also a new office in Richmond Hill indicated.

A new courthouse in Toronto not very far from here, of very substantial dimensions, is much in need. I hope that some of those sentimentalists who are using blocking tactics to prevent the use of the site that has been settled upon will be able to control themselves and settle their differences to a point where that great project can be got under way quickly.

You have heard, Mr. Speaker, from many hon. members here and from the hon. Ministers of many departments. You have heard what I think about $2 million in current expenditures between now and the end of the fiscal year in my own department. You have heard the statement of the hon. Minister of Highways here; specific figures of $2.5 million, plus the general work that is going on.

In lands and forests, some $3.3 million additional; in education I think the figures added up to about $11.3 million; planning and development, I think something like $8.6 million; and health something between $8 million and $10 million could be said to be currently being spent within the next few months.

I am sure the hon. Minister of Public Works could correct me if I am away out on this. I think it can be said that in these few months ahead of us, there is a great overall programme of at least $50 million being spent in this particular area over a matter of months. That is a figure.

Interjection by Mr. Singer.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Asleep, the hon. member for York Centre said. Well, if this government is asleep, there is certainly a pretty good $50-million dream coming true.

I am going to conclude, because I think this is not the time to elaborate on any of these things, but I do want to be serious in relation to just one bit of theory. That is, whether we sit on this side of the House or on the other side, all the hon. members here, or practically all of them, are concerned with the individual and are concerned with the position of the state to the individual.

The twentieth century has been called the age of challenge. H. G. Wells, who was well known to members of the Labour party in England and a great supporter of it, towards his death wrote a book called Mind At the End of Its Tether. It was full of pessimism; a long-time crusader for secular progress came in the end to see no hope for man; the increased velocity of everything that was going on around about us, seemed to him to mean the end of man.

We do not think so on this side of the House. The human search for safety and for salvation flows on.

If we go back 25,000 years, to the beginning of man's mind developing—when he was counting on one finger, indicating the first mathematical genius that was to develop and making himself understood by signs—from that time, on down through the years, the human mind has continued to expand and is still continuing to expand. It is really the greatest creative genius in the world and much more is yet to come.

We on this side of the House believe in our province, in the creative capacity of its people and in its leaders to create and to produce.

I say, in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, that if the last 12 years under the leadership of the hon. Prime Minister in this province is any criteria for the future—and we have gone through periods of heights and depths during these 12 years—and if the people of this province, for the next 12 years have the same confidence in this government as they have had for the last 12, then the next 12 will also be years of progress and growth. The people, then, too, will regard, at the end of it, this government still as the favourite in this province.

In conclusion, I state that we believe under our system of free enterprise, properly directed and inspired, that the greatest gains are still ahead for man, and that means for all. And, in that spirit, hon. members on this side of the House at least, are prepared to work hourly, daily and yearly to accomplish it in the interests of the people of the province and of the country.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General a question. In this periodical called The Ontario Government Services, I notice that the city of North Bay was included as being one of the places that had a new Ontario provincial police building. Would the hon. Attorney-General mind telling me on what street that building is located?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member lives there; he ought to know.

Mr. Troy: I ought to know; that is right. And I do know. I have searched for it, sir, day and night.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I might say, since the hon. member has asked for the question, that I am bound to give him the answer. In this sheet of something like 30-odd projects of work for the future, at the bottom of the list is North Bay.

Mr. Speaker: The vote will be on the amendment to the amendment.

Will all the members who are in favour of the amendment please say "aye".

As many as are opposed, please say "nay".

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

Hon. A Grossman moves, seconded by hon. W. A. Stewart, that the amendment to the motion now before the House be amended by striking out all the words after the word "order" in the first line and substituting therefor the following:

to effect the above objectives, the House regards with satisfaction the awareness of the government to the problem to be met, and the broad and as well specific steps which have been taken to meet the same, and more particularly the House approves the measures which have been taken,

(a) to assist agriculture and industry to market their goods abroad and to provide for the co-operation of all levels of government with labour, commerce and industry and, to that end, the reorganization of government departments to more fully assist in the aforementioned objects;

(b) to further economic and industrial research, and to help and encourage agriculture and industry to produce in the most competitive way;

(c) to implement the very large programme of developmental projects such as conservation, recreational parks, roads and highways of all kinds and public buildings, with the incidental employment of extremely large numbers of workers;

(d) to further the development of our human resources both young and old, sponsored particularly by The Department of Education, to fit our people to meet the challenges and as well the unlimited opportunities which lie ahead.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): The whole effort was perfectly understandable. I know the hon. government members have simply tried to embarrass our position. They have made their move, now we will make ours.

Mr. Speaker, the manoeuvre of the government has simply been to add some platitudinous words in an effort to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Wisdom—you were not satisfied with your own words.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, so that my position may be understood in regard to the technical position that we did take—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, for the edification of the hon. members opposite, I did consult the foremost authority on procedure that we have in this House and I was advised that the amendment to the amendment does not in effect defeat our amendment—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —and by voting for it, we do not delete in any way—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —our amendment. Might I go on?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The leader of the Opposition said he consulted the highest authority in the House—I do not remember him consulting the Speaker on this—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: —but I might point out to the leader of the Opposition the original motion moved by Mr. Wintermeyer and seconded by Mr. Nixon started this way:

That the motion be amended by adding thereto the following words:

—then, of course, the substance of the amendment.

Now the amendment to the amendment moved by Mr. MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Bryden, amended it by striking out all the words after "the following words"—which was the whole sum and substance of the amendment—and substituting the following, which was the amendment submitted by Mr. MacDonald.

An hon. member: Oh, no.

Mr. Speaker: Now then, we have a further amendment, moved by Mr. Grossman and seconded by Mr. Stewart, that the original amendment moved by Mr. Wintermeyer, seconded by Mr. Nixon, that the motion be amended by adding thereto the following words:

in order to further these desirable goals, was the substance then of the original amendment. It is now being amended by striking out all the words after the word “order”—“in order to further these desirable goals”—to read:

in order to affect the above objective the House regards with satisfaction—

That is the amendment.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Before you put the question, I submit that we have a right to debate this amendment and I would suggest that, in fairness, when an amendment of that magnitude is brought in at the last moment, we should be entitled to see it on the order paper before we have to debate it.

I listened as carefully as I could but it appeared that it was nothing but a long wearisome “mish mash” of platitudes but it—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I am speaking of the amendment, sir. It is possible that there is some grain of sense in it and I think that we should have an opportunity to study it on the order paper to see if that is in fact true.

It is most unfair, I think, to ask us to proceed to debate such a complicated amendment without notice. However, Mr. Speaker, if we are to receive no notice I am prepared to proceed to debate it.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this: that the procedure adopted here, of course, is one which has been very often followed in this House when we had 3 parties. Quite often we had an amendment to an amendment introduced. My good hon. friend who is leading the CCF group will well recollect that situation, as will others.

In practice, it is not debated. I think in fact, sir, it can be debated—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Oh, yes, it can be.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, it can be debated. Of course it can be. I would say this, sir, I had no intention, when I heard that amendment—I thought it was a very fine amendment the hon. Minister moved and, of course, I would vote for it immediately and I knew that those who were associated with me here would vote for it. However, I think that technically it is perfectly true the amendment is debatable; in practice, it has not, in this House over very many years, been debatable but I think it is.

I would certainly not want to take any of the hon. members opposite by surprise; that would be the very last thing I would ever want to do.

But let me say this—they have taken me completely by surprise in that I never saw the Liberal Opposition before vote against their own amendment.

May I say, sir, to the hon. leader of the Opposition, on the point which has been taken concerning the debate: I would move the adjournment of the debate and we will have to consider this amendment after the House reconvenes next January. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House I want to explain this to the House—we have gone one hour and 40 minutes over what we agreed we would try to adhere to. Now, sir, that arose from the fact that it was desired by many of the hon. members here to conclude this debate tonight; that was the purpose of it. As a matter of fact, it was agreed between the 3 hon. Whips concerned that we would try to conclude tonight, and that was the purpose.

Tomorrow we will have a night session, but I promise the hon. members that we will not go beyond 10 o'clock, so we gain 30 minutes in the overtime of tonight, if that is satisfactory.

Tomorrow we will have the estimates of The Department of Economics, and then certain bills on the order paper we would like to advance. Following that, sir, we will have the Throne debate.

With that explanation, I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12.10 of the clock, a.m.

Introduction of bills.

THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND DEVELOPMENT ACT, 1960-1961

Hon. L. M. Frost moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Department of Commerce and Development Act, 1960-1961."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is outlined in the address of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay) and has been discussed in this House. The Act itself repeals The Department of Planning and Development Act, 1950, which was first enacted, I think, in 1944.

The section which deals in general terms with the powers and the duties of the Act is section 3. This says that the Minister shall collaborate with the Ministers having charge of other departments of the public service of Ontario and with Ministers having charge of the public service of Canada and of other provinces, with municipal councils, with agriculture, industrial, labour, mining, trade and other associations and organizations, and with private and public enterprise with a view to stimulating business, increasing production, extending trade and formulating plans to create, assist, develop and maintain productive employment, and to develop the human and material resources of Ontario, and to that end shall co-ordinate the work and the functions of the departments of the public service of Ontario.

What I have outlined here is to some extent the conception of the original department after it was formed. Last year, you recollect, sir, we transferred from The Department of Planning and Development the matters of community planning and placed them under The Department of Municipal Affairs to avoid the division which had been created by the growth of two matters related to municipal affairs in two different departments.

As I said to the House at that time, there are other matters in which we were concerned relative to The Department of Planning and Development. One of these matters, of course, is the matter of development of trade and commerce, the sale of our goods, the assisting of industry and agriculture to market our goods abroad. That, sir, is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): I know that it is technically not proper to ask questions on this occasion, but would the hon. Prime Minister permit questions?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, you will understand that we have not as yet examined the bill, of course. But the question I would ask is: Does this dissolve, if I may use that word, the old Department of Planning and Development?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, it changes its name and so on. Though I cannot speak for hon. Mr. Drew who was then Prime Minister, in my recollections of the bill I do not think it was ever the intention to get into community planning, with its incidental difficulties, to the extent that the department did.

THE DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS ACT, 1956

Hon. Mr. Frost moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Department of Economics Act, 1956."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Now, sir, the purpose of this bill is partly parallel to the bill that I previously introduced. First of all the name of the department is to be changed from The Department of Economics to The Department of Economics and Federal and Provincial Relations.

The purpose of that is plain.

As a matter of fact, The Department of Economics grew up from 2 or 3 different causes, going back to about the year 1943. At that time The Provincial Treasurer's Department had within it a section relating to statistics and things of that sort. I think it was the section of statistics under the direction of Mr. H. J. Chater who has since retired.

At that time there was no such thing as an economic periscope to tell us where we were going. As a matter of fact, none of the other provinces had one either. In 1945, we found ourselves pretty well dependent upon the organization of the federal government. Prior to 1945 we made the effort to create a Department of Statistics under Mr. Chater and that grew into The Department of Economics which is a service department for all sections of the government and all departments of government.

As will be explained later today, the purpose has been to avoid duplication. One can get into duplication in that area, and due to the difficulties of obtaining economists we of course dilute our efforts. That is the purpose of the general direction of our economic research, which is now very extensive under the direction of one Deputy Minister and one department.

The department has developed along a different line as well. Some of the provinces are forming their own Department of Federal-Provincial Relations—which is a development of the growth of federal-provincial conferences, of which there have been 5, I think, in the last 17 years.

The Department of Economics has therefore also become the department charged with the many and varied dealings between this government and the government at Ottawa in relation to federal-provincial matters.

And now I will say a few words in connection with provincial relations.

I am very glad to say that there has now been formed a Prime Ministers' conference which will meet at intervals to be determined. The next meeting—which I think was inspired by our Atlantic friends—is to be in Prince Edward Island next August in the old Parliament buildings. That was a touch of imagination that we would expect from our maritime friends.

There is a tremendous variety of things for the provinces to discuss without ever getting into controversial matters related to federal-provincial relations as such.

For instance, between ourselves and our sister province of Quebec and our sister province of Manitoba, there are problems of boundary waters and the pollution of them.

There is also a host of economic matters which can be discussed without getting into federal-provincial policies and politics.

I think I would say, sir, that had there been such a conference of Prime Ministers before, we would have arrived at the way of amending our Constitution long before the present time. I think that with the collaboration of the Premiers of Canada we are going to solve that problem. It is not an easy matter to solve, but I feel satisfied that it will be done.

In this bill there is the power of the Lieutenant-Governor in council to delegate matters to this department in the ordinary course of business. I would say that it is wider in its application than in the other provinces, I think that we have led the way.

Our sister province of Quebec is now introducing a bill creating a Department of Federal-Provincial Relations. Our Department of Economics bill, as hon. members will have gathered from what I have said, is much broader in its application.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Prime Minister would answer a question in connection with this bill. Does he propose to appoint another Minister, or is this newly arranged department going to carry on under the—

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, it is to carry on under the direction of the hon. Minister to whom it is assigned. I will cover that in The Executive Council Act in a moment, which will tie all these things together.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): It will be a disappointment if there is not a new Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I do not think so.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister another question on this? I cannot sort out in my mind how he is going to avoid duplication, if one of the functions of this department is to look into the question, for example, of amending our Constitution. Is it not logically the concern of The Department of the Attorney-General? Or if it is promoting trade, is this not logically for the new Department of Trades and Commerce?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would point out to the hon. member that the intention of the Premiers' Conference—as was indicated in the press release—is that it should not engage in executive details. I think the hon. member will agree with that. Otherwise, of course, it would submerge such a conference in detail.

The determination was to deal with the broad principle of subjects; then by agreement they could be referred to the various departments of the various governments. I think the hon. member will agree with that.

If it is determined to put a matter on an agenda—the agenda is itself general in its form—that is the way it should be. If, for instance, the subject of amendment to our Constitution is placed upon the agenda, the problem could be discussed in general terms and the matter then referred to our Attorneys-General across Canada. That is what is happening this time. In the end, I would say that the Attorney-General, with the other Attorneys-General, is here dealing with a problem which is bound to come back to this and the other governments.

Now, I think the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) mentioned that problem the other day. As a matter of fact, in the executive drawing of the Act, there is no difficulty. I have been out of the practice of law for a number of years but I think, although I do not want to appear boastful, I might be able to draw that Act myself.

Mr. Whicher: I would want to check it over.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I know hon. members opposite would all want to check it. I would want to check it myself. I would not be too fearful of embarking on the amendment of it, once it was agreed.

The great difficulty is to arrive at the formula.

We have the problems of the Atlantic provinces, who have very real reasons to desire protection. And we have the western provinces who want it to be in the form of a partnership, and I think that is fair and reasonable. They do not want to be dominated by a combination of provinces.

Now to come back to the question of the hon. member, The Department of Economics would be our clearing house for provincial matters, for our correspondence with the various Premiers for arriving at an agenda, and in arriving at an agenda perhaps arriving at the basis upon the details of specific items in the agenda.

The Premiers can consider those subjects in their wisdom and they can refer their general decisions back to their governments and the specific departments to carry them out.

Mr. MacDonald: These are the hon. Prime Minister's new responsibilities as president of local No. 1 of the union of provincial—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I am out of that job now. That was only for the few days of that conference. I think the next president or chairman will be one of the maritime people and my only connection with it will be to make the transition to him easily, so that he can carry on.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Was there any difference of opinion as to whether they should be called Premiers or Prime Ministers?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I would say. You understand these deliberations are carried on in camera, therefore I am not in a position to disclose what has been said, but the consensus of opinion is that there is no difference in the two expressions whatever, and I think that is true.

Mr. Nixon: I thought maybe the hon. Prime Minister was keeping his Ottawa friend out.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I will put it this way to show how broad I am in my interpretations. Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker and Rt. hon. Mr. St. Laurent referred to the Premiers of Quebec and Ontario as the Prime Ministers of Quebec and Ontario. It is a matter going back to Confederation. Actually I would say, sir, that there is not a bit of difference between the word "Premier" and the words "Prime Minister"—not a particle.

I think the hon. member for Brant will well recollect that in the days of our youth, which are getting altogether too far removed, the reference was always to Premier Laurier. Does he remember that? On Sir John Macdonald's bust in St. Paul's cathedral, he is referred to as the Premier of Canada. I do not see any difference.

I think myself it came about from a mistaken idea that emanated from Ottawa, that there was a difference between a Prime Minister and a Premier, and there is not any—none whatever.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Prime Minister: Who looked after this correspondence in provincial matters before? I am afraid that this is not just another department that is being set up by this already overstaffed government, I think this is an example of Parkinson's law that this government gives to us 100 per cent. It is another staff.

We have another staff set up to look after a provincial conference that may or may not take place once or twice or 3 or 4 times. All we know now is that there is one more next August in Prince Edward Island. And when they have to set up a department of government to look after that, I think they are endorsing Parkinson's law 100 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid we are getting out of order on this bill. All these matters should wait until second reading rather than on the introduction of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, as long as we do not get mixed up with Parkinson's disease, it is all right.

THE PROVINCIAL SECRETARY AND CITIZENSHIP ACT, 1960-1961

Hon. Mr. Frost moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship Act, 1960-1961."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: This Act was also forecast in the address of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor and it enlarges the function of the old Department of the Provincial Secretary and Registrar.

The history of that department itself is quite interesting. I do not think there has ever been an Act in relation to The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Registrar, because that is one of the departments that is set up in The Act of Confederation, itself. Therefore, we are not interfering with the department itself and its functions, but it is an addition to the duties of the department and the one who is to be the Minister.

The Act itself carefully safeguards those things, but I might read section 4, subsection 2:

The Minister shall on his own initiative, and through co-operation with the Minister having charge of the department of the public service of Ontario, and with the Ministers having charge of the departments of the public service of Canada with municipal councils, with school boards, boards of education and other organizations and otherwise, in the cause of human betterment advance and encourage the concept and ideal of full and equal citizenship among the residents of Ontario in order that all may exercise effectively the rights, powers and privileges and fulfill the obligations, duties and liabilities of citizens of Canada within the province of Ontario.

I think my hon. friends will all agree with the object of a department which, in part, certainly can be called a Department of Citizenship.

This is an Act to establish The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship, that is the name hereafter—The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I could ask a question with respect to this department of citizenship being under the Provincial Secretary? I understand it used to be under the Minister of Planning and Development. I think I am correct that we have an immigration department with Mr. Creighton in charge in that area. Mr. Lucas' department seems to swing all over the place. I wonder if it could be explained to me why, for example, The Fair Employment Practices Act and The Fair Accommodation Practices Act are in another department. Why does the hon. Prime Minister not think of combining these? This enhances human rights—these two commissions—we hope.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think the purpose, sir, is this: it is true the Act relating to fair accommodation and fair employment practices and other things comes under The Department of Labour for the reason that The Department of Labour has the machinery to pass upon and to deal with those specific problems as they come up.

On the other hand, the matter is much broader than that. The question of citizenship in this province is an encompassing thing, a broad thing. We have, for instance—I should not say the problem, because I do not want to use that word—but the matters related to New Canadians coming to this country; the matter of their obtaining citizenship, the things done to help them and to accommodate them that are quite outside of the Acts that are under the aegis of the Minister of Labour to administer.

The broad matter of citizenship, generally, making these people at home in our country, I hope is something that will be increased. Despite the difficulties we frequently run across in our country, and which are temporary matters, I hope that people from other countries will continue to come to this country in increasing numbers. That is what I would like to see done and that is our policy here.

I recognize at the moment that there are different points of view among many people on the subject, among trade unions and the like. But we cannot have half a continent in this world and have only 18 million people in it and get away with it indefinitely. We have to go out and bring people into this country. That is one of the reasons why we are extending this department: to meet that problem objectively.

The object will be this: The Minister will be charged with co-ordinating our services wherever they may be, within whatever department they may lie. It may be in The Department of Education, for a great deal is being done on the matter of adult education to make things easy for people, to let them understand, to give them information. That is the purpose of this Act.

An hon. member: Tory politics, Tory politics!

Another hon. member: Good policy.

Mr. Nixon: May I suggest the hon. Prime Minister might also consider getting our Indian citizens under The Department of Education in this province as well.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am all for this suggestion. I think we ought to give them a square deal. They have not had a square deal. Tell my friend I will have a pow-wow with him shortly. I will wear my feathered headgear and we will discuss that. I am altogether in favour.

Now sir, the other Act is an Act which is complementary to all of these. It is An Act to amend The Executive Council Act, and it brings these matters into conformity with what I have said. It provides, instead of a Secretary and Registrar, a Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship. It provides for a Minister of Commerce and Development instead of a Minister of Planning and Development.

I would like to clear up one point. My hon. friend from Bruce, was it not, mentioned the creation of more Ministers or something of that sort. I may point out to him that this amendment makes no provision for such. At least that is my interpretation of this Act. But I would point out to the hon. member, somebody made a rather loose statement the other day about the Ministers of the government, that there are 19 active Ministers in the government and 3 Ministers without Portfolio.

All provinces are meeting with this problem. Our sister province to the east now has 17 Ministers. There were 16 to start with and then the government there added to the cabinet a most-able man, hon. George Marler, with whom I have had a good deal of work to do in the last few weeks.

They are now creating 3 new departments in the government, including The Department of Federal-Provincial Relations. They have created 8 under-secretaries in addition, to those who are connected with boards and commissions and the like.

I say to the hon. member and other hon. members of this House, that is the case, and we here certainly are not out of line. It is a difficulty which the hon. members of this House have had the opportunity of looking into. It is a problem of government in these days.

In introducing this bill, I may as well give the whole explanation now. When we look at the ramifications of government—I was today looking at the second budget I introduced in 1944, $126 million, and I see the enormous extent of the growth of government which is inevitable—these are problems which have to be met.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL ACT

Hon. Mr. Frost moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Executive Council Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to point out to the hon. members that there is a book placed upon their desks titled The Windsor Border Region. The hon. members may regard this as a little Christmas present which I am sure they will find extremely interesting.

This book is the fourth of a series of basic documents which are being collected and published under the direction of the Champlain society and subsidized by the provincial government. The amount that we place at the disposal of the Champlain society is small. My recollection is that it is only about $5,000 per volume. It is small, indeed.

Much of the work in connection with these books is done as a matter of interest and dedication to the cause of history by the historians who are connected with the Champlain society. In my first days on this matter, I dealt with Dr. Stewart Wallace who is very outstanding. Latterly, we have been dealing with Professor Patrick C. T. White of the University of Toronto, who is the editor of the Ontario series of the Champlain society.

Today, I want to pay tribute first of all to the authors of this work, gentlemen who really treat this matter—I was going to say as a labour of love, but it certainly arises out of their intense interest in the history of our country and our province and its importance.

We have here Father Ernest J. Lajeunesse, whom I would ask to stand up.

Father Lajeunesse was formerly Professor of French at Assumption University and is now, I think, connected at least temporarily with St. Michael's College. With him is Professor White of the University of Toronto, who, as I say, is the editor of the Champlain society series.

Will Professor White please stand up?

I would like to pay tribute to them.

Mr. Speaker, this volume, as were its predecessors, is a interesting one. The first volume was: The Valley of the Trent, edited by Mr. Guillet. Then came Royal Fort Frontenac by Professors Preston and Lamontagne, who were introduced to this House. Then followed Kingston Before the War of 1812, by Professor Preston, and now, this volume.

In placing this volume on the desks, I want to pay tribute to the oldest settled portion of Ontario, the Windsor area. I think Father Lajeunesse's research goes back historically to about 1750. That area saw the coming of such persons as Cadillac and LaSalle and many others.

It is probable, of course, that there was settlement before the days actually outlined in this volume, but certainly the records of the great parish of Assumption goes back to that period.

This has provoked a very great deal of interest. I had a correspondent from the United States write to me, stating that Moose Factory antedated the Windsor area. I suppose that is true from the standpoint of a fort and a trading post, but not from the standpoint of settlers who settled in that area, who had homes there and made their living there before the coming of the British forces following the battle of the Plains of Abraham.

The matter is one of engaging interest. I am sure it will be an important addition to the background of the Windsor area. I would say to the hon. member for Essex

North (Mr. Reaume) that the Reaumes are mentioned here, among the first settlers, the people who came to that parish prior to the battle of the Plains of Abraham. No doubt it will be of interest to the hon. member whose family has had connection with this province long before the days of its present political entity, going back to the days of New France, which is an interesting connection which I hope we can develop in this province.

We have here in Ontario a history before a history. Very often we count our history with the coming of the Loyalists. Actually, there were 150 years of history before that. If we can put it together, it will be of immense value to Ontario.

It is a great deal of pleasure, sir, to place these on the desks of the hon. members, and to make this reference to those who have taken such a great part in doing this work and for those who will follow, because I hope that over the years we can produce many volumes which will be a great background for students of history in our province.

These works are non-interpretative, of course. They are confined to the basic documents and stories of our province and avoid the interpretations that historians would be entitled to make.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, it affords me real pleasure to join with the hon. Prime Minister in paying our tribute to those people who are engaged in this very important, and I think vital work, in paying our warm respects to Father Lajeunesse who is with us today—a member, I understand from reading the introductory comments—of the great Basilian Order that has done so much for education in all of Ontario, particularly in the Toronto and Windsor areas.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that like the hon. Prime Minister, in leafing through the few introductory comments, I did notice the surname of Reaume, and I would expect that that the hon. member for Essex North will want to make some very complimentary remarks about the early beginning of his area, with which he has been so closely associated.

I feel, as the hon. Prime Minister feels, that this is a vital work. I think we Canadians and people in Ontario have not learned enough about our early beginnings and our history. I believe with those who say that unless we know the past we will lose the future. I think that it is important, it is vital, that we know more about our history, the history of our people, our beginnings.

That will give us some indication where we should go and how we should direct the future.

For the contribution that has been made with this additional book on the early history of Ontario, I join the hon. Prime Minister in commending the author and those who have worked in the Champlain society for the continuing contribution they are making to the history and the understanding of history in Ontario. I join with the hon. Prime Minister in welcoming Father Lajeunesse, Professor White and the others who are in attendance here today on their particular contribution to this very important work.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of this book. I am very proud of the fine things that have been said about our part of the country. The author of this book many years ago was a very able young man and an old chum of mine. We went to the same school. He chose, as hon. members can see, a very noble type of work and I followed right behind his steps in the second most important type of work.

Father Lajeunesse was one of the most outstanding, I think, of our pupils, and he was always recognized, even as a boy, as one who was going far in his chosen field. I understand now that in that great Order of which he is part, he is spoken very, very highly of, and one of the things that makes him very dear and near to my heart is the fact that his parents' farm is only a few doors away from where my wife was born and where her people still live.

Indeed, Essex county is a very important place. One would not think so sometimes from the treatment we get from these people who are in power now, but nevertheless it is indeed a very important place. As we go back to the early days, first of all there arrived the Indians—there is still the occasional one around—then came the French, and then came the English.

Both these races played a very, very important part in the building of that part of the world, as they have in other parts of Canada. I think that of all the places in Canada that typify this real spirit of brotherly love, where people from all parts of the world have come to make their home, Windsor and Essex county can properly be termed a capital seat of brotherly love in the whole of Canada.

I noticed a number of Reaumes there in the book. I am not quite sure what their occupations were. In some of the campaigns that I have been in, some of my opponents have referred to the family name, sometimes not too respectfully.

Nevertheless, there have been a lot of changes, and I presume that there will be a lot in the future. One of the things I think is very important to remember about that important part of the country is that whether the people are Catholic, Protestant or Jewish, from whatever part of the world they may have come, we do not refer to anyone as a New Canadian. Once they arrive they are Canadians and we do everything in our power to make them feel at home.

I want to say to the author of this book, that as one who comes from the very same part of the province as he, I think I speak for a number of the people there. We are proud of the fact that he is the author because of all others he would be the one most capable of writing such a thorough book on that part of the province.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted to just add a few words in keeping with the spirit of brotherly love in which the hon. member for Essex has just made his remarks to the House.

On earlier occasions when volumes produced by the Champlain society have been presented to the House, I have paid my tribute to the work that they are doing and I would like to add to it today.

I think the work of the Champlain society, and particularly today Father Lajeunesse who has produced this particular volume, is filling a very great gap in the history of this province. If we do not do something about it, soon, much of our history is going to become lost forever. Bits and pieces that are lying around in attics, the records that are being gathered together in volumes like this, are going to be real treasures as far as the future of the province of Ontario is concerned.

However, I do not want to pay my tribute just to the Champlain society and Father Lajeunesse. To show how far my spirit of brotherly love goes today, I want to pay it to the person whom I think is primarily responsible for this, and that is the hon. Prime Minister.

I rarely find myself in a position where I can pay tribute to him without any reservation at all, but this is one. I am convinced that if it were not for the well-known interest of the hon. Prime Minister and the initiative that he has taken, considering the very small and insignificant resources actually that have been made available for this work, that this kind of thing would not happen.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, it would be a tragedy, because if something had not been done—in fact we may be a bit late in some respects—these records would have been lost forever. So in this spirit of brotherly love I pay tribute to the man who I think is more responsible than any single author of any single volume.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, if I may be given the opportunity I would like also to express my few words of commendation because Father Lajeunesse is certainly not unknown to me. He has seen me along the halls of Assumption quite a few years back, and I certainly want to pay my respects. As the hon. member for York South has said, the hon. Prime Minister has taken the initiative in this preservation of history.

In the Windsor area we are rich in history. It was pointed out that this was one area which was first settled. In fact, the parish of Assumption in that area was the only parish west of Montreal for quite a number of years.

I know that Father Lajeunesse's contribution to the Basilian Fathers at Assumption has been tremendous, and also to the citizens of Windsor. I want to commend him for the work he has done and I know that he will continue to do fine work.

I want to urge upon the hon. members of this House to take time—I know that they cannot read it in one evening but now and then to take the time—to read a few pages of this book.

Again, I want to commend the Champlain society, the hon. Prime Minister, and Father Lajeunesse.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, as the last member from the Windsor area I would like to pay my respects to Father Lajeunesse, first from the fact that he probably can recall having me as a student in one of his history classes back at Assumption College quite a few years ago. I knew his capabilities at that time, I respected them, and I certainly think that no one could have written a better volume concerning the Windsor area than he did.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question before the orders of the day of which notice has been given to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender).

In view of the recent discussions concerning municipal affairs in the township of Vaughan, does The Department of Municipal Affairs propose to order an investigation, and if so, when?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been no discussion for the reason that yesterday a delegation from Vaughan township was to have come to my office as the result of an appointment made through Mr. Cumming, the Deputy Minister. I was around at the appointed time and no one showed up.

Today, Mr. Cumming tells me, he had another call from interested people in Vaughan township about another appointment, and I intend to see these people when a meeting can be arranged at our mutual convenience.

Until that meeting is held, and until I hear what the evidence is, I cannot say whether or not there is going to be an investigation by our department.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that if the township of Vaughan feels there is something there that should be investigated, they have legal powers under section 258 to call on the local judge or a judge in a neighbouring county, and they can ask him to inquire into any matters which they think might be of concern at that time.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have a question of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) which has been directed to him earlier. The question is this:

During the last session the standing committee on labour was told that The Department of Labour was preparing regulations governing private employment agencies. My question is: Have these regulations been prepared, and if so, are they available?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Well, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question I would like to go a little further than yes or no.

This has been a problem. The Act as passed by the Legislature empowers The Department of Labour to make regulations to control this aspect of the activities of people carrying on employment agencies in the province.

We have drafted several regulations and we have held meetings with these people because, as the hon. member would recall, we agreed that they would have an opportunity to discuss with myself and my department officials the regulations that would be drawn. Those meetings have gone on from time to time and, as I say, we have proposed different regulations which included different licences. These are:

1. A licence for an agency where the licensee looks to the person seeking employment to pay the fee.

2. A licence for an agency where the licensee looks to the employer to pay the fee.

3. A licence for an agency that does aptitude, psychological, or other testing to determine a person's qualifications for employment where the person who takes the test pays the fee.

It is our thought that a person or firm should hold only one licence, but some of them want to hold two or more of these licences.

There are a number of prominent and reputable firms who carry on business in classes which we might consider 2 and 3. They are asking that they be allowed to continue in both fields.

Meetings have been held with representatives of the various agencies on this and other problems. This is not going to be an easy thing to police, it is going to cost plenty. We are going to have to require substantial fees from these licensees.

How far should we go in exclusion, should there be any exclusions—for instance, people that operate a little agency for baby-sitters, and things like that? There are many things that we have had to consider: the agency which endeavours to place unskilled cleaning people, for example. We want some control over the amount these agents are paid and how long they have to be paid once a person gets a job.

There is the agency that supplies skilled workers—secretarial, bookkeeping—not in executive positions but competent people in this field. There are agencies that have tested and proved the ability of applicants so that competent personnel can be guaranteed and supplied.

We find that even some auditors call upon agencies for competent help. They will say: "Can you get us a good bookkeeper or a good executive?" Agencies do quite a bit of this sort of thing in filling the demand, and in most of those cases it is the man seeking the employee who pays the fee. There are many instances where people already employed respond to advertising of agencies, seeking to improve themselves in positions. They do not wish their present employer to be acquainted with the fact that they are seeking another position, that they want to improve themselves. Confidence has to go into this sort of thing.

Our investigations prove that there are many reputable people in this field, doing good work, finding jobs for the unemployed, jobs they would never have found for themselves, and at reasonable cost.

But in this field, as in all other walks of life, the racketeer creeps in here and there, and it is that sort of person we are definitely after. We are trying to evolve regulations that will curb the racketeer and yet not destroy the other people who have been doing good work in this field.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the fact that this legislation was passed has already proven to be a great deterrent to what might be called a fly-by-night sort of operator. But I would say, in answer to the question, that we are aiming at January 1 for the regulations to be through.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, there was a supplementary question. What methods are now employed by the department to curb the activities of the so-called racketeers—now that the hon. Minister has mentioned them?

Hon. Mr. Daley: The fact that this Act has been so publicized and that anybody in that activity knows that there is an Act, has been a deterrent, because we certainly have heard no criticism of these agencies' operations during the course of negotiations.

However, I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that there are great difficulties in this sort of thing.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day might be an appropriate time to ask the hon. Prime Minister whether any session of the Legislature is scheduled for tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And at?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Three o'clock—no, two o'clock.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Will there be an evening session?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it depends on what progress we make today. I promised that we would not sit after 10 o'clock tonight, due to the fact that we had to go beyond that last night to try to dispose of that item of business.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee of supply.

House in committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Johnston in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF ECONOMICS

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, in view of the great deal of information that has been given already about the activities of The Department of Economics, in a rather general way, I shall limit my remarks to some of the details of the work of The Department of Economics.

Before proceeding to do that I would like to express my appreciation of the work of the staff of The Department of Economics. Although not a large staff it is a very excellent one, headed by the Deputy Minister, Mr. George Gathercole, and consisting of 4 sections.

I find that it is possible for them to accomplish a very great deal during a year and I want to express my appreciation to Mr. Gathercole and the staff for their vigorous efforts, and for the helpful information they are able to supply to not only The Department of the Treasury, but to all departments of government.

In presenting the estimates of The Department of Economics for 1961-1962, I would like to emphasize the importance of the function which this department assumes in the operations of government. The extent of its activities is perhaps not as well known as that of other departments which are more in the public eye.

In this day and age, however, no large organization can operate efficiently without expert economic advice, and this is evident by the ever-growing number of corporations and governments which have established Departments of Economics to advise them. The government of Ontario has been a pioneer in this field.

The operations of the government of Ontario continue to grow and extend into a multiplicity of fields. Our budget exceeds that of all other provincial governments in Canada and, in fact, that of many other jurisdictions, both on the North American continent and elsewhere in the world. The Department of Economics has provided, through its economic analyses and its special studies and reports, the information and advice that are essential to the direction and management of this huge business.

In the current fiscal year, 1960-1961, The Department of Economics is continuing a wide and varied programme of economic studies and research, and is also undertaking work on behalf of other departments of government.

Among the newer studies which are under way, I would like to mention the work of the technical committee on portable pensions. This is a subject which has aroused wide interest among all sectors of the community, and The Department of Economics is assisting and participating in the work of this committee. The Deputy Minister of the department has been chairman and is now, with Professor D. C. Macgregor, joint chairman of the committee, while the secretariat is composed of two of the department's economists.

In another important area of governmental activity, federal-provincial relations, the department has continued to play an important role and has prepared analyses and undertaken research which have been invaluable to us in our negotiations with the federal government. This area of study is considered to be so important that our sister province of Quebec has established a separate department of government to deal solely with federal-provincial relations, while a number of other provinces have either established, or are considering establishing, special economic divisions to advise them in these matters.

During the year, the department completed a special regional economic survey of eastern Ontario and is well advanced in the preparation of a similar study on the Lake Ontario economic region. This will be the fifth report in a series being prepared by the department on the 10 economic regions of the province.

The preceding studies dealt with the Georgian Bay, the northeastern Ontario and the northwestern Ontario regions. I think the hon. members have already had the opportunity to study these.

The ninth edition of the economic survey of Ontario has been completed, and is in the process of being printed. Many new features have been added to this latest edition and an even more extensive review of economic activity in Ontario has been included. Hon. members will be receiving copies as soon as they are available. This will be early in the new year.

These documents seem to be especially appreciated by business and commercial organizations, which is evidenced by the great number of requests we receive for copies.

The department also prepared the government of Ontario's submissions to the Royal commissions on transportation and the automotive industry, both of which were well received.

Among the many other assignments of an economic and fiscal nature, upon which the department has been engaged, are the following: a review of unconditional grants to municipalities; population and labour force projections, and projections of school and university enrolments; the treatment of separate school boards; education grants to elementary and secondary schools; grants to universities; housing; the winter works programme; hospital debt; employment and the labour force; foreign trade; foreign investment in Canada; foreign exchange rates; and extensive studies on our natural resource industries.

In addition to the studies on which it has been engaged on its own account, the department has undertaken a number of assignments for other departments of the government. For example, it has continued to provide basic research for The Department of Agriculture on milk marketing and related problems. It is also assisting The Department of Agriculture in a study of the assessment of co-operative cold-storage plants.

At the request of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), the department carried out surveys of the probation service and of the juvenile and family court. Substantial assistance has been made available to The Department of Planning and Development in the area of housing, and through the preparation of the special regional economic surveys. Research on enrolment and financing problems of the universities has been undertaken for the university affairs committee. Many other projects for the various departments of government have also been carried out.

Our economists, in addition to their other duties, have undertaken research and secretarial duties for various government committees. These include committees studying winter works, conservation, fluoridation, portable pensions, and other matters of interest to the government.

Full-time employees of the department number 60 at the present time. This represents an increase of 5 staff members over 1959-1960. Despite the very large increase in the work load of the department, the increase in staff over the past 8 years has been modest, averaging about 3 per year. For 1961-1962 the department has requested an increase in staff of 10 to carry out a greatly expanded programme of work, much of which was outlined in the speech from the Throne.

In order to undertake these additional duties, it is asking for an increase in its vote from $400,000 in 1960-1961 to $453,000 in 1961-1962. All of the increase is for salaries—to recruit the new staff required and to provide annual increments for existing staff. No increase has been requested either in the maintenance vote or for travelling expenses.

The department has continued its policy of providing useful employment in the summer months for postgraduate students. Last summer, 9 students were employed on various research studies. This policy has been of mutual benefit to the students and to the department. Students have been enabled to earn additional monies towards the cost of financing their education while the department has benefited, not only through the work performed, but also through the recruitment of a number of suitable candidates upon completion of their studies.

I would like to especially emphasize how very valuable I feel this particular section of our operation is. It has been mentioned, not only as a benefit to the department, but because of the help that accrues to the students because of suitable employment.

In 1961-1962, the department will be called upon to further expand its already extensive programme. As noted in the speech from the Throne, The Department of Economics has been asked to extend its studies on the Ontario economy "with a view to supplying economic services for all departments of the government and assisting them to cultivate and enlarge the opportunities for the province's expansion and development."

To achieve this objective, the preparation and publication of additional economic surveys will be accelerated to the extent that human and financial resources permit. In order to further encourage industrial development, the department will expand its services to the 10 economic regions in the province in co-operation with regional development associations and The Department of Commerce and Development. This expanded activity will take the following forms:

(1) Intensive studies of individual manufacturing industries will be undertaken to ascertain their competitive position with regard to costs, productivity and other factors.

(2) Studies will be undertaken on what other countries and provinces are doing to aid their manufacturing and export industries, and how these practices could be applied in Ontario and Canada.

(3) United States-Canadian economic relations—the economic problems of this subject, how they affect Ontario, and what can be done to solve them—will be studied. This area of study will include research into investment, exchange rates, merchandise trade and borrowings abroad.

(4) Studies will be undertaken on Canada's tourist and travel account.

(5) Economic data sheets will be issued periodically, supplementing and updating the information provided in those regional economic surveys already published.

(6) As the number of special requests for information from regional organizations and associations is increasing, more time and effort will be devoted by the staff of the department to this aspect of its regional economic services.

In addition to these tasks and many others—such as the financial arrangements made with the Champlain society for the publication of the Ontario historical series—the department is endeavouring to develop new techniques of analysis which will enable it to more accurately foretell economic trends. Mr. Chairman, in respect of the historical books, may I say that this department played a very important part in their publication by making the necessary monetary assistance available.

I now request the approval of the House for these estimates totalling $453,000.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I presume it will be your instruction that we be given some considerable latitude in the discussion of these estimates, for several reasons. Firstly, there is only the one vote; secondly, the department has assumed extraordinary purposes as a result of the introduction of several bills this afternoon; and thirdly, as a result of the ramifications of the speech from the Throne, relating to our economic welfare in Ontario.

With that presumption, Mr. Chairman, I would say that my job is to sit back calmly and analyze this department and its functions. I am not of the mind of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not think that we are ahead of our sister province of Quebec in the purposeful analysis of the functioning of government, the purposes of government. I think, rather, we are behind.

I cannot conceive in my mind how the department—which will serve all purposes of government in a service capacity, from advising the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) in his personal investigations through the newly created Department of Commerce and Development, the area of federal-provincial fiscal arrangement, to the area of pure research—will function in its present and intended context.

Mr. Chairman, very frankly, I am dubious about all the pleasantries expressed this afternoon with respect to this department. For its personnel I have the highest regard; for the men in charge of this department I have the highest respect.

But let me point to one fact which has aroused my suspicions.

Recently, and during the unemployment debate, I had occasion to ask the department the number of people who are unemployed in Ontario, and I asked, secondly, the amount of export business Ontario does in its secondary industries and its primary industries. The reply I received was this:

In The Department of Economics we have no such statistical accumulation of information. We depend on the federal bureau of statistics for that type of information.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I wonder if there might be an area of misunderstanding there. I understood at that time that the question the hon. leader of the Opposition asked was about the division of figures relating to northern and southern Ontario.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, its primary industries and export. Mine was an elementary question that the department, I would presume, would be concerned about.

What I wanted to know, Mr. Chairman, was this simple question: firstly, how many people are unemployed in Ontario? Secondly, what is the actual volume of dollar export for our natural resources and our secondary industry? You might say that the natural resources refer to northern Ontario, but it is a basic division of our economy—our natural resources and our secondary. It is not, Mr. Chairman, that I was trying to make the question complicated that concerned me; rather that I was told the information that was available was the information presented and accumulated from Ottawa from the bureau of statistics.

In other words, I gathered that the research done in Ontario was neither original nor specific.

Secondly, after reading the regional economic surveys that have been made by the department, I find that the information accumulated is information at the local level and handed on to this department in Toronto.

Mr. Chairman, my suggestion is this: That is fine, but what about the pure research that should be done here? What about freight rates? What about this question of federal-provincial arrangements? What about the question of unemployment? What about our exports? What about our secondary industries?

These things did not suddenly come to our attention. They have been on our doorstep for years. This is not the sort of thing that we should suddenly become excited about. This is the sort of thing we should know something about right now so that judgment can be made by the Minister of Commerce and Development. This area, this department, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, is going to be either overloaded or it is going to be, in the absence of that, unpurposeful.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, there are 3 or 4 facets of the operation of the department which must be segregated.

Firstly, I do not think that this department has any greater purpose and justification for directing our federal-provincial fiscal arrangements than many other departments of government. Sure, the economic background must be provided. But there is a matter of those associations and those relationships which are not only fiscal in nature. They are constitutional. They involve many other theoretical and nice problems of constitutional law and government.

For one, I strongly recommend, Mr. Chairman, your consideration and the consideration of the House, for setting up a separate segment that will deal exclusively with the matter of federal-provincial relationship. I do not see that The Department of Economics has any jurisdiction or any unique purpose in this area. Theirs is to be a service organization, one which provides information for other departments. But I do not think this department is in any peculiar or unusual position to make the necessary judgments and decisions that are required to be made.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, that in the area of pure research—which is the area in which I would like to see this department function—I presume there is to be little or nothing over and above what we had last year.

Hon. Mr. Allan: The hon. leader of the Opposition is misunderstanding the statement entirely. It is in the area of research that this department is intended to function. The purpose of this department is to supply the information that will be used in a federal-provincial discussion.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, at random I listed, I believe, some 20-odd questions that I would expect this department to be concerned about. I would ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer whether or not there are at the present time investigations going on by this department in respect to these areas: for example, the effect of high freight rate costs on industrial growth in Ontario, and particularly northern Ontario. Is anything being done about that at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Did the hon. leader of the Opposition read the submission?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes. Who accumulated the information? This department?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Surely the hon. leader of the Opposition is not going to suggest to this House that we duplicate the gathering of primary information from industry and require every industry or every reporting agency to make a report to the Ontario government as well as to the federal government for their statistical branch. Surely he is not suggesting that we would duplicate an operation of that kind.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I am saying that the province of Manitoba, which is a so-called less fortunate province relative to Ontario, did actually accumulate on its own this type of information. I think it is the type of information that an industrial province like Ontario would be expected to be accumulating.

Hon. Mr. Allan: We are not legally in a position to do it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: It certainly would be vital to the development and growth of Ontario to know something about this subject related to Ontario as such.

Hon. Mr. Allan: We do make use of all this information and study it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What about the economic consequences of increased power rates in Ontario? Has a study of that sort been undertaken, or is it undertaken by this department?

Hon. Mr. Allan: I believe that particular problem is being studied. I think the hon. leader of the Opposition recognizes the system that we have in Ontario for the production of power, which is the basis of power at cost. That is basic and must be recognized as being basic.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, seriously, Mr. Chairman—and I am not trying to embarrass the hon. Provincial Treasurer at all—I am as genuinely interested in this problem as he is. As I said at the outset, I am prepared to acknowledge the individual ability of the Deputy Minister and the other members of the department, but I, personally, do not feel that they are serving any purposeful function at the present time. I am anxious that we determine, firstly, what that function should be, and, secondly, implement that purpose.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Provincial Treasurer suggests, as I understand it, that Hydro should be studying that problem. I do not think so. I think The Department of Economics should be studying it. I think it relates to industrial development here.

My third question would be the same type: on the use of Hydro in developing natural resources.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Let me ask the hon. leader of the Opposition if he feels that the industrial community is paying more than their share of the cost of power, or would he like to have it raised to the householder.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I simply say this, I am interested in providing jobs in Ontario. I think the way to provide jobs is to think about our industrial development.

Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to take a stand on this and let the hon. Provincial Treasurer either agree or disagree, and it may well be he disagrees with me. Industrial power is one of the handicaps currently to industrial development in Ontario. I do not think the alternative to cheaper hydro rates in Ontario for industry is more expensive or is necessarily to mean that we have to add that burden to the domestic user.

Maybe we should subsidize the industrial user. Maybe there should be a little more economy.

But, one of the things I would like to know of this department is, are our rates higher than they are in Quebec, as we have been advised? Are our industrial rates higher than they are in Michigan?

Have we done the sort of development opposite Cornwall, a depressed area in Ontario, that they have done in the state of New York, where they have attracted real industry and new industry to an area with reduced hydro rates? Have we given any attention to this problem? Is this department giving attention to it at the present time, and, specifically, what is being done?

Hon. Mr. Allan: It is being studied in certain areas, and will be studied further.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What areas?

Hon. Mr. Allan: It is being studied and there is no report as yet. It is being studied with respect to certain industries such as the mining industry and some of the others.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, another question that we might expect this department to be considering, at the present time, is the social and economic questions of slum clearance. We have heard a lot about this. It is bound to be a subject of great political concern in the course of the next few years. It is one that should be of immediate concern in view of the economic conditions.

Has this department undertaken any studies of slum clearance in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Certain studies have been made in connection with slum clearance and a report will be made to the government for consideration to assist them in determining the policy they will adopt in connection with subsidized housing and with the establishing of certain industrial sites made available by slum clearance.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, did this get down to the essence of the concern that is in my mind? The hon. Provincial Treasurer says they are studying the question of slum clearance. Are they studying low-cost housing at the same time, and subsidizing low-cost housing at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Allan: That is right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And where are these studies being made?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, these are made in collaboration with The Department of Planning and Development to give them advice relative to the projects they undertake in partnership with the federal government and the municipalities.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, is not this the very point? Is a distinctive investigation or research being done by this department, on its own, to determine the economic and social—

Hon. Mr. Allan: It is done for The Department of Planning and Development.

Mr. Wintermeyer: At their instigation and request?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: How many people are involved in this particular branch of research?

Hon. Mr. Allan: About 4 on this project.

Mr. Wintermeyer: About 4 people; full-time, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Allan: No, not full-time.

Mr. Wintermeyer: In the course of the last year, how much time exactly was devoted to this particular problem?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Oh, there would be several weeks.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Several weeks' time. Has any policy been determined or suggested to the government with respect to slum clearance and low-cost subsidized housing?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The Department of Commerce and Development will be announcing their policy.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Chairman, the point I am trying to make is this: If this is a service branch, then we would expect this branch to be now in the position to say to the hon. Provincial Treasurer or to the government: "We have investigated this. We are in an economic recession. We think that this should or should not be done and, specifically, in regard to low-cost housing, subsidized housing, slum clearance. We feel that it will or will not be of benefit to implement such a programme at the present time."

I know they are giving it cursory attention. The Department of Planning and Development must be doing something but a few weeks of attention to the problem is certainly not going to provide the type of information that is necessary to come up with policy and determination. This is my very complaint of the department that, at the time we need the information and background, I question whether or not it is available.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I think he ought to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Just a minute. Do not get in the heat of high tension.

Now The Department of Economics—and I use that expression for the reason that, while the name has been enlarged, nevertheless in the actual field we still will use the designation "Department of Economics" for purposes of convenience and of eliminating expense; I think my hon. friends will agree with that—is a service department. The department itself does not evolve policy. Policy must come from the cabinet level and not from the departmental level—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Frost: In many of the things that we do, as my hon. friend will understand, there are differences of opinion. That always applies in every commercial business or other transaction. In the end it is the consensus of opinion that is taken and it is the consensus of opinion that prevails.

The Department of Economics might make a study, for instance, of the tremendous housing matter related to one particular facet, or perhaps to several. The department makes its findings and these matters are checked up against the work of the department which is actually working and doing things in that particular field, with the result that in the end it has to be the consensus of opinion.

I think my hon. friend would agree that The Department of Economics could never make the decision. I will give him a case in point from something entirely separate from housing, but it just occurs to me because I have a newspaper clipping here. It is in connection with that matter of schedule M regarding The Department of Education which we were referring to the other night.

There are always differences of opinion in these things. The Department of Economics for instance, might survey a condition, say, in municipality x, where there is a considerable volume of unemployment and it is determined to establish the reason. The Department of Economics might feel after the studies that it would be a place to establish a course, or courses, under schedule M dealing with certain particular things.

That basic information is extremely valuable, but, nevertheless, it is the executive department in the end, and no doubt the government, that has to make the decision.

We have cases where a course has been started, and there have been a great number of entries in the course. The interest in the course on the part of those taking it vanishes when they obtain work. It may be work that is entirely different from the course they are studying. They say, "Well, I will go into this new job," with the result that a class that perhaps starts off with 30 or 50 people dwindles down to 10 people.

The executive decision as to what to do there has to be with the department. With The Department of Economics the problem really is to try to produce the information, the basic information and, one might go so far as to say, the pros and cons upon which the matter is based. That situation happens in a tremendous number of cases.

Now, my hon. friend might say: "Well, all of the information might be published."

I think he will agree that is not the purpose of the department. It would not be desirable to do that. I mean it only creates misunderstanding.

After all, in business, in government, we all have to think about these problems. In many of them we have to think out loud for a while, we have to get the viewpoint of others, and the decision usually comes from the thinking of a number of people.

The Department of Economics gives us the broad basis upon which we can make a decision. Now it does not mean that The Department of Economics' conclusion is the right conclusion. As a matter of fact, in very many cases the conclusion would not be proposed. In the matter of the problems of dealing with the automobile industry, which again have to do actually with the problems of secondary industry—as the hon. leader of the Opposition knows—in very many cases there is little distinction between the problems of secondary industry and the automobile industry as such.

The Department of Economics went into that matter. The brief is in the possession of the hon. leader of the Opposition, and there is a tremendous lot of work entailed in it. In the end, decisions generally have to be based upon the basic information made available through The Department of Economics.

He might say the automobile industry very specifically involves The Department of Commerce and Development. Of course it does. On the other hand, I think he will agree that it would be a great mistake to set up another group of specialists within that department. We are trying to avoid duplication of expense. Under the aegis of The Department of Economics, the information becomes available to the other department concerned, and there the decision is made.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take an unnecessary amount of time, but I think this is vital in our discussion. What the hon. Prime Minister has said I would agree with 99 per cent. I quite agree that somebody, at some stage after information is accumulated, has to make a decision. That is the function of an executive.

Now, the cabinet as such is a collective executive. It must make the decision.

All I am saying is it seems to me the hon. Prime Minister is wholly inconsistent when, in his introductory remarks on the first reading of these several bills, he pointed out that this department—the new Department of Economics—would serve many functions. Among the functions that it would serve was the function of our sister province's specific new department to take care of federal-provincial relations.

I point out, Mr. Chairman, that therein lies executive decision and judgment. If we assign these functions to the department, it must act as executive, judgment maker and decision maker. That is not service only. I see no logic in assigning that function of government to this particular service agency, if it is a service agency only. I cannot see it at all.

Secondly, if it is to be a service agency, I question whether or not its investigation, its research, should not be made public. I know that the government will periodically want private investigations done to determine whether or not they should make or follow a particular course. That is understandable. But it does seem to me that at the present time there is nothing undemocratic about public divulgence of the number of unemployed in Ontario and who they are.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): That can be obtained from the federal bureau of statistics.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, the hon. member to my left—determined and prejudiced as he is in one particular respect—will not concede the fact that if we are to tackle this problem in Ontario we have to know more about the problems than what we know at the present time.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Woodbine has ever taken the trouble to try to make inquiries. I am sure that every hon. member in this House excepting the hon. member for Woodbine would expect this department to know at the present time the number of people who are unemployed in Ontario, and who they are, aside from the information that is forwarded to the department from Ottawa. I think it is a most reasonable position. Related very closely to that, it amazes me that the department is unable to advise us of the total exports of Ontario from our natural resources and secondary industry.

If we are to know something about secondary industry, I say then we have to have more background information.

I will concede, Mr. Chairman, that in conjunction with secondary industry there is executive decision required and the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development is going to have to make some decisions.

I cannot authenticate what I am going to say about this situation. I had to accumulate the information in a limited fashion. But I am of the opinion that secondary industry exports very little, that we sell to a domestic market only. And the only way to increase that market is to increase the number of people in this area—increase our population if we want to increase the market. This is an executive decision that will have to be made in the next few years, a decision that if it is going to be made prudently will require more information than is available to the hon. gentleman opposite at the present time.

That is all I am trying to point out, that we do not have the type of research background and information that is going to be required to make prudent and intelligent decisions on problems affecting the people and jobs and the industrial development of Ontario in the course of the next few months and years.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the hon. leader of the Opposition that, after all, The Department of Economics is a research department. It is not a statistician group that spend their time gathering statistics.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What is research? It is the study of statistics. Certainly there is a difference between a statistician and a pure researcher, I understand that. But I say this, there are many people in this province, many professional economists in Canada, who have said that what we should be doing in Ontario today is studying pure economic research in the same way as we are studying the medical problems such as cancer and other diseases that are afflicting our population.

We do not know enough about our economy, and that is the point I am trying to make, Mr. Chairman, irrespective of what the hon. members to my left say.

I say that we will not tackle, and solve effectively, our economic problems until we have the type of research and the type of study, the type of accumulation of statistical information required to make intelligent, prudent decisions. We do not have it. That is all I am saying.

Hon. Mr. Frost: On what does the hon. leader of the Opposition base his statement that we do not have it?

Mr. Wintermeyer: I will give the hon. Prime Minister an illustration. Two days ago—and I do not want to embarrass any particular member of the department—I had occasion to ask 3 questions. These were:

How many unemployed are there in Ontario? I asked where the information came from. I was advised that it was the federal bureau of statistics, that Ontario does not make any survey, or research or examination of that, except what is accumulated in Ottawa.

Then I said I would like to know what the dollar amount of our export is from Ontario industry and natural resources. I may not be phrasing it well, but the hon. Prime Minister knows what I mean. I wanted to know how many dollars we export from natural resources production. I was told that that information was not available, that the only way to get it was to take the information from the federal bureau of statistics and try to translate it into terms of the probable portion that comes out of Ontario.

Then I asked how much our secondary industry produced in Ontario, and what portion of it is sold in the foreign market. Again I was told the only information is the information that comes from Ottawa.

I say to the House that this is the type of information this government is going to need before the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development can make any intelligent executive decision. And that is the point I am making, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let me point out to the hon. leader of the Opposition, that surely he would not ask us here, in Ontario, to duplicate the work of the federal bureau of statistics? Actually speaking, we can set up a section here in Ontario and get the information at very great expense. What we are endeavouring to do is to integrate our services so that we know and we get the figures my hon. friend mentioned. We have calculations, for instance, of our manufacturing product in Ontario. My recollection is it runs now around $11 billion a year. It is possible to work these things out in co-operation with the federal bureau of statistics. If the hon. leader of the Opposition were to ask, at this moment, what is the amount of the gross national product related to Ontario, that takes some calculation. It can be obtained and, in many cases, is obtained if it is necessary.

I just point out it is necessary to have a method in this thing to avoid a lot of expensive duplication with federal services. That applies in so very many departments.

I give this example of years ago, in connection with Ontario House. Ontario House, back in 1943 when I was familiar with it, was duplicating to a very great extent things which really should have been done by Canada House. That situation has changed now but Canada House was treated more or less as the diplomatic entrée into the United Kingdom and attention was not paid to some of the things that we wanted, including immigration and a host of things like that. We did streamline things eventually so that now there is the closest of collaboration.

That is true of The Department of Economics. We could, of course, go into a lot of duplication which is very expensive, and costs a lot of money. On the other hand, I think that there has been a very great deal of confusion caused over a number of years by the Ottawa figures which really are based upon 2 or 3 different sets of calculations—for instance, unemployment insurance.

I think now in both Canada and the United States they are streamlining matters, so that I hope that next year we will be dealing with one set of figures instead of about 3.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): They are doing that now, they are just producing one set of figures.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is optimistic when he says it is straightened out. I hope that it will be straightened out.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot find any real area of disagreement with what the hon. Prime Minister has said. I do not want extra cost. Certain information that is available from the federal government certainly can be used by us. But I am making the very elementary point that we do not have anything like the information that we are required to have before we can make intelligent decisions.

In the hon. Prime Minister's presentation of the bill this afternoon, setting up this new Department of Commerce and Development, we had some very ideal phraseology about growing markets here in Ontario, expanding secondary industry. They are a laudable objective.

But, Mr. Chairman, the government opposite is nowhere near attaining that goal at the present time.

One of the reasons it is not anywhere near is simply because they, I suggest, do not have the information on which judgments are required to be made. If they are now going to start investigating secondary industry in Ontario, they know and I know, and everybody who has given this a moment's thought knows, that it is going to take 5 years to make an effective investigation.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no!

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, it is, and I will tell the hon. Prime Minister why, Mr.

Chairman. There are a number of factors that affect secondary industry. I have talked about Hydro and literally—in spite of what is said—I think the hon. Provincial Treasurer will admit that all the investigations relative to Hydro and hydro rates are being done by Hydro. I would wonder how many hours of study this department has actually put on Hydro and power costs.

Hon. Mr. Allan: A good many.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, a lot of time is going to have to be devoted to that. A lot of time will have to be devoted to transportation costs. A lot of time is going to have to be devoted to the determination of what happens to the products that are manufactured in Ontario.

My own cursory investigation—and of course it has to be cursory by the very nature of the circumstances—is that we do not sell abroad much of what we produce in the manufacturing industry in Ontario. It is sold within Canada in our domestic market.

How are we going to expand that market? We are going to have to have some basic information that we have no knowledge about at the present time. All I can do is go back again and again to this simple proposition that if this government is as foresighted, if it is as intelligent, if it is as concerned about the industrial development of this province as the bill on introduction would lead the people to believe, then I say that the attainment of the desirable goal—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Where does the hon. leader of the Opposition get his statement about very little of our $11 billion of manufactured products?

Mr. Wintermeyer: I will tell the hon. Prime Minister where I get it. The information that I got from the federal bureau of statistics gave me the total export in Canada, and the total of secondary industrial production in Canada, and the total natural resources production in Canada, and the total export from Canada of natural resources. Deducting the total export of all Canadian manufactured and natural resource industries and deducting the natural resource industries as such, leaves a very small portion of the total export.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say that our estimate would be this, that of the manufactured products in Ontario about half is exported.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Half of the $11 billion that the hon. Prime Minister talks about?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sure.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, Mr. Chairman, if that be an accurate analysis of the situation, then I think we need a Department of Economics more than ever. It is exactly this type of guesswork, Mr. Chairman, that is dangerous in Ontario.

Our newsprint industry, Mr. Chairman, our pulp and paper industry, I believe exports about 95 per cent of its production. Mines and the other natural resources come somewhat approximate to that. My recollection is that the export, the total export is only in the neighbourhood of $6 billion or $7 billion.

If one-half of the $11 billion that we are producing by secondary industry is exported, presumably we are not exporting any newsprint or very little of it, and very little mining and other natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to labour this unnecessarily. I feel strongly about it. I am not trying to politically embarrass the government for the sake of doing it, but I do say this department has not been well conceived, and the purposes have not been determined in an orderly manner.

There are other problems. I have talked about Hydro. I have talked about freight rates. I have talked about low-cost housing, but there are the problems of agriculture, the matters relating to farm production and marketing. Are we getting at these problems in this department at the present time? Specifically, what are we doing in regard to agriculture and marketing and agricultural production?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, let us get back again to this matter of operation of departments that was outlined previous to this. We are not standing up here and saying that we are formulating the policy of The Department of Agriculture. How could a department with 60 personnel, 60 staff, perform—

Mr. Wintermeyer: On a point of order and for the sake of brevity, I have never suggested that the hon. Provincial Treasurer should do that. I think he is still confusing the issue. He is not supposed to make policy decisions in this department but he presumably is supposed to provide the knowledge, the research and the statistical information on which policy decisions will be made. Now, is his department doing that for The Department of Agriculture?

Hon. Mr. Allan: We are not doing all the studies that are being carried on in The Department of Agriculture because they have had an intensive study of their own.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is his department doing any?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes, we are.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Specifically what?

Hon. Mr. Allan: If the hon. leader of the Opposition had listened this afternoon he would have learned that we had made a study of the milk market for them.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Which?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The milk market.

Mr. Whicher: What is the advice of the hon. Provincial Treasurer on that?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We did not get up around Wiarton.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Provincial Treasurer studied it, and he has cost the taxpayers a lot of money. What is his advice?

Mr. Wintermeyer: It is not advice at all.

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): It is not advice?

Mr. Whicher: It was a waste of time.

Hon. Mr. Allan: The information was handed over to The Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, what are they doing about it?

Mr. Whicher: What was the advice on the cold-storage plants?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that we do consult, and work very closely with, The Department of Economics; and I would think that, at any one time, we would have at least 25 studies going on in our own economics branch.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, now, where is the duplication? They talk about extraordinary expense and duplicating effort; if they are studying 25 different agricultural problems at one time—which is a good thing—what is The Department of Economics doing? Duplicating those same efforts?

Hon. Mr. Allan: No. We call them in only on special studies.

Mr. Wintermeyer: One of the things they have asked to be studied by The Department of Agriculture, according to the hon. Provincial Treasurer this afternoon, was the cold-storage plants in the province of Ontario.

I would like one example of what their advice was in connection with this. This cost quite a bit of money; they have asked for $500,000 this afternoon. What is their advice as far as cold-storage plants are concerned in the province?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am most anxious to give any information. I have already stated that the study that was being made in connection with the assessment of cold-storage plants—if the hon. leader of the Opposition had listened he would have heard the statement that I made—is being undertaken at the present time. It has not been completed—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer whether, at the present time, there is any study being undertaken by his department in respect to automation in the social and economic effects of automation on our industrial development, and on employment and on unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Allan: There has been some study—not a thorough study; but if the hon. leader of the Opposition will study the brief which was presented in connection with the automotive industry presentation at Ottawa, he will learn from that the—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, am I to conclude that the study related to automation is the study which was made for the presentation of the automobile brief? Is that the study—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out to my hon. friend that if he took all the economics departments of all the universities in Canada, if he took all the work they are doing, even then it would cover only a small segment of the Canadian scene. Now, of course, that is so with The Department of Economics; with a staff of 60, which includes stenographic assistance and everything else, it could not begin to. I would say to my hon. friend—

Mr. Wintermeyer: I agree with the hon. Prime Minister 100 per cent, but I do not think the department will do it in the future unless they organize it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, of course, the hon. leader of the Opposition could not do it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Nobody would ever have wanted to do it—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Why is the hon. Prime Minister saying they will?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Nobody is saying they will.

Mr. Wintermeyer: In the introduction of the bill, the hon. Prime Minister certainly says that this department would be—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, no, no! If we take one of the great banks of this country, we will find that their economics department would probably not be any larger than ours; perhaps not as large. But here is the situation; what they do is this:

They take the Canadian problem as it comes from perhaps 1,000 different branches; and there are specific things handed over to their department of economics to study, and I suppose, then, at staff conferences, the decisions are passed along.

In any Department of Economics we are going to have in government, the studies are going to come from the particular pressures of particular needs. Things not so pressing and, perhaps, not pressing at all, stand over.

At the moment, there are, of course, pressures related to our marketing facilities, our trade overseas, our trade with other countries, our trade within ourselves, our ability to compete, the problem of assisting and integrating industry.

I will give my hon. friend an example, here.

The other day, I was talking to quite a prominent industrialist from the Niagara peninsula. I was discussing with him the problems of his industry. He is a gentleman who has visited Europe and the far east, and is a very knowledgeable man.

He said: "In other countries, we find that government is co-operating very closely with industry and, as a matter of fact, is very closely identified with industry. I think that our combines laws in this country are completely archaic and out of date."

Well, now, let me say this—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is the hon. Prime Minister investigating?

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say this: that to investigate that problem, I can assure my friend, would take all of the 1960s, or a considerable period of time.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let me repeat this, from my friend. He said: "In other countries, from whom we are meeting very severe competition at the present time, they are actually sponsoring combines and cartels in order to operate together to sell goods in the Canadian and American markets. And, here, we are hitting industry with the same big stick that—"

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly. Is the hon. Prime Minister for or against it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: —with the same big stick that Teddy Roosevelt threatened labour 50 years ago." The hon. leader of the Opposition asks if they are my views. I say to my hon. friend that I am prepared, in this new world, to take a new look at everything.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is what we are endeavouring to do. We are endeavouring not to be bound by the chains of anything, but to be able to help our people, to be able to look at the challenges of the new world. That is what we have to do.

I can say this, we can only do our best—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. Prime Minister's government helped the federal government to maintain the brewery combine.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I beg your pardon?

Mr. MacDonald: He helped the federal government maintain the brewery combine.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I do not know anything about those things. That is something that my hon. friend might be more familiar with than myself. But I am only talking—

Mr. MacDonald: Let the hon. Prime Minister examine the role he played in it—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am talking about the general matter of helping our people to gear themselves, and to gear industry; and to help labour to gear itself to the problems coming from the outside; and to help our people here to maintain their standard of living against competition that is coming from elsewhere.

I just mention one facet that comes from one conversation with an industrialist—a young man of great ability—he tells me that we are archaic in our treatment of combines in this country.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, all right. I am saying that, if we were to turn and say to our Department of Economics: "You major on that," we would not see them, nor would we get anything done for another 6 months.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I say that we have to do the best we can. Here is a department, built from nothing, that today is costing us $500,000. It is within our means to fit it into the picture; and we have to do the best we can.

If our fellows in The Department of Economics can talk to the economists who are now with banks, with industry, with labour unions and the like—and talk to them knowledgeably about their problems—out of this, perhaps, will come the solution. That is how we have to view it. I do not think for one minute that we could say to our department: "We want a white paper on the matter of automation."

I would point out to my hon. friend that when we get into that subject, the staff would study the milk business or anything else; they would not have time. It would take their entire time to do that one thing. I point out—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Have we become an industrialized society in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Pardon?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Have we become an industrialized society?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, my hon. friend can answer that question himself. I think that is one of the problems of today.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Certainly, we have. Mr. Chairman, I think it is the responsibility of this government not only to acknowledge the obvious but to do something about it. We are not going to have a bigger secondary industry unless some tough decisions are made by the hon. Minister of Commerce and Development; and he had better have some more information than what he has now before he makes them.

It is not going to be easy. Talking about it is not going to solve this problem at all. And if we pretend to be the forerunner of the greatest industrialized province in the Dominion, then we have to have more information than we have.

Now my understanding is that, in Quebec today, they have sent delegations to Ontario to woo away a good many of our industries because of their ability to sell cheaper electrical power than what we can offer. What study are we making? Are we going to permit that?

Even Saskatchewan, I understand, is trying to woo away some of our industries here in Ontario. And the information I have again—only from friends in the business—is that other governments in other parts of Canada are doing far more than the government opposite for industry, and in consideration of the problems of industry.

I am not one who believes in building industry for the sake of building it but—with Henry Ford—I do believe the first social function of industry is to provide jobs, and that is what we must be concerned about if we wish to increase and develop the industrialization of this province.

Sure, we will all talk with all persons who will talk about the problem. But the hon. Prime Minister, as head of the government, has a responsibility to lead.

What direction should we take? Maybe the difficult choice will have to be made in the future. Are we to stress secondary industry or primary industry? I do not like the fact that all our primary industry is exported. It would be much better, we all agree, to process it here in Ontario. But we do not know today what portion is expected and how we are going to sell that production outside Ontario.

I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that 90 per cent of our secondary industry is sold in Ontario and Canada, that we have to find a foreign market in regard to the automobile industry. Maybe the hon. Prime Minister should be concerned with making a trade arrangement with the new President of the United States to manufacture one line only, for the whole of the North American market. This would be new. This would be breaking the chains of the past. But he will not do it without knowledge and information.

That is my simple appeal to him today. It is not the appeal of a crank. It is not the appeal of one who is bitter. It is the appeal of one who is interested in industrial development in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I might say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that, of course, he can confuse himself and everybody else by a cavalcade—if I can put it that way—or a succession of thoughts. Anybody can do that in the world today.

He has thrown out probably a dozen different things to which he does not know the answer; and, as a matter of fact, in many cases we, ourselves, and industry strive for the answer.

He mentions industry, and the abilities, perhaps, of other provinces to get industries from the province of Ontario. Frankly, I do not know of any such things, at the present time, but let us face this thing boldly.

In our sister province of Quebec, they have immense water power. There is no power cheaper than the power generated from water running downhill. They have it, that is true, in Newfoundland as well. And, I imagine, with the growth of America, the Grand Falls in Newfoundland, which today is an immense waste, will be harnessed to produce power some day.

I do not think this province of Ontario should ever compete in industries requiring immense amounts of power and little employment. I think the hon. leader of the Opposition will agree with that.

Industry, requiring immense amounts of power per capita of employment, would be far better off if it went elsewhere, because our power is bound to be more expensive.

Let us look at the facts of the situation. In the last 50 years, we have developed practically all of the available power in Ontario which can be generated from water power. We have pretty well reached the total. We are going to have to turn, and we are turning now in a big way, to thermal power generated from steam, and gas, and nuclear power. It is going to pay us to use and to bring the type of industry to Ontario which employs a lot of people and is modest in the use of power. I think the hon. members will agree with that.

There is no use becoming alarmed at the fact that certain types of industry are going elsewhere. As a matter of fact, in the economy of our country, industry ought to go elsewhere.

The days when we have large blocks of surplus power are completely over. It used to be—in the Niagara peninsula, for instance—that because of the development of power on the Niagara river there were immense blocks of surplus power which were sold for almost a few cents per horsepower on an unintermittent basis. I would say that those days are over in this province.

It is true that there is a small amount of exportable power—the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley) mentioned that—exported at will between, say, the state of New York and the province of Ontario. But, remember, those things depend upon reciprocal arrangements. They support our grid when we need it and we support their grid. Other than that, the days of the very large export of electrical energy generated in this province is very rapidly coming to an end.

Now, that situation may not apply in connection with the export of energy derived from natural gas which, of course, is a very important form of energy. It may be that Canada—and this is outside of our area—may have sources of natural gas and oil which would justify an export on a considerable basis. That is something for another level of government, and for another provincial jurisdiction, to determine.

But, I say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that some of the statements he makes—I mean he throws out—that industry leaves this province, and so on, are going to depend upon the economics of the situation.

One of the great magnets which draw industry to Ontario is our fast-growing population. That is the greatest asset. With a fast-growing population, we can meet the problems of increased cost of power, provided we are not profligate with the use of power, and we can use it in areas routed to industries where we can get large employment.

We would like to see industry spread evenly across the province. As a matter of fact, no matter what we do, there is a growing concentration of industry in what might be termed the golden horseshoe stretching from Oshawa around to St. Catharines.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Is that bad or good?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say that it certainly has its bad elements. On the other hand, an industry wants to come to this area because it has within a short range the biggest purchasing market in Canada. That is why it comes. The minute it comes here, of course, it increases population, and the minute it increases population, it increases our problem.

Mr. Reaume: That brings up an important fact right there.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Of course it does. Take, for instance, the hon. member's own city of Windsor. I must admit I would much prefer to see—from the standpoint of the even development of our province—the Ford plants in Windsor. But they came to this area because of the proximity to markets. There is no avoiding that.

Mr. Reaume: Freight rates.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say principally the fact that it is simpler to market their goods and I would say to the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) that his area, being part of the golden horseshoe, has a definite advantage.

I would like to see industry spread out in Owen Sound, Orillia, Lindsay, and places like Windsor, North Bay, Sudbury and so on.

As a matter of fact, some things are encouraging in the north country—extremely encouraging. The coming of natural gas to northern Ontario has completely changed the picture. I prophesy for that area an immense population, and it is a place which can support an immense population.

However, we could put The Department of Economics on any one of these matters and we would not hear of it for 5 years.

Mr. Reaume: On that point I notice here that the hon. Prime Minister has about 15 pages in his brief devoted entirely to automobiles—I think about 15 whole pages. I have tried to read it all. I honestly think that he has done a good job in preparing the brief. I think it was last April when I spoke with him and to other officials on this very subject, because it is a problem that worries people who come especially from automotive cities such as I do.

We talk about the Ford Motor Company, for instance, moving the assembly plant out of Windsor. The hon. Prime Minister mentioned properly and truthfully the reason for it.

The hon. Prime Minister pointed out in this brief many of the ills of the automotive field which affect the economy of this province, because practically all of the automobiles of Canada are built in the province. But I looked through this brief and could not find any definite recommendations to the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) or the commission.

I am wondering if this government—and we might be infringing upon the federal field—is going to treat private enterprise as though it was a sacred cow forever. I say if we do not start pointing out to industry pretty soon the responsibilities that it has to people, it might be that even in our time, our way of life may become a thing of the past.

I do not think it is beyond reasonable thinking that the hon. Prime Minister of this province, or even the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada, should call together the heads of industry and point out to them what industry's obligations are and the responsibilities that they owe to their fellow-countrymen.

We have had some plants at Windsor that have been there for years: men have given the best part of their lives—and this is economics, I think—only to find without much notice that the plant would close, pack up and say: "Goodbye, we are going elsewhere."

I am not sure we can keep on giving industry that right. I know it sounds a little harsh where people have invested their funds, it is their money. We all agree on this business of private enterprise, but is there not a plan in England that before an industry can locate in a spot, it must first have the approval of a department of government?

I think we should have a voice in these things because it affects the lives of human beings. I do not think we can treat these people like a herd of cows or animals. After working them for 25 years or 30 years industry should not be able to throw them on the street.

One of the reasons I am certain the city of Windsor had the problems it did in the financial field was because certain automotive industries advertised across this land of ours that they were paying a high wage.

Sure it was a high wage—a high, hourly wage—but not too many hours, and the annual pay was not very high. They worked those men until they got tired of them or had nothing more for them to do, with overtime and everything, and threw them back on the laps of the city and said: "Now this is your baby, you nurse it and you feed it."

Consequently, in the years of 1929, 1930 and 1931, one of the greatest things I think that contributed to the failure of that part of the country financially was because we had to pick up the bill for people, and quite properly so.

We did not holler at that time nor are we hollering now. But we do say that the time is rapidly approaching when government, both federal and provincial, has to—for the good of industry itself, and, indeed, for the good of human beings—take a good look at this thing. The governments must stop this business of treating private enterprise as though it were a sacred cow that we must continuously bow down to in order to protect private enterprise as we know it.

I think that, before some other "ism" sneaks in the back door and steals our way of life, it might be well if we were to call in the heads of industry and have a good heart-to-heart talk with them.

I want to point out one important thing, in the automobile field—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: Now, will the hon. member for Woodbine keep quiet for a moment? He is a great man. I will tell the House how great he is. He is a real champion of the working man, especially the man who works in Canada, and more especially for those who work in our province.

I was standing outside the other day. I could hardly believe my own eyes when up drove the hon. member for Woodbine with a little putt-putt that was made on the opposite side of the ocean.

Now I hope that when he comes to the city of Windsor he will bring that thing with him, and I hope that he frankly admits to the automobile workers of the province that he is not such a great friend of theirs after all.

I think it is pretty near time that these people who run across this province telling the working class what great friends they are should have enough faith in the ability of the Canadian people to buy cars that those workers have made.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): How small can the hon. member be?

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, on the matter of—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: If he wants to drive that foreign-made car, he can drive it, but I think he is not adding anything by driving it.

One of the things, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to point out, was a statement made not long ago in a speech here in this city made by the hon. federal Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr). I did not know that this was true, but I accept his word for it.

He said that it is not really the wages that are being paid to the automobile worker in Canada that is driving us out of the markets of the world. He said it was profit, and that it might be advisable for the automobile manufacturers along with others to take a good look—

Mr. Thomas: Sit down and let someone more sensible speak.

Mr. Reaume: Well, that is a nice crack coming from an hon. member who calls himself a gentleman. As I was stating, the hon. federal Minister of Labour made these statements. He is a reputable man and I am quoting—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Reaume: Hon. Mr. Starr made the statement that industry should take a good look at profit. I want to say that I agree. The other part that I want to talk about is this—

Mr. MacDonald: Does the party of the hon. member agree?

Mr. Reaume: Certainly my party agrees. They at least keep their mouths shut when other people are talking, that is one thing they will do.

Mr. Chairman, in the city of Oshawa, I am told, some time ago General Motors built a Corvair plant. I am further told that this plant was built especially for making Corvair cars. I am further told that not one new Corvair has passed over the assembly line in this new plant.

Mr. Thomas: Now I am sure the hon. member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Reaume: It is true that there are some Corvair cars being made in Oshawa but not in this plant. Now, in order to prove how unfair some of the automobile companies are, even though Corvairs in rare instances are made in Oshawa, the very same company is importing cars from the United States.

The Tempest is one, the F85 Olds is the second and the third one is the Buick Special that they import for the specific purpose to be on the competitive market with the car that they make in Canada.

Now the point I am getting at is that my home happens to be within one block and a half from the bridge between the city of Detroit and the city of Windsor. A window at the back of my home faces the bridge, and every day hundreds upon hundreds of imported cars made in the United States are being brought across on trucks. To any man who lives in an automotive town, if this is not enough to make his blood curdle, I do not know what is.

I have got to the point where I think we should give serious thought to a recommendation to the federal people. After all, it is our province that these cars are being built in, it is our province that is being hurt more than any other province.

I am wondering if we should not give some thought to this, as they have done in Australia, Mexico and other places. I am wondering if we should not say to the automobile manufacturers: "If you want to sell cars here in Canada, then build them here." Because the only company I think that has been at all fair in trying to increase the amount of the Canadian content in cars is the Chrysler Motor Car Company of Canada, with their plant in Windsor, and for that I give them high marks.

But I am just wondering if we have not got this right, as men who are charged with the responsibility of the economy of this province, to call these men in and have a heart-to-heart talk with them. Out of every 100 cars on our streets, 27 are of foreign extraction, and imports are going up. It certainly is obvious that if this thing goes on, we will become a province and country where automobiles will be made in other parts of the world and imported here.

Just two days ago I read an article in the Detroit papers explaining the British deal of Ford motor cars. In this article it explained that it was the ultimate purpose to build the baby cars or the compacts, over there. Now I do not know whether this is actually going to happen or not, but I think it is time that we found out whether or not it is the intention of the Ford Motor Car Company of England to build compact cars over there and export them here and every time they do, put more of our people out of work.

I am not criticizing, I am only pleading. If The Department of Economics is going to be worth anything—I tried to follow as they were explaining the very hodgepodge way of handling it—I would be one of those people who would gladly vote for a greater expenditure in the department, if they would employ the proper kind of people and get us some of the answers to this thing. I do not see how we are going to find out the answers if they do not employ experts and get right down to hard work.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, it would appear that The Department of Economics has become a whipping boy for a great many grievances and confusions that appear to have arisen in the official Opposition ranks. I think that to a certain degree the government itself is responsible, because of the obvious error it has made in the baptismal certificate of this agency. It is described as, and has been for the past few years, The Department of Economics when in actual fact it is purely a research bureau.

I do not know if some special prestige attaches to the word "department" as against "bureau"—I do not see why it should—but obviously this agency is not a department in the ordinary sense of the word. It is a bureau set up to carry out research projects requested by the government and I, suppose to some extent, by others. It is not a department and it is certainly not in any sense of the word a planning agency.

Personally, what I think is needed in this province and this country is a planning agency to advise the government on co-ordinated plans for the economic and social development of the province in co-operation with the national government. I think we should have such an agency, and if we had it then the research function would fall very naturally into place. The research function would become a support of the planning agency. I am not going to argue with the government about that, I know they do not believe in it. I am not quite sure where the official Opposition stands; they say one time they do not believe—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I point out to the hon. member that before this department was created a department, it was called "the bureau of statistics and research" and really it has grown from that. It was created into a department because of the dealings we were having, as I say, on the intergovernmental levels of the provinces and the federal government, and the fact that it was desirable to give the staff and the Deputy Minister the status in dealing with the other departments and to avoid, if we could, duplication wherever we could.

Mr. Bryden: I am willing to agree it was previously described as a bureau and I think the organization of it, or at any rate the title of it, changed two or three years ago. I think that it would be more properly described as a bureau. I do not think a bureau is necessarily small. The federal bureau of statistics, for example, is one of the largest agencies in the federal government.

However, I am not going to quibble about words. If the government wishes to describe the agency as a department, that is quite satisfactory to me. I think I understand what its role is in the government framework and I am willing to discuss it on that basis.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Perhaps the hon. member will inform us what its role is?

Mr. Bryden: Well, that is really a large order and I have not the time at present to deal with it. There are one or two other matters that I would like to devote my attention to.

I was saying that in my opinion what we need is a proper planning agency to develop plans and advise the government on them, for the economic and social development of the province.

I have also said that I am not going to argue with the government on the point, I realize that they have a different social philosophy than I have, they do not believe that that is a proper function of government, and we will let it go at that. But there is bound to be some confusion on the role of

The Department of Economics, when they are operating in the present context.

My hon. friends of the Liberal party always proclaim that they are great believers in private enterprise. In fact, I believe the hon. leader of the Opposition stated on television not very long ago that he did not believe in economic planning, but he believes in economic co-ordination or something like that.

I would say that we cannot have co-ordination without planning. In listening to the efforts of the hon. members to the right, I think I am confirmed in this impression that we cannot have co-ordination without planning, because I have rarely seen less co-ordinated efforts than some of those they have been undertaking in the last couple of days.

However, they claim to be great believers in private enterprise and yet they are forever complaining because private enterprisers act like private enterprisers. The hon. member for Essex North said that we should not worship the sacred cow of private enterprise.

Well, of this group we have been trying to say that for years, they are the hon. gentlemen who always want to worship the sacred cow of private enterprise, but then when a private enterpriser acts according to the rules of the system—and surely within the framework of that system he should not be criticized—then the hon. member for Essex North squeals about it. In his typical fashion, he rarely deals with issues as issues, but always must start delving into someone's personal business and dealing with an issue on a pure basis of personalities. That is typical of him, I am accustomed to it, I think nothing of it.

As far as my own private business as to what kind of a car I drive is concerned, this is surely not a matter that has been any secret. I purchased this car new back in 1957. I have had it ever since. I have been parking it regularly out in front of the building.

I know that the hon. member for Essex North is rarely aware of what is going on, but I would have thought it would not have taken him 3 years to discover what kind of a car I was driving. I may say I have driven it on a number of occasions to his fair city of Windsor. I have driven it to the city of Oshawa, and, as a matter of fact, I drove it on one occasion to the united auto workers' camp at Port Elgin in Ontario. I am not ashamed of the car I drive. In fact, I take to myself a little credit for perhaps being one of many who have helped to gain a certain small measure of relief for the oppressed consumer of this country.

Some 3.5 years ago, when I found it was necessary to replace the car I then had, I looked around with a view to purchasing a car and found that the Canadian subsidiaries of American companies were determined that they were going to foist off on me some overstuffed, overgrown battleship that I did not want.

I refused to buy it, and as a consumer I exercised my right of free choice and refused to take something that I did not want. So I got another car and I was one of a growing multitude. I was one of the earlier ones, perhaps, of a growing multitude who refused to accept this phoney propaganda emanating from Detroit to the effect that you cannot be a man of significance unless you have a whopping big car. If I must depend on a car to be important, I do not want to be important.

Many of us have revolted against this tyranny of Detroit. I think that persons like myself have done a service to perhaps a lot of consumers. We have forced these Detroit manufacturers and their subsidiaries in Canada to recognize the fact that many, many people do not want their overgrown battleships. They have, therefore, had to make some effort to meet the genuine requirements of a great many of the consumers of this country.

Mr. Chairman, here is a spokesman of a party which used to call itself the free trade party. Now apparently, and I judge from further statements they have made, they do not believe in trading with other countries at all. They believe in autarchy, they believe in trying to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps; they are the extreme reactionary party believing that nothing should be purchased in this country except that which is produced here—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: I can tell you there is nothing that will reduce the standard of living of people in this country more, Mr. Chairman. I realize it is very difficult to control this overgrown schoolboy, but perhaps since I have the floor I should be entitled to speak without this constant barracking from the right.

This is the great party of free trade, or so it is represented. Now, apparently, it is the party of extreme protection, that wishes nothing to be purchased in this country except that which is produced here. This will certainly be destructive of international trade and destructive of our own best interests in the long run.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, some of the suggestions which the hon. leader of the Opposition has made as to types of studies that might be undertaken by The Department of Economics, in my view, make no sense whatsoever. For example, his suggestion that The Department of Economics should be going into competition with the federal bureau of statistics to get different or supplementary figures—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, that is what the hon. member's suggestion—and he repeated it several times—amounted to.

Mr. Bryden: To go into competition with the federal bureau of statistics to produce additional or contradictory figures on unemployment is surely a total waste of time. Sometimes when I listen to the hon. leader of the Opposition I come to the conclusion that his answer to unemployment is to set up enough government agencies and departments and have them do enough useless things so that everybody will be working for the government.

But surely there is no reason why this department should have to do anything with regard to the collection of figures on unemployment. And I frankly cannot see why they should be subject to criticism on that.

On the matter of slum clearance I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not need a study from The Department of Economics to tell me that this government has done so little about slum clearance or housing generally that it is pitiful. To demonstrate that they have no policy on the subject does not need a study from The Department of Economics. I can see that just by driving along some of the streets of Toronto. I know they have done nothing, I know they have no housing policy, so why do we need a study on that? What we need on the question of slum clearance and housing is not more studies, but some action—

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: —and I hope that, at an opportunity when it may be a little more in order, we may be able to discuss that matter in greater detail and put forward some suggestions for action which apparently the government has never thought of to date.

As to a study on Hydro rates, it is possible that such a study may produce useful information. I find it a little difficult to follow the sudden concern the hon. leader of the Opposition has apparently developed on this point, when he and his party have steadfastly refused to support the proposition of providing gas in this province at cost to both industry and domestic consumers.

The sacred cow of private enterprise, that the hon. member for Essex North was talking about, was so fervently worshipped by them on that occasion that they could not see the best interests of the province.

Now, surely, it is very important to industrial development in this province to have gas at the cheapest possible price just as well as low-cost hydro. Yet the system of distribution that we have in this province, and which apparently the Liberal party supports in all its essential outline, is one that is bound to ensure that we will not get gas at cost in the province.

However, Mr. Chairman, there was one point raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition which I think does merit considerable study by The Department of Economics, even though the hon. Prime Minister, I think, tended to dismiss it rather out of hand. That is the whole question of automation.

I am glad to see that the Liberal party is beginning to get concerned about this problem. It is a problem that has been with us for some substantial time. When we had a Liberal government in Ottawa up until 3 years ago, we could never get them to take any interest in the matter, although representations were made to them many times by many people that this was an important problem to which consideration should be given.

This, Mr. Chairman, is undoubtedly the major domestic problem of our era. I am not now concerned with the great problems of peace and war, and as far as our domestic welfare is concerned, there is no doubt that automation and rapid technological advance generally is a problem which should be receiving the utmost consideration from all levels of government.

It is a development which can be a tremendous boon to the people of this country and to humanity generally. But it can also bring with it the same sort of dislocations and misery as the previous industrial revolution brought with it. Surely it is high time governments started to take regard for some of the problems that are arising in connection with the development of automation. Surely this great new phenomenon imposes on government the obligation to consider planning the development of our economy and of our society generally.

This is fundamentally the responsibility of the federal government. But it is a matter to which the province also should be giving attention, and to the degree which the federal government fails to consider the matter, I think an obligation is imposed on the provincial government to step into the breach.

Yet the hon. Prime Minister has indicated that he really does not think—at least this is what I understood his words to mean—he does not really think this is the concern of his government at all. He said something to the effect that if The Department of Economics started to study the problem of automation, it would not have any time to study anything else. Maybe this is much more important than anything else that might be studied.

Mr. Chairman, this brings one logically back to the point that I started from: essentially what we need is a planning agency. With a planning agency the research work would fall into place; it would become a part of the total programme. The hon. leader of the Opposition stood up and asked point after point, as to what The Department of Economics is doing on research in various areas. My impression was that the hon. Provincial Treasurer was putting as bold a face as he could on it. But frankly it appears that the department is not doing too much about most of the subjects raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition. That was my impression as an interested observer.

It should be pointed out, however, one could have an agency with a staff of 1,000 economists and somebody could always find some subject on which they were doing no research. There is no limit to what might be done. But the problem is that at the moment the agency we have is merely one that does a job here, takes an assignment here or an assignment there at the request of the government.

It is all very important and no doubt very useful to the government, and I have no doubt that they wish to continue and expand this agency. But it is not a fundamental and basic research job and study of the problems of the province which would be a part of an overall planning process.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make reference to an effort of the hon. Attorney-General last summer. As I understand it from reading the papers he arranged, with much beating of drums and a great blare of publicity, to have Professor Parkinson appear before the committee on the organization of government or whatever the title of that standing committee is.

Professor Parkinson came here and was introduced by the hon. Attorney-General and others as a great authority on problems of government and one who should be listened to very carefully by all hon. members of the Legislature and all those interested in government. As far as I can recollect, and I must confess that I am again relying mainly on newspaper accounts, about the only concrete suggestion Professor Parkinson made was that The Department of Economics should be abolished.

I take it from the estimates that have been presented to us that the government did not accept that recommendation of Professor Parkinson. In fact, I wonder what purpose his visit served.

I take it that the government has come to the conclusion that bringing Professor Parkinson here was a total waste of money, that he really has very little understanding of the problems of modern government and very little to contribute to their solution. At any rate, that is the conclusion I would draw from the estimates that are before us at this moment.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I think that, perhaps, it might be interesting for the hon. member to know that Professor Parkinson came here without any fee attached to his attendance at all. He created a fair amount of interest and gave views that were sharply in contrast with the views of a lot of other people. I found them extremely interesting myself and, in fact, I would rather hear them any day than some of the views of the hon. member for Woodbine.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell a little story about something that happened in my own riding. Certainly it does not matter to me, not coming from an automotive area, whether the hon. member for Woodbine drives a Volkswagen or an Oldsmobile, but I think he would appreciate this story.

I see he is going, but probably the hon. member for York South will tell it to him.

In my area the united automobile workers have a summer camp, and I am sure the hon. member for York South knows about it. These hon. members have said that it is our right and privilege to drive any sort of car that we wish in this province. That is correct, according to the hon. leader of the CCF (Mr. MacDonald).

This is what happened in Port Elgin. This is a true story and actually happened. The united automobile workers have a summer camp there and they are serviced by a local dairy. That dairy was using a Volkswagen truck. The owner of the dairy was called into the office of the united automobile workers and told this: "If you do not change your truck and use one that is manufactured in Canada we will stop buying milk from you."

I wonder what the hon. member for York South would like to say about that. I will let him speak.

Mr. MacDonald: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Whicher: I will.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. member for Bruce would read the brief of the united automobile workers to the government on this whole problem, then he will concentrate his fire on the industry which is not providing the consumers with what they need instead of confusing it in the way he is now doing.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I have not confused the issue at all. I just told this House the facts. I would like to ask the hon. member for York South if he agrees with the action of the united automobile workers in telling this man that he must get rid of that truck or lose the business?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of this and I am not in a position to answer it.

Mr. Whicher: I am telling him on my word of honour.

Mr. MacDonald: But I will say that I do agree with the brief of the united automobile workers to the government, and that brief is, Mr. Chairman, primarily what the hon. Prime Minister said many times, and that is that if the automobile industry does not wake up to the facts of life on the North American continent they will be driven out of the automobile industry altogether.

Mr. Whicher: All I have to say, Mr. Chairman, is this. I think it is grossly unfair that a big organization such as the united auto workers should come along to a poor dairyman in Bruce county and say that he must get rid of that truck or lose their business, and at the same time they condone the actions of the hon. member for Woodbine in driving one of the same type. You cannot have your cake and eat it too.

Mr. MacDonald: Would the hon. member reconcile why he is today supporting the Diefenbaker government on the issue of the railroad workers while the federal Liberals are opposed to it?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, there are so many efforts by the hon. member for York South to confuse the issue. I could give a theoretical question and say this: Why in the name of heaven do the CCF allow the hon. member for York South to be the leader? I am sure none of us understand how he happened to get that. I do not understand it at all.

What I want to know is why the hon. member condemns a poor dairyman for using a Volkswagen truck in Bruce county and yet allows his own member to drive one of the same.

Mr. MacDonald: I have no answer for that one.

Mr. Whicher: No answer at all?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest, of course, to the hon. Provincial Treasurer and Minister of Economics this afternoon.

He is a man for whom I have a great admiration, and I would like the House to know this. He has been chairman of the select committee dealing with the prospects of compulsory automobile insurance in this province. It is the first time that I have ever sat on a select committee but if I sit on any more in the future all I hope is that we have such a capable chairman as he.

However, Mr. Chairman, I am not here to talk about insurance this afternoon. I have listened, as I said, with much agreement with what the hon. Provincial Treasurer has said. On the other hand, there are some misgivings in my heart that, though this is a relatively small department as far as financing is concerned, is it all necessary?

I believe that not too many years ago, out of The Treasury Department or out of the government as it was then constituted, along came a Minister of Planning and Development who was supposed to look after the planning and the development of this province and the industry of this province.

Then they wanted to create a few more jobs and I think it was done quite capably in many respects. Then they wanted to create a job for somebody else and so along came The Department of Economics.

All that we have heard this afternoon is the fact that we are having research into various matters, that they advise The Department of Agriculture or The Department of Municipal Affairs or any department of government about certain things that they may think are right. On the other hand, the hon. Minister this afternoon has not told us one solitary thing that the Deputy Minister of Economics has advised him to do.

In dealing with agriculture, as an example, he said that the department was having an investigation regarding cold-storage plants. In dealing with The Department of Municipal Affairs, he said that they were making studies about the unconditional grants that are given to the municipalities of this province by the hon. Provincial Treasurer of the province of Ontario.

I will tell you this, Mr. Chairman: the farmers where I come from in Bruce county are a little bit tired of all this research and investigation into packaging and selling goods, and they want a little bit of action for a change. That is what I was hoping that the hon. Minister would stand up and tell us this afternoon.

I was hoping that he would stand up and say that, as a result of this department being formed 2 or 3 years ago, this department has advised the hon. Minister of Agriculture that the way we are going to sell bacon in England is as follows; that the way we are going to sell powdered milk somewhere else is as follows; that the way we are going to export some of our secondary industry manufacturing is as follows.

I have not heard one concrete suggestion by the hon. Minister this afternoon as to what the results of this department have been. Oh, yes, he says, they are going to look after the federal-provincial conferences. When we have one in Charlottetown they will be a sort of liaison officer between the province of Ontario and perhaps the federal government and the other provinces of this great Dominion.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that when we have such a very, very serious economic problem in this country, the hon. Minister should be able to tell us this afternoon about some of the results of The Department of Economics' studies. After all, whether the hon. members across will admit it or not, we are in a serious state at the present time. Many of our small industries The Department of Economics are supposed to be investigating are in bad shape financially. They cannot even sell their goods in the province of Ontario, let alone in the United States or in other foreign countries.

Our farmers are in a serious predicament. At the present time, we have 135 million pounds of butter in stock in Canada. Have The Department of Economics, in advice to The Department of Agriculture, let us know how we can sell some of this? All of us agree that this Department of Economics, or some department of that overloaded government across the way, should go and sell this food and our manufactured goods somewhere. But so far, Mr. Chairman, there have been no results whatsoever.

I do hope that next year, as a result of the research that the hon. Minister says the department is going to do, they will be able to come to us and, instead of telling us what they are going to do, they will be able to say that they have done it; that through this department some of the manufactured goods, that our industries have produced, have been sold in other lands.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly think that the department has much that it can do. I do hope that in the year to come they will come back and give us a little better report than they have given us this afternoon.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, as a relative newcomer to the House, I must admit that some of my questions may seem to be elementary, but I have a few comments with respect to the estimates of The Department of Economics, and I hope to ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer a few questions.

It seems to me that The Department of Economics is one department which should be charged with showing some creative leadership to inquire into the affairs of this province and advising somebody.

Mr. Chairman, my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) today asked several questions of the hon. Minister with respect to what is being done by this department. As far as I can see, the hon. Minister has been unable to give a satisfactory answer to any of those questions. It seems to me that every department of government has its own economic department within it. As far as I can see, from the answers which have been given by the hon. Provincial Treasurer this afternoon, there seems to be little or no co-ordination between those departments.

Certainly we must start somewhere, Mr. Chairman, if we are going to evolve some type of policy that has common sense in it. Since I came to the House, I have heard several hon. Ministers of the government opposite take credit for the progress which has evolved in the province of Ontario throughout the past few years; growth which has been unprecedented in the province of Ontario and which, I suspect, Mr. Chairman, is in spite of the government rather than because of it.

I think this is growth which has evolved as the result of the initiative, imagination of private enterprise with little or no direction from the government, and more particularly from The Department of Economics. It would seem to me that The Department of Economics should have taken the lead in discussing the problem of unemployment. As far as I know, they have yet to come up with any type of a survey to tell us anything about the labour force in Ontario. It may be—and I shall be glad to be enlightened—that there has been little co-ordination between that department and The Department of Labour. I would like to know whether or not The Department of Labour has requested any information from them.

I think my hon. colleague from Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) made some valid points when he spoke in the unemployment debate. He mentioned a study which had taken place in the great country to the south of us; a special committee on unemployment problems which was conducted by the United States Senate, and different problems which they had endeavoured to analyze.

It is my opinion that The Department of Economics of the province of Ontario should be studying various problems with relation to the labour force. I think the matter of automation is not something that can be put aside or treated lightly.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer, in answering some of the questions of my hon. leader this afternoon, told us that studies were being made of this problem and that problem and some other problem. It is my understanding that this department grew out of a department which was obtaining statistical and research information.

I ask the hon. Minister this question, sir: What has this department been doing for the past 5 years? As far as I can see, they have neglected to bring in any concrete suggestions. If they have, they have advised the government only. Certainly since I became a member, the only information which has come to my desk has been this matter of the zone studies which have been made of the regional zones within Ontario.

I suggest that it is not a matter which could have been conducted with any creative imagination, but rather a matter of assimilating voluntary information which came into the department from the various municipalities.

I suggest that the department might consider this matter of unemployment. I am of the opinion, as a result of the many answers which were given by the hon. Ministers of the government, that those hon. Ministers are not treating the unemployment situation as a serious problem, but rather have given several innocuous answers as to what was really being done about it.

I suggest that this department should have some answers, and should be able to tell us something about the economic growth and labour projections in this province over the next 10 years. I suggest that they should be able to, in some reasonable manner, accurately forecast the probable industrial composition of, for instance, the 1975 labour force.

Surely if we are going to deal with these problems we should have some reasonable assumptions to work on.

Surely it should not be a case of hit and miss, and, when the problem is upon us, search, as a drowning man clinging to a straw, for piecemeal methods of correcting the situation. This is a thing that should have been forecast. It seems to me that this is the problem of the economists. This is what I think they should be doing in the province of Ontario.

We were talking about the matter of winter works. I think the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) mentioned some 13,000 people were now working in Ontario as a result of the winter works programme which has been sponsored by the government.

I suggest to the hon. Provincial Treasurer that possibly a policy of "buy Canadian" might have created, in one or two instances, more employment than did this whole winter works programme. And I suggest that if these economists were working on this situation, they might be able to advise this government of the implications which have arisen as a result of the failure on the part of the Hydro to "buy Canadian" which resulted, according to my information, in the steam plant in Windsor being serviced with English-made turbine generators, purchased out of the country; and which resulted in a loss of some two million man hours on this one particular purchase.

It seems to me that economists in the government should be in a position to advise the Legislature. I am not sure, when public funds are being expended, that some of these studies should not be made available to all hon. members of the Legislature so that we might have some idea just what is taking place in The Department of Economics.

It has been suggested that this is a research group. The hon. Prime Minister stated that, if all the things that had been asked for in the Opposition were done, the makeup of The Department of Economics might have to be increased; that they just could not do it. I suggest to the government that possibly they should be bringing in an estimate of some 10 times what they are bringing in this afternoon. It seems to me that it would be pretty cheap in the long run if, as a result of these studies, we were able to determine some manner in which we could cut the unemployment taking place in Ontario today.

I would very much like the hon. Minister to indicate to this House just what studies have been made by this department in the past 5 years. I think this is a very reasonable question, Mr. Chairman. Surely they must have conducted some studies in that period of time; with a budget of $500,000 a year, something of a concrete nature must have been done.

As far as I can see they have made a submission of some 15 pages. I think the hon. member for Windsor stated that figure to the group which was in Ottawa studying the automobile problem. But just what has this department done? From the answers which have been given this afternoon, it seems they are studying everything but really accomplishing nothing.

I think that, getting back to the unemployment situation, they might study the trends with respect to the unemployment of women; they might study the effect of technological advances on the labour force and make policy suggestions. I think they might study the problem of older people finding employment today; I think they might make suggestions—reasonable suggestions—with respect to portable pensions and the effect it would have on the overall employment of older persons in the province of Ontario.

I think that, today, we live in an age of specialization. I was interested to note the hon. Prime Minister's comment about his views on various problems—and I respect the hon. Prime Minister's opinion—but it seems to me that we should have more than an opinion; we should have some accurate information from people who have been studying this problem, which should be made available to all hon. members of the Legislature in order that their opinions in this House might be qualified opinions rather than "guesstimates."

It is very seldom I agree with the hon. leader of the CCF group, but he did make one suggestion last year in the House which I think had considerable merit—when he pointed out that it was very difficult for members in Opposition groups to come up with suggestions which might be constructive because of a lack of resources and funds to complete studies.

Some $500,000 is being spent by the government on economic studies, none of which is available to the Opposition; it seems to me that if this department is not going to make any studies which are useful, perhaps something might be done to follow up the suggestion of the hon. leader of the CCF; in which case, I am sure something more constructive would be forthcoming.

The hon. Prime Minister stated that these studies usually came when there were pressures, from other departments of government, for information which might be available from the department. I think this is reasonable, but it has often been said that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. I think that the cart is ahead of the horse and that some leadership and some creative thinking should come from The Department of Economics in the form of advice to the various departments of government.

Mr. Chairman, these comments have probably been a little bit piecemeal. Perhaps they have not been in the logical order in which I would like to have presented them.

The point that I wish to make is that I feel that this department should be coming forward with some type of policy. I believe that some information should be given to the Legislature, as a result of these studies for which public money has been extended, in order that hon. members on this side of the House might be in a better position to determine whether or not these expenditures are reasonable; whether or not we feel they should be increased or decreased; or just what stand should be taken.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said about this particular subject but I would like to bring it back properly to a means or an area where we can save a little money or get suggestions along those lines.

With the government departments such as The Department of Planning and Development or Commerce and Development as it is at the present time, and the hon. Provincial Treasurer, there are two related, or several related, areas of departments which are doing more or less the same thing. There is the trade and industry branch of The Department of Planning and Development; there is the research foundation, and then there is The Department of Economics—and all these things, I think, can be co-ordinated to a much greater degree, and put under one hon. Minister.

When the government's policies are set, as they should be, it is going to go in a certain direction. The cabinet sets that direction. But there are two hon. Ministers through which this direction could go. It should be through one—otherwise it is almost impossible to do it properly.

The Department of Economics is very closely related to the research foundation, to trade and commerce, to industry. Information we seek is all correlated, and I feel that this should be all put under one Minister, where the members of these other bodies could be interrelated to help each other.

I think many men in The Department of Economics could be of help to these other groups, and I think it is really a waste of money not to bring it to the point where we can have the cheapest or the best way of handling a department.

The hon. Minister of Commerce and Development had a conference, not too long ago, at which the head of the research foundation gave some very interesting information. He claims that he can help businesses—not businesses so much as industries or small manufacturing operations—by giving them his help with new products, including how to develop new products, how the plant might give a better operation and so on. And he was saying that it was almost impossible for him to get the co-operation of these small manufacturing plants. He has to go after them to try to force on them the things that will help them improve their operations.

I thought at that time how important it is that these manufacturers take advantage of this help, yet they do not. I think the real reason they do not take advantage of this help is because they are running so close to the line at the present time that they cannot afford to even take the time off to get help. Their present climate of operation, their taxes, everything they are faced with, is on a day-to-day basis. They are in the position that if they do not work and use every bit of effort they can in order to keep going, they are going to be out of business.

Now, the big thing we want at the present time is to give help. But it has to be on the basis where we can give real service, and this Department of Economics can give real service. It can do all these things that we need.

But, of course, the big problem is this. We spend all this money to get this information, we give this information where it does the most good and then we find, because of the climate of the province, that more industries are going out of the province than are actually coming in, in spite of all the hard work we are doing in this direction.

The only thing I can suggest is that the hon. Provincial Treasurer reconsider this and that every effort be made to bring this department together so that it is correlated to the point where the most economical operation will be effected.

On vote 401.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, it seems it has been generally agreed this afternoon that The Department of Economics is one of research and I feel it has been agreed that it will be one of research in many fields if this is the intent we put upon it.

My question concerns the department, and I ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer: Has there been any research done on the application of the economics to the extension of the hospital insurance plan into a complete medical plan?

Why I ask this is because certainly the government realizes that modifications or a modified plan of medical coverage is inevitable, and that complete plan of medical coverage is inevitable either on a provincial basis or a federal basis. We have had, in the past couple of years, bills presented to the House calling for an extension of the hospital insurance plan in one form, and we have had bills calling for an extension in other forms.

One bill calls for an extension into complete medical coverage based on being operated by free enterprise, the existing companies, and another bill calling for a government-operated plan.

I would think that the department should be looking very thoroughly into the economic aspects of a complete medical plan, and I wondered if the hon. Provincial Treasurer would comment as to whether there has been any look at what might be the implications of this kind of plan.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member's question, I may say that the matter he has referred to is being studied, and that there will be every opportunity for the greatest discussion by one of the committees of the House during the coming session.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Chairman, mention was made this afternoon, just in passing, about freight rates.

Now, I am quite concerned with this, and it affects not only the municipality from where I come but also the municipalities in southwestern Ontario and in the north. I do happen to know—having sat on an industrial promotion commission for 4 years—that down in our district we made quite an extensive study of this, and we were joined by quite a few municipalities to present a request to the hon. federal Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer).

I am wondering what this department is doing, or whether they have done anything, in regard to freight rates. I ask because, unless something is done to lower the freight rate in certain areas, the potential development of those areas is going to be killed. I do feel that this government should lend all the assistance possible to these municipalities when they are making their representations to the federal government for the lowering of the freight rates. I would like to know what this government has done in the past and what it intends to do.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member's question, I think he knows that a presentation was made to the Royal commission on transportation, that the area was considered, and that everything was done to place the problem of the hon. member's area before the commission.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to get into the substance of what we have been discussing this afternoon. The hon. member for Woodbine made the essential points that our group wants to make: That this research is needed; that there should be more of it, but that it should be part of a planning agency. In this way I think we would avoid the kind of confusion that is obviously evident in the approach at the present time.

The reason that I rise is this: The House was once again this afternoon given a perfect example of how the facts can be twisted and misrepresented by a Liberal spokesman. The hon. member for Bruce got up—

Mr. Whicher: Be careful now.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member had better be careful. Now we will get them straight. The hon. member for Bruce got up and said that the camp committee of the united auto workers at Port Elgin had refused to accept deliveries from this local dairy because they were being delivered in a Volkswagen, which was an imported car.

Now, I just checked with one member of that committee because I seriously doubted the validity of his contention, notwithstanding the certainty of the hon. member for Bruce. I discovered the facts are these: They did say they would not accept delivery, but it was because he was driving the car of a plant that had just smashed an effort to introduce a union here in Toronto.

An hon. member: What kind of car was that?

Mr. MacDonald: And furthermore I will say this to the hon. member for Bruce. The people like the hon. member for Woodbine and others who bought small cars like the Volkswagen 3 years ago will never buy Volkswagens again as long as they have union-smashing managements.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, that is not right. Many of us in the House, as you know, do make mistakes and I think there are many of us, including myself, who are quite willing to admit it if a mistake has been made. The thing that worries me is that the only hon. member who never makes one, and who will never back water a bit, is the hon. member for York South.

The issue is as follows: This happened 2 years ago, long before Volkswagen had to smash any strike—

An hon. member: Oh, no.

Mr. Whicher: It did, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bryden: When did it happen?

Mr. Whicher: When did it happen?

An hon. member: It was an organizational effort that was broken—

Another hon. member: It was the hon. member's dairy.

Mr. Whicher: It was not my dairy. This happened before the Volkswagen people were involved in any strike-breaking whatsoever. This dairyman was told to change his truck, because it was foreign made. Those are the facts.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, certainly there is one thing we have found out this afternoon in this discussion. We know now what the CCF stands for. I think it is "compact car federation."

Seriously, every time there is a meeting in northern Ontario of the northeastern development association, much of the discussion centres on freight rates. I know that an economic survey either is to be made or is being made. Is that survey being made by The Department of Economics or The Department of Planning and Development? Also, is The Department of Economics giving careful consideration to the possibilities of subsidies so that we can get the great expansion that the hon. Prime Minister of this province and other hon. members of his party speak of? We have an Ontario Northland Railway owned by the people, so will they seriously consider—if they have not already done so—the possibility of subsidies so that we can compete?

Vote 401 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report certain resolutions, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumes; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions, and asks leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee; Mr. W. E. Johnston in the chair.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, you might recognize that it is 6 o'clock. After we resume at 8 o'clock there are orders 4 to 16 that might be considered. Also we could give consideration to the 5 private bills. If we give Royal assent to them now it may be that, in view of having this session in the fall, there might be some amendments. It might be just as easy to give them Royal assent when the House reconvenes.

I do not think there is any reason why we could not put them through committee and perhaps hold them so that they could be referred back into committee if the necessity arose. After these are through we will turn to the Throne debate.

Mr. Chairman, I might suggest that tomorrow, I would like to deal with the estimates of The Department of Insurance first. Then we will continue with the Throne debate and on Thursday we are planning on having the estimates of The Department of Mines.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1960

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

THE ABSENTEES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 2, An Act to amend The Absentees Act.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Chairman, I move that Bill No. 2 be amended, and I would point out that the reason for this amendment, which I will be moving in relation to all these bills that are being passed through committee tonight, is in order to get them in a concise form for the statute when it does come out; and to avoid this problem that the consolidation of the statutes has created just at this particular time of the year.

I move that Bill No. 2 be amended:

- (1) by striking out part 1;
- (2) by striking out part 3, except the short title section;
- (3) by inserting a commencement section bringing the Act into force on January 1, 1961; and
- (4) by renumbering the sections and making such other editorial changes as are required to effect the purpose of the above.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, this procedure was devised to meet the unusual circumstance that this year they are revising the statutes, and the fact that we are having a session in the last portion of 1960. They have now devised another formula to avoid this.

Perhaps the hon. Attorney-General would give us the gist of these bills in each case; we can, then, adopt the formula which will revert us back to a normal bill effective January 1.

But what we would like to know is this: taking out all of these complications, what is the gist of this Absentees Act? If we get that, I think we can get it back on the track.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, I think I can do that quite simply with all of them, if the bills are in front of the hon. members. Under part 2, what is now No. 2 becomes No. 1; that is, in this particular case, lands in Ontario belonging to foreign absentees. I will read it:

Where a person who has had his usual place of residence or domicile out of Ontario, and who has an interest in land in Ontario, has been declared to be an absentee by a court of competent jurisdiction, the supreme court may, by order, upon being satisfied that the person has disappeared, that his whereabouts are unknown, and that there is no knowledge as to whether he is alive or dead, appoint a committee with such authority to manage, sell or otherwise deal with his interest in such land as, in the opinion of the court, is in his best interests and those of his family.

Then we strike out section 3 entirely of part 3; and what was section 4 now becomes 3; short title:

This Act may be cited as "The Absentees Amendment Act, 1960-1961."

Hon. Mr. Frost: Then the bill gets down to be a matter of just an ordinary bill, with one section, with the formal parts. I think the point we are concerned with is whether we are prepared to pass—actually, I suppose, it is contained in either section 1 or section 2—if we are prepared to pass that, then it becomes a normal bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill No. 2, as amended, reported.

THE CREDIT UNIONS ACT, 1953

House in committee on Bill No. 3, An Act to amend The Credit Unions Act, 1953.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I make the same motion in respect to Bill No. 3, and the effect of that is that all of part 1 is now ignored. We go over to part 2, which is struck out as part 2, and we begin then with section 11 as section 1, and section 12 becomes section 2, section 13 becomes section 3, and all references to the revised statutes of Ontario, 1960, are deleted.

Section 14 becomes 4, section 15 becomes 5, section 16 becomes 6, section 17 becomes 7, section 18 becomes 8, section 19 becomes 9, and section 20 becomes 10, and in all those cases the reference to the revised statutes of Ontario, 1960, is deleted.

Part 3 is eliminated except as to section 22 which now becomes section 11 and that is the short title. That becomes section 12. A new section, 11, commences. This Act comes into force on January 1, 1961.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, what is the meaning of this Act?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: We will go back to section 11, which defines an officer, and in section 2, which was section 12, which makes provision with respect to where capital is impaired. The effect of that is to preserve the position and to permit new capital to come in without having to answer for the debts that the old capital might be affected by. All of that, I think, was explained on second reading and in the committee on private bills.

Section 3, which was 13, has to do with the credit committee being set up to take the place of a supervisory committee, and to make clear that, when loans are being made to officers, they are independently reviewed and the officers themselves do not review them. Section 14 which now becomes section 4, again is just a change of name from registrar to supervisor.

Section 5 provides for the investments—allowing certain investments as already provided for in the Act under The Corporations Act—but makes it clear that these funds cannot be used for investments in mortgages except as security of mortgages to members of the union. I think that is the sum and substance of the bill.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General if the credit unions are aware of these changes.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: These amendments throughout have received the approval of the legislative committee of the Ontario credit union league.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Is this bill reprinted before it is given third reading?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Yes.

Bill No. 3, as amended, reported.

THE DEVOLUTION OF ESTATES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 4, An Act to amend The Devolution of Estates Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Again, Mr. Chairman, I make the same motion with respect to Bill No. 4, as I made with respect to the previous bills. The effect of this would be that in Bill No. 4, part I would be entirely deleted. Part II goes out and section 3 becomes section 1, deleting again reference to the revised statutes of Ontario, 1960. Section 4 becomes section 2, section 5 goes out, and a new section comes in as section 3.

This Act comes into force on January 1, 1961, and section 6, the short title, becomes section 4.

The gist of this bill is to make the first $20,000, in the event of an intestacy, go to the husband or wife of the deceased, instead of the previous $5,000 amount. That brings it in line with the recommendations of the uniformity commissioners for an Act of this sort throughout Canada, in all of the provinces of Canada—an Act which has been enacted in several of the provinces already, particularly in British Columbia.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Might I ask the hon. Attorney-General: why the $5,000 to $20,000? I understand he says it is to bring it in line with the uniform commission—the $5,000 to $20,000 would certainly be far more than the normal increase for inflation, in dollars. This is a substantial change in policy, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think that is so. The British Columbia Act has $20,000; the Alberta Act has the same; and a number of other provinces have adopted it as a result of the recommendations. We are really following in line with that general recommendation.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am very familiar with the history of this, for the reason that I, in Opposition, advocated it when Mr. Conant was the Attorney-General. Perhaps some of the hon. members opposite will recollect this.

At that time, The Devolution of Estates Act provided in the case of a wife, if there were children—if my recollection is correct—that she got a third and the children two-thirds. In the case of an intestacy, the wife got one-half and the other heirs got the other half.

Now, it seemed to be grossly unfair to the widow that she should be treated in that manner and, after a lot of deliberations—this would be at least 20 years ago—it was determined to give her the first $5,000. That is where that $5,000 came from.

I think, in those days, the legislators were pretty careful about the $5,000—it might well have been $10,000. Why should not the husband or wife receive better treatment—say, $5,000, plus a third or a half as the case may be?

If they fail to draw a will it would seem to me that this is reasonable.

In the case of a lot of the small estates of today, if the husband dies intestate leaving his wife, she gets the whole estate. As I say, they can alter that by drawing their own wills.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Mr. Chairman, does not the hon. Attorney-General think he is sacrificing too much for the sake of uniformity? What about this situation, if the $20,000 were made applicable:

Suppose you have a widow with some 3 or 4 children. She remarries and then passes away. By this proposed legislation the second husband would get all of the $20,000, and her children nothing. I would say that the greater number of estates are $20,000 or under. Is this not sacrificing too much protection for the sake of uniformity?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I think the hon. member raised that in the committee on legal bills, and I think he was a minority of one at that time when several of his confreres were present.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I agreed fully with the explanation of the hon. Prime Minister, when he made it. But this point that the hon. member has just made is a fascinating one. Certainly that would not be the intent the hon. Prime Minister had.

Hon. Mr. Frost: She can avoid this by drawing up a will. As a matter of fact, she may have been married to the second husband for 30 or 40 years. You cannot determine everything. It is only a basis for what is a reasonable rule for the majority.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It seems to me that if the husband had some question about the second marriage of his wife and wanted to protect the children, he would probably do it.

Bill No. 4, as amended, reported.

THE FIRE MARSHALS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 5, An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, here again I would make the same motion as in the previous bills that have been referred to.

In this case the effect would be that part 1 again would be deleted, part 2, as such, would be deleted and section 2 would now become section 1 with the deletion of any reference to the revised statutes of 1960. Section 3, part 3 would be deleted, section 3 would be deleted, with a new section 2.

Commencement: this Act comes into force on January 1, 1961, and section 4 becomes section 3, that is, the short title.

This is really a very routine Act. It merely makes provision for an appeal to the fire marshal from a routine order of any of his officers with the reason for the decision to be given in writing where required in the event of an appeal.

Bill No. 5, as amended, reported.

THE HOTEL FIRE SAFETY ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 6, An Act to amend The Hotel Fire Safety Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, the same motion as in the previous case would be made. The effect would be to delete part 1, and the heading of part 2. Section 2 would become part 1 with deletion of the reference to the revised statutes of Ontario, 1960. Part 3 would be deleted except—that is, section 3 would be deleted of part 3; part 3 itself deleted and a new section formed.

Commencement: section 2. This Act comes into force on January 1, 1961, and section 4 becomes section 3, the short title.

The substance of this Act is again that the right of appeal to the fire marshal is provided for from routine orders from subordinate officers with reasons in writing as in the previous case.

Bill No. 6, as amended, reported.

THE LIGHTNING RODS ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 7, An Act to amend The Lightning Rods Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, I again make the same motion as in the previous cases. The effect here would be: Part 1 would be deleted, section 2, part 2 is deleted, section 2 becomes section 1 with the deletion of any reference to the revised statutes of Ontario, 1960. Part 3 is deleted, particularly section 3 of it; and a new section formed: Commencement: section 2. This Act comes into force on January 1, 1961. Section 4 becomes section 3, the short title.

Here the effect in this Act is that an appeal may be made to the fire marshal from non-compliance, suspension and so forth, with the written reasons to be provided in the case of an appeal.

Bill No. 7, as amended, reported.

THE LAW SOCIETY ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 8, An Act to amend The Law Society Act.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I make the same motion as in the previous cases, and the effect here would be:

Part 1 would be deleted; part 2 deleted and section 2 becomes section 1 with the deletion of the reference to the revised statutes of Ontario, 1960. Part 3 is deleted, particularly section 3 of it. Commencement: section 2. This Act comes into force on January 1, 1961, and section 4 becomes section 3; short title.

Here we have, under what was section 2 of part 2, and now becomes section 1, the pith and substance of the Act which is provision to stop orders on a member's bank accounts if the treasurer, secretary or deputy secretary of the law society, or chairman or vice-chairman of the discipline committee has reasonable cause to believe that a member of the society has been or may be guilty of misconduct in connection with any property in his possession or under his control.

This means that an application may be made, by any one of those persons, to a judge of the supreme court who may make an ex parte order freezing, or a stop order on, the use of the withdrawals or disposition of the property with the further provision that on further application the judge may make such order as he sees fit with respect to release of any part of the property.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): I wonder if the hon. Attorney-General would say anything about the possibility of having lawyers bonded in the province of Ontario in connection with this bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, of course, that is really extraneous to this matter.

Mr. Whicher: I agree with that, but—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: At the time the legal bills committee met, I did ask if there was any comment at that time. The hon. member was not present—nobody raised the question at that time.

Mr. Whicher: There are lawyers on it. That is the reason it was not brought up. I am not a member of the committee and I am not a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The hon. member could have had some of his confreres in the legal profession bring the matter up. But I do not think at this point I want to get into a discussion or debate on the subject, as it is one that could form the subject of a debate at some time. But this is the only particular bill in front of the House and these sections at the present time.

Mr. Whicher: I know that these bills are in many instances not too interesting but, as I understand it now, the lawyers in the province of Ontario are one of the few bodies of people who handle the public's money and who are not bonded.

When this bill came up in its first reading, I mentioned it and it was suggested I go to the legal bills committee—and of course I am not a member of that. I believe all the hon. members of the legal bills committee are lawyers, or practically all.

An hon. member: All the hon. members?

Mr. Whicher: Practically all, I said. Perhaps the hon. members have not familiarized themselves with this subject. We realize that, for example, real estate agents who handle sums of money—the public's money—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to my hon. friend raising this point in some proper form, or in the Throne speech debate or something of that sort, but I am not prepared at the present time, on this type of procedure, to get into a debate on the merits of it. I might agree with him if he could make out a case, but certainly at this point we are not going to—

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is just a matter of debate, but perhaps there could be a little statement on the subject.

I think the problem is one that has been given the very greatest consideration by the law society. At the present time the law society is making a pretty substantial charge on each practising lawyer. I still pay my dues although I have not practiced for a long time.

I think the problem in bonding is that there are certain limits beyond which it is not possible to go without being completely exorbitant. Does the hon. member see what I mean? You might place a bond of, say, $200,000, or something of the sort, on every lawyer—it is a very difficult thing to assess what that bond ought to be.

In the meantime, the law society has itself set up this protective fund. I think for a number of years there have been no losses, as I understand it, until some bright lawyer, or otherwise, went into the second mortgage business and lost a lot of money. That is a very expensive matter for the legal profession.

I think the purpose of this Act is to attach funds to prevent them being used in any other way than for the proper creditors.
